WAR ON FRATS.

National Interest In Question.

Antipathy to Greek Letter Societies in High Schools Grows.

Professors Declare They Cultivate Un-American Spirit in Boys.

In Minneapolis, the Fight Has Been Carried Into the Courts.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Efforts to introduce secret societies into the high schools of the country are being combatted on every hand by the school authorities. Charges are made that the "Greek letter" organizations generate a caste spirit that is undemocratic and un-American, destroying that sense of equality of man that is taught in the Constitution.

In some schools the societies are absolutely forbidden; in others, penalties for membership are provided, members of objectionable associations being debarred from participation in athletic games and other pleasurable features of school life. In other schools the societies are quietly tolerated, but openly discouraged.

The students, however, are not submitting tamely. They are fighting hard, and in one case—that in Minneapolis—the matter has been carried into the courts to enjoin the school authorities from interference with their [illegible]

Parents [illegible] of the secret [illegible] en up the battle [illegible] and will try to make the school officials change their views.

MINNEAPOLIS SUIT.

The suit in Minneapolis is the result of the announcement by the school authorities that hereafter no high-school student would be permitted to belong to any fraternity. The Board of Education is simply complying with the State law, passed at the last session of the Legislature. This was held by many of the boys and their parents to be unjust. They felt that the statute was not retroactive and had no bearing on societies or their membership which existed prior to its passage.

The dispute was brought to a crisis when J. N. Greer, principal of the Central High School, notified the members of fraternities in that school to go home or give up membership in the societies. By an agreement they were allowed to remain in school until the legal status of the matter had been officially determined through the application for an injunction.

BAN IN KANSAS CITY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

KANSAS CITY (Mo.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Board of Education of Kansas City has placed the ban upon all Greek letter fraternities. The action was taken last spring after the principal of Central High School had asked the board to allow him permission to expel from school all pupils who were members of fraternities.

FRATS FIGHT BACK.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DES MOINES (Iowa) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Superintendent W. O. Riddell of the Des Moines public schools has fought fraternities and societies for three successive years, and has been met at every turn by the most stubborn type of opposition. He has merely been successful in forcing the obstinate "frats" to seek the cover of secrecy, under which they are working like bees in a hive.

OPPOSITION IN INDIANA.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

INDIANAPOLIS (Ind.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The attitude of the Indiana State Board of Education towards high school fraternities is one of pronounced opposition and through its advice and promised coöperation, many of the fraternities have been forced to surrender their organization. The subject has been agitated in a number of larger cities, and in some cases superintendents and principals of schools have gone so far as to refuse diplomas to students who have adhered to their fraternities after positive orders that such meetings should be discontinued.

SITUATION IN OMAHA.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

OMAHA (Neb.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The school authorities of Omaha are absolutely opposed to fraternities in the high school.

ACCUSED OF DRUNKENNESS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DETROIT (Mich.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The fraternities in the high schools in this city have not yet come under the ban of the Board of Education. It is quite likely, though, that some action will be taken soon. It has been reported to the school instructors that boys of 15, members of fraternities, attend banquets in saloons and become so intoxicated that their "brothers" carry them home.

NOT TO BE TOLERATED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BALTIMORE (Md.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Dr. Henry S. West, assistant superintendent of education, says Greek letter societies are not to be tolerated here. He says that in his opinion fraternities "create and encourage, more or less, class or social distinctions, and for this reason are contrary to the democratic spirit of the free school system."

AROUSED BY HAZING.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DUBUQUE (Iowa) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Dubuque School Board has taken cognizance of the operations of fraternities and has instructed City Superintendent Oldt to investigate the matter and report at the next board meeting. This recent activity was brought about by the publication of a story regarding hazing operations in which Clifford Dennis, a high-school lad, and whose initiation was in progress, was placed in a coffin and compelled to lie therein, the lad being securely screwed down for ten hours.

BARRED IN BOSTON.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON (Mass.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] This city is free from the troubles which have arisen of late by reason of the existence of secret societies in the high schools in many places. Such a thing as a fraternity in the high schools here is practically unknown. The principals of the schools are opposed to these societies and the moment there is any effort to form one prompt measures are taken to suppress it. But the suburbs of Boston are afflicted with these societies and some of them have brought unenviable notoriety upon the schools.

NONE IN ATLANTA.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ATLANTA (Ga.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The fraternity question causes no trouble in the high schools of Atlanta, for the reason that there are no fraternities. The school authorities, it is understood, would promptly suppress any attempt to introduce fraternities into the high schools of the city. They do not believe that secret fraternities, with their rivalries and the caste ideas which they inculcate, would be a benefit to the students. They believe that the literary societies answer every useful purpose.

ABOLISHED IN ST. PAUL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. PAUL (Minn.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Fraternities in the high schools of St. Paul were abolished in the fall of 1905 by action of the Board of Education.

LEAD TO IMMORALITY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CLEVELAND (O.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Fraternities are absolutely barred from the high schools of Cleveland on the ground that they create class distinctions and ideas of caste in the different grades of pupils, take their minds from their studies and tend to immorality. The fraternities were abolished several years ago by the superintendent under threats of expulsions.

CHURCH OF ROME.

VATICAN CAUSES STIR IN RELIGIOUS ORDERS.

Pope Demands Full Details of Business of Numerous Congregations Which Manufacture and Sell Liquors, Beer and Confectionery.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A general order has been sent out by the Vatican authorities to all heads of the religious orders throughout the world, prescribing that a report be sent to the Congregation of Bishops and Regulars, detailing the locality and names of the houses which deal in alimentary products, such as liquors, beer and confectionery.

The new move of the Vatican authorities has caused great surprise here, because for the past fifty years prominent religious orders, like the Carthusians, the Benedictines, the Franciscans and numerous religious congregations have acquired the means of their existence from just the trade about which the Pope now desires full details.

It is asserted here that Pius X intends to suppress all commercial undertakings among the religious orders and congregations, and that he has already appointed a commission of cardinals belonging to the Congregation of Bishops and Regulars to study the matter.

For over a hundred years the Carthusian monks of the Abbey of Grenoble, in France, have dealt with the commercial world with their famous Chartreuse, and they have had the implicit approbation of the Holy See, because under a former Pope the order agreed to supply over a million dollars a year of their profits for the support of ecclesiastical institutions in this city. Such is the case, also, with the Benedictine order, which has been making a specialty of a liquor which is famed all over the world.

TO LAND OF SUNSHINE.

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] For twenty years Rev. Thomas F. M. Galligan labored in season and out as pastor of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church. For twenty years he stood at his post, refusing to be relieved for even the shortest rest. His parishioners have tried time and again to induce him to accept a purse from them and take a vacation. He would not do it. Last summer his health broke down. His parishioners decided to save him from himself. Today he was presented with a purse of $5385 and sent to Southern California to spend the winter and regain his health.

IN MEMORIAM.

WILL DEDICATE SHAFT MONDAY.

M'KINLEY MEMORIAL MONUMENT EXERCISES.

President Roosevelt and Many of Nation's Most Distinguished Men to Participate in Services—History of Marble Designs Which Honors Memory of Martyr.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CANTON (O.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In the presence of several hundred of the most distinguished men of the nation, in many walks of life, and of a number of members of the diplomatic corps at Washington, President Roosevelt will, Monday, deliver the dedicatory address at the McKinley National Memorial monument, in the vault of which rest the bodies of the martyred President and his wife.

The monument was conceived and materialized by the late Senator Marcus A. Hanna, Gov. Myron T. Herrick, George Bruce Cortelyou, Cornelius N. Bliss, Henry Payne Whitney, and other close friends of the great Ohioan, who selected the site and took charge of the voluntary subscriptions which poured in from every part of the country.

President Wheeler of the University of California supplied the words which are engraven as an epitaph upon the monument, when, in conferring upon President McKinley in 1901 the degree of LL.D., he said:

"By authority vested in me by the regents of the University of California, I confer the degree of Doctor of Laws upon William McKinley, President of the United States, a statesman singularly gifted to unite the discordant forces of the government and mold the diverse purposes of men toward progressive and salutary action; a magistrate whose poise of judgment has been tested and vindicated in a succession of national emergencies; a good citizen, brave soldier, wise executive, helper and leader of men, exemplar to his people of the virtues that build and conserve the state, the society and the home."

The then Secretary of State was so impressed with the vigor and adaptability of these words that he suggested at that time that they might well serve as President McKinley's epitaph. The Monument Committee agreed with him, and they are engraven on the marble which marks the last resting place of the great statesman.

The body of the late President was taken on September 19 last from the vault in Weston Cemetery, Canton, where it had reposed for six years, and reinterred beneath the memorial monument wherein the body of his wife had been a few days before laid to rest. A detail of United States soldiers has guarded the sarcophagus on Monument Hill since that date.

PRAISES PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—The Bishop of London was the center of interest at today's session of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. A great crowd cheered him upon his arrival. Addressing the convention, the bishop said:

"To have a good influence over people you must be absolutely straight, and right here let me say that seems to be the leading characteristic of your splendid President."

The delegates later were received by President Roosevelt.

DECIDE ON BOAT TYPE.

Seven Submarine Vessels of "Octopus" Design to Be Constructed.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Seven submarine boats of the Octopus type will be ordered by the United States government, according to a decision announced today by Secretary Metcalf.

Secretary Metcalf said that it has been decided to award a contract for four boats of the Octopus type, and three additional submarine boats of the same type, though of greater displacement, to the Electric Boat Company, under certain conditions as to a reduced price and guarantees for superior speed, recommended by the board of construction.

Is Invited to Speak at Southern Indiana Conference and Declines Very Briefly—Many New York Clergymen Pleased at Vice-President's Defeat.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

COLUMBUS (Ind.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Vice-President Fairbanks has not taken gracefully his defeat as a candidate for the lay delegateship of the Methodist Episcopal church to the quadrennial conference at Baltimore next year.

It was because of the charge that he permitted cocktails to be served at a dinner given in honor of President Roosevelt that Fairbanks was defeated and it was evident today he felt the sting of the defeat.

His reply to the invitation [illegible] day was as follows:

"I will not come."

Many of the clergymen here expressed satisfaction that Fairbanks declined to speak, as they regarded his invitation to do so a mistake.

CLERGYMEN PLEASED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Many clergymen in New York were asked today how they regarded Vice-President Fairbanks's defeat and expressed approval of the action of the Indiana conference.

The Rev. Richard Hartley said: "The Methodist delegates showed the proper spirit in refusing to bend before a political colossus who violated one of the principles of the church.

"No one agency hinders the vote of the church so much as drink, and every time the church finds an opportunity to express its disapproval of the liquor traffic it ought to do so most emphatically."

FATAL BLUNDER.

EIGHT KILLED IN COLLISION.

B. AND O. PASSENGER CRASHES INTO FREIGHT ON SIDING.

Operator Neglects to Throw Switch at Bellaire, O., and Limited Runs Onto Siding Where Another Train Is Slowly Running—Investigation Under Way.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WHEELING (W. Va.) Sept. 28.—Eight men were killed and a score injured at Bellaire, O., this afternoon, when the Chicago and Wheeling Express on the Baltimore and Ohio crashed into a freight train, which was moving on a siding.

The wreck was due to the failure of an operator to throw a switch. The west-bound freight had received orders to meet the passenger at the limits of the Bellaire yard, and was moving slowly along the siding.

Where the wreck occurred there is a sharp curve, which prevents the engineers of east-bound trains from seeing more than a few feet ahead. The passenger train swung around the curve rapidly, and should have gone on safely to the main line. But the switch to the siding had not been turned, and the train crashed into the freight. The worst damage was done to the smoker, which was telescoped by the baggage car.

Every occupant of the smoker was injured or killed. The passengers in the day coach and the two Pullmans were tumbled from their seats, but not seriously hurt.

Engineer Galbraith was burned to a crisp by escaping steam. General Manager Fitzgerald, who was in the neighborhood on an inspection tour, and General Superintendent W. C. Loree of Wheeling, superintended the rescue work.

At the office of Superintendent Loree tonight it was said that they were not yet certain who was to blame for the accident, but a thorough investigation is under way.

GRAFT.

RUEF IS SWEATED.

Fallen Boss Before Grand Jury.

Undergoes Searching Examination Lasting an Hour and a Half.

He Is Believed to Be Holding Back Some Valuable Testimony.

His Entire Staff, Including the Office Boy, Are Also Questioned.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] That the graft prosecutors have not yet succeeded in making Abraham Ruef tell all he knows of municipal corruption, and that they are still seeking additional evidence of bribery against officials of the United Railroads, is manifest by the grand-jury proceedings today.

The inquisitorial body convened in special session, and subpoenaes for Ruef and the entire office staff formerly in his employ, as well as for F. C. Broekman, Ruef's brother-in-law; A. F. St. Sure, an Oakland attorney associated with him; Charles P. Gale and George Willcut of the United Railroads.

ACCOMPANIED BY GUARDS.

The inquiry was directed to securing additional evidence against Ford and to ascertain whether there was any attempt at bribery, made when the petition for a trolley franchise on Sutter street was made by the United Railroads, some time previous to the fire.

The first witness called was Ruef, who went to the grand-jury rooms accompanied by his guards. He remained on the stand for an hour and a half, undergoing a searching examination [illegible] district attorney's office it is [illegible] has concealed much valuable testimony in the United Railroads cases, hoping that by yielding up this evidence at the last moment he might obtain additional clemency.

MUST APPEAR AGAIN.

He was closely questioned as to his dealings with Ford at the time the United Railroads presented its petition for a trolley franchise on Sutter street. That the testimony he gave was far from satisfactory is apparent from the fact that he has been subpoenaed again for Monday afternoon.

Col. J. J. West, an assistant in Ruef's law office, was examined about the trolley franchise. Charles Heggerty, Ruef's office boy, who followed West, told of carrying messages between Ruef and Tirey Ford on various occasions. The United Railroads officials, Charles P. Gale, and George Willcut, were in the garnd-jury rooms only for a few minutes. They refused to say whether they had declined to answer any questions put by the special prosecutor.

Another subpoena was issued for the sister of Abraham Ruef, and she will be an important witness at Monday's session.

YE OLDEN TIME.

BISHOP BRINGS RARE OLD PAPER.

INTERESTING RELIC FOR PEOPLE OF UNITED STATES.

Dr. Ingram Is Said to Have in His Possession Original Charter of Rhode Island, Which He Will Present to Americans Through President Roosevelt.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROCHESTER (N. Y.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Post Express says:

"The Post Express is permitted to make the announcement that Dr. Ingram, the Lord Bishop of London, who is now in this country, is not only the bearer of a Bible from King Edward, but brings on his own account, and that of his historic diocese, the original charter of the Colony of Rhode Island, which he intended to present to the people of the United States through President Roosevelt. He found this precious document hidden in the library of his episcopal palace of Fulham, in London. No doubt he will have an interesting story to tell. The charter is in excellent preservation, with the seals intact and the signatures of the King and privy councilors perfectly legible. It seems probable, however, that the bishop's document is the charter granted to Rhode Island providence plantations by Charles II of England, in 1663.

"This instrument was liberal, providing that no person should be 'in any wise molested, punished, disquieted or called in question for any difference of opinion that do not actually disturb the civil peace,' and is understood to have used almost the exact words of Charles's famous declaration from Breda that did so much to secure him the throne of England.

"This charter served as a constitution for 180 years, till 1845. During the war waged on charters by James II this instrument was abrogated by Sir Edmund Andros, but on his deposition the old government was quietly renewed under it, though property qualification for suffrage was added in 1724."

TIMBER FRAUDS.

LUMBER KING'S NAME SPOKEN.

Mentioned for First Time in Trial of Borah.

Man Who Did Work for Weyerhauser Testifies.

Steunenberg's Position Shown by More Letters.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BOISE (Idaho) Sept. 28.—Mention of the Weyerhausers, the owners of the vast timber land tracts in the Northwest, was made today for the first time, in the trial of United States Senator Borah.

This was when George S. Long of Tacoma, Wash., took the stand and stated that in response to a request from James T. Barber of Eau Claire, Wis., he had allowed his name to be used as a "dummy" trustee in the acquisition of Idaho timber lands. He produced a letter from Mr. Barber making the proposition as follows:

"Exigencies have arisen which make it desirable to pass the title to certain lands in Idaho through some party entirely removed from association with the Barber Lumber Company, these circumstances being similar to those which made it desirable to use my name in connection with some of the Weyerhauser timber companies property. I have therefore taken the responsibility of directing the placing of title to certain lands in you."

AS TO "EXIGENCIES."

Long said he had been a close friend of Barber for seventeen years. He received no compensation as trustee, oversaw none of the deeds, did not employ Senator Borah as counsel, and, in fact, never met the Senator until this year. The attorneys for the defense asked Long what the "exigencies" referred to by Barber meant.

"I supposed," replied the witness, "they were the same as arose in Washington when I was purchasing property for the Weyerhausers, and when I used Mr. Barber's name. If we used the Weyerhauser name in any locality it always sent the securities up and brought competition."

Frederick Weyerhauser is known as the lumber king of America, and by some his wealth is estimated to be even greater than that of John D. Rockefeller.

More letters tending to show former Gov. Steunenberg's interest in timber land in speculation were introduced and read to the jury.

TALKED WITH STEUNENBERG.

A. B. Campbell of Spokane, a wealthy mine owner who formerly resided in the Couer d'Alene district of Idaho, was recalled to the stand to tell further of conversations he had with Albert E. Hilmar, one of the alleged "dummy" trustees in the handling of timber land claims. Mr. Campbell, when approached by former Gov. Steunenberg with a proposition to go into the timber land business, turned the matter over to Palmer, who said he had wealthy friends in Wisconsin already interested in the lumber trade.

These men were James T. Barber and Sumner G. Moon of Eau Claire, Wis., officers of the Barber Lumber Company, which operates here and jointly indicted with Senator Borah, Steunenberg and the others.

GETTING CASE AGAINST WALSH.

FEDERAL GRAND JURY WORKS ON BANK FAILURE.

Certain Directors of Wrecked Financial Institution in Chicago Will Be Asked to Give Some Information Concerning Acts of Concern's President.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Federal grand jury investigation of the troubles of the Chicago National Bank, of which John R. Walsh was president, have not ended.

It was asserted today by a government official connected with the Walsh investigation that certain directors of the bank probably will be summoned to appear before the regular grand jury which will convene Tuesday.

The inquiry will have as its chief object the bringing out of certain facts desired for use in the trial of John R. Walsh, but which facts Asst. Dist.-Attys. Fletcher, Dobyns and Robert W. Childs and Federal Bank Examiner Moxey have been unable to obtain to their satisfaction, was the report, and it was admitted in government circles to be true.

"There may not be any indictments," said one official who has been in close touch with the case of John R. Walsh, "and there probably will not be. That is not the object of the inquiry. It is quite likely that certain of the directors of the bank will be asked to give information before the grand jury. It is information that is desired by the government previous to the trial in order to add to the perfection of the prosecution's case."

Inquiries were made to ascertain if possible additional indictments were being considered by the government against the former president of the Chicago National Bank, but this was denied along with denials that anybody but John R. Walsh himself would be prosecuted as a result of the bank's failure. Efforts to ascertain from the government officials what directors might be summoned before the grand jury were unsuccessful.

The trial of Walsh, who is charged with misapplying funds of the bank and making false entries in his reports to the Comptroller of the Currency, will be started before Judge A. B. Anderson of Indianapolis at Chicago October 15.

CAPITALIST'S SON ELOPES.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Members of St. Louis' most prominent families figured in an elopement that became known today when A. B. Hart, a capitalist, received a message from his 30-year-old son, William Hart, saying: "We are married now." The girl Hart married was Miss Susan Adams, daughter of the late Dr. Wellington Adams and granddaughter of Col. Alonzo W. Slayback, who was slain in the office of a local paper about a quarter of a century ago by Editor Cockrell. The bridegroom is a brother of Dr. Oliver Hart, who was defendant in a child wife case in Chicago a few years ago. The couple eloped to St. Charles, Mo., in an auto.

Father of Steel Magnate's Wife Declares She Is Willing to Meet Him Secretly, but Says He Now Demands a Signed Epistle so He Can Lift His Head.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Mabelle Gilman Corey, wife of the president of the United States Steel Trust, according to her father, Charles Henry Gilman of San Francisco, is willing to meet him secretly and has made overtures to that end since his attempt Friday night to see the former comic opera queen in her Fifth-avenue home.

"I sent back word by the party that brought the message," said Gilman today, at the Astor House, "that if Mabelle wanted to acknowledge her male parent now, she would have to come out in the open."

"What would you consider a suitable acknowledgment?" was asked.

"All my girl has to do is to sit down at her mahogany desk in her boudoir and write me a letter saying she is sorry for the unnatural way she has acted to me, and then sign her name to the letter. I want it in black and white so I can hold up my head."

SNEEZERS IN SESSION.

National Fraternity of Hay Fever Sufferers Hold Annual Convention.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Ancient Order of Ach-Choo held its annual convention in the office of Stephen V. Voris at Jamaica, L. I., this afternoon.

You may think the ancient order is a Chinese tong, but it is not. It's a proper name, as accepted, is the national fraternity of hay fever sufferers. Today's meeting was a wonderful success, judging from the enthusiasm of members in relating personal experiences. All votes were viva voce, which means sneezes.

The meeting was opened with the testimonial of Miss Gertrude Patton,. a neophyte in the art of sneezing. She spoke hopefully. She said: "Why dode you dry the rebedy thad gured be " she asked, and the convention burst into mirth.

President Voris reported that about every patent medicine man extant seemed anxious to come to the rescue with carload lots of his remedy. The convention voted to tabulate the remedies offered, and will call for volunteers to serve as a poison squad. There is great rivalry for membership on this poison squad.

Fined Two Dollars for Each Year of Cruelty.

Frail Woman Tells How Big Man Abused Her.

Weird Forms of Punishment Break Her Down.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Henry Payne, a big, powerful man, who lives in a good house at Newark avenue and Chestnut street, Jersey City, has been fined $10 in the Second Criminal Court, a total of $2 for each of the five years of mistreatment which his frail little wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Payne, claims to have undergone at his hands.

The ill-treatment, she said, began almost from the day of her marriage. She accused her husband of tickling the soles of her feet until her nerves were strained to the snapping point.

She said he forced liquor down her throat and charged him with weird cruelties that caused her anguish in mind and body.

Mrs. Payne declared that her husband's favorite form of cruelty was to drag her from bed, bind her wrists and take her feet under one arm. Holding her in this position, she says, he would tickle her feet with a fork until she nearly lost her reason.

SPEAKS HIGHLY OF COMBINES.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER THINKS TRUSTS ARE ALL RIGHT.

Standard Oil Magnate Declares Corporations Are Here to Stay, and He Announces That He Has Lost None of His Faith in His Own Pet Octopus.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CLEVELAND (O.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] From the idyllic retirement of Forest Hill John D. Rockefeller on Thursday issued this message on the economic future of the United States.

"My faith in the future is boundless. We are but in the infancy of our economic development, which must proceed as it has during the past forty years, along the line of consolidation and cooperation. You ask me particularly what I think of the future of business corporations, or trusts, so called. I say that my faith in the Standard Oil Company, for instance, was never greater than it is at the present hour. It has a future that will far transcend its achievements of the past. So with all the great industrial corporations.

"Our economic security and progress rest upon the basis of combination. It seems to me that the time is coming—is here in fact—when the problems which confront us will be discussed with fairness and intelligence, and settled, not on the basis of a temporary agitation, but in the spirit and manner of fair-minded Americans, without rancor or bias.

"To the working man I would say that his best interests lie in accepting the conditions which have come about through a natural process of economic evolution. Really, he will come to learn in time that the bulwark of his prosperity is the wisely and honestly administered corporation, which is here to stay.

"So firmly am I convinced of this that I look to see the day when the workingmen generally, as Standard Oil employés have done and grown rich thereby, will invest their savings in the securities of the industrial combinations as they now deposit them in the saving banks."

SHRINERS DINE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Festivities held this afternoon at the banquet hall of the Auditorium Annex marked the close of the Mystic Shriners' initiatory ceremonies, at which 100 candidates were put through their weird tasks last night. The banquet included the most notable Shriners in North America. Many were past potentates, and all are members of the Imperial Council. Besides Imperial Potentate Roundy, the following Shriners spoke: Pet Clayton of St. Joseph, Mo., last year's Imperial Potentate; John W. Boyle, Los Angeles; Harris W. Huehl, Chicago; Lou P. Winsor, Grand Rapids; L. G. Hoffman, St. Paul; Will H. Beck, Sioux City, Iowa, just elected Potentate of the Baby Temple, and William Brown of Pittsburgh.

REDEEMED TO HISTORY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Illinois and the republic of France joined hands today to do honor to Pere Marquette and Louis Joliet, the two men, whose heroic lives resulted in the founding of the city of Chicago. In the dreary rain of a chill autumn day a simple mahogany cross was unveiled on the spot where, 236 years previously, the faithful priest and intrepid explorer camped. The spot which was redeemed to history today stands at the foot of Robey street, on the banks of the Chicago River. Directly opposite it opens the drainage canal, the first step toward the completion of that great waterway, which was prophesied over two centuries before by Joliet.

ELEVATOR BOY IS HERO.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BURLINGTON (Iowa) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Showered with presents and overwhelmed with thanks, Freddie Williams, elevator boy of the Tama building, was the hero today of the fire which destroyed that structure. When the flames were discovered they had made great headway and it seemed impossible that a score of women on the upper floor could be saved. Young Williams, however, made five trips up the blazing smoke-filled elevator shaft and brought the women to the street in safety. He ran his car without a hitch, but at the end of the last trip he was so choked with the smoke that he fell insensible.

NIGHTMARE PROVES SERIOUS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WARSAW (Ind.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] After dreaming that he was crying for help and was unable to utter a sound, John Martin, a Milford barber, arose from his bed the following morning to find that he was only able to whisper. During the day, instead of becoming stronger, his voice gradually failed. He then consulted a Fort Wayne specialist, but was given no encouragement. The case is puzzling prominent medical men. They say Martin lost his voice through fright.

Crusade Is Begun Against Automobile Omnibuses in French Capital.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "The United States, during the whole war with Spain, lost fewer men than are killed yearly in Paris by automobile omnibuses," declares the Matin this morning, in a fierce attack on this innovation in the city's traction organization.

Giving statistics in support of its statements, the paper also proves that the heavy, roaring vehicles are hurting property along their routes, where many tenants are moving out, in spite of reduction in rents, because their business is half ruined. Watch and clock shops, for instance, cannot exist on the route, which is five miles long.

In a petition to the Municipal Council to abolish the automobile lines, it is asserted by the signers that they cannot carry on trade on account of the shaking of the earth and the trembling of the edifices they occupy.

Well-Known Young Man in Jail at Colorado Springs Declares He Was Sweetheart of Illinois Banker's Wife and Has Proof That She and Her Husband Poisoned First Wife.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

COLORADO SPRINGS (Colo.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Dean Silverhorn, a well-known young man of Colorado Springs, now in jail, charged with grand larceny, declares he has a number of original letters, which will lead to the conviction of Frederick H. Magill of Clinton, Ill., and his bride, Fay Graham Magill, who are charged at that place with the murder by poison of Magill's first wife.

Silverhorn declares Fay Graham Magill was his sweetheart before she married Magill, and that the marriage was not one of love. Silverhorn makes many grave charges of conspiracy, which had for their object the "shakedown" of Magill for a big sum of money. He also states that he and Miss Graham expected to marry and leave the United States forever.

Silverhorn declares he had hidden the letters in a suit case in a cave a few miles from Colorado Springs, and that he can get possession of them at any time. He explained that he secreted them to prevent an attempt to steal them. He insists that detectives employed by the Magills have been shadowing him for a long time in the hope of getting the letters in their hands. Silverhorn declares the letters will lay bare the plot to murder the first Mrs. Magill.

PRESSMEN VOTE ON AGREEMENT

Question of Strike to Be Settled by Referendum Ballot on Compromise of Demands.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—The question of a strike of printing pressmen and press feeders in the cities of the United States, where demands of the union for an eight-hour day and nine hours' pay has not yet been granted, is now being devided by a referendum vote of the International Printing Pressmen's Assistants' Union.

The vote was ordered by President George L. Berry of Cincinnati, following the completion of an agreement entered into between the New York locals and the New York Printers' League, comprising about eighty firms of employing printers, which becomes operative on November 11, and will last until January 1, 1909.

By the terms of this agreement, the employés will work eight hours a day and the pressmen will receive an increase in their wages of $1 a week, making their wages $23.

The feeders signed a scale of $16 per week last March, and will not be affected financially.

Prison Physician Says Mrs. Chadwick Is Liable to Succumb at Any Time from Weak Heart.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

COLUMBUS (O.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Cassie Chadwick, who is serving a term in the penitentiary here, is weak today, according to the official statement of the physician in charge of her case at the prison hospital. Dr. Helmick issued the following:

"I examined Mrs. Chadwick this morning and found her heart very irregular and weak, while her circulation is bad. Although her condition is not dangerous, it is such that it is not improbable that she may drop off at any minute. Although I do not expect anything of the kind, and people have been known to live for years with just such trouble, she might succumb at any time, especially because of her weak heart. Her condition this morning is slightly better than last night."

Corner-stone of South Pasadena Library Building Laid Under Masonic Auspices.

SOUTH PASADENA, Sept. 28.—This afternoon the corner-stone of the South Pasadena Public Library was laid, the ceremonies being conducted under the auspices of the Grand Lodge of Masons of California, Grand Master Oscar Lawler presiding. Dr. John Woodbridge, president of the board of library trustees, made an address, in which he gave a short history of the library.

Deposited in the corner-stone were a catalogue of the library, with historical sketch; copy of the South Pasadenan, the local newspaper; copy of South Pasadena Directory, copy of last annual report of library, business cards of architect and contractor of building, copy of programme and Masonic directory of Los Angeles county.

The officers of the library are: Trustees, Dr. John Woodbridge, Dr. Charles Walker, M. E. Keith, G. W. Lawyer and Miss Jennie Collier; librarian, Mrs. Nellie E. Keith.

The total cost of the building and grounds is about $15,000, of which Andrew Carnegie donated $10,000. The balance was provided by the city. The library is among the oldest in the county. It was established about eighteen years ago.

AUTOCRAT IS OUT OF POWER.

Powerful Traffic Dictatorship Is Ended.

Stubbs Loses Control of Freight Situation.

Eastern Roads Now Have Voice in All Rates.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] With the advent of eastern railroads into the transcontinental freight bureau, there disappears from the railway field one of the most powerful dictatorships in railway history. With eastern roads enjoying an equal voice in the making of transcontinental freight rates, J. C. Stubbs is no longer the autocrat of the traffic world.

Until the recent admission of eastern roads, the Harriman lines dictated what all transcontinental rates should be. The entry of eastern roads into the reckoning is the result of a new law which makes them responsible for all rates in which they concur.

The dictatorship of the transcontinental freight rates was held by the Harriman roads by reason of the ownership of the Morgan lines of steamships plying between New York and the Atlantic Coast and Gulf ports, where they connect with the Harrimah lines. By means of these steamers the Harriman people were enabled to make through rates and thereby control the situation absolutely.

In all of the vast tonnage which passed between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, the Harriman lines were sole arbiters if they chose to exercise the power. It came about, therefore, that Harriman's $50,000 traffic director was looked upon with awe.

NAVAL LOBBY STIRS 'EM UP.

PAY INSPECTOR BLAMES ADMIRAL GOODRICH.

Secretary Metcalf Will Investigate Political Promotion of Salary-Increase Bill—Brownson Is Questioned, but Denies Knowledge of Orders Issued to "Pull" for It.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The publication of the operations of the lobby of naval officers back of the movement to get a bill for better pay through Congress created a big stir in Washington.

Secretary Metcalf, who appears never to have heard of the carefully-drafted bill, or of the efforts of its friends to create sentiment favorable to it, says that as soon as Secretary Newbery returned to the department he will take the matter up with him.

Admiral Brownson was questioned by Metcalf as to whether any formal orders had been issued directing Pay Inspector Cowie to conduct a campaign in behalf of the increased pay bill.

Admiral Brownson replied that so far as he knew no such orders had been issued.

Brownson is chief clerk of the Bureau of Navigation, which issues all orders regulating the duties of officers.

Pay Inspector Cowie admitted that he sent out the circular letter which bears his name, and in which officers of the service are warned not to criticise the bill or to expres individual views and preferences concerning it, either in conversation or otherwise.

Pay Inspector Cowie also admitted that he had had some personal correspondence with Admiral Goodrich about the bill, but declared he did not ask the administration to prepare and issue a circular to naval officers to appeal to their Senators and Congressmen in behalf of the bill.

According to Cowie, responsibility for the issuance of the letter signed by Lieut. J. G. Church, rests on Admiral Goodrich.

FEDERAL GRAND JURY AFTER GREEK PADRONES.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] With more than twenty cases against Greeks, who are charged with violations of the immigration laws, ready for presentation to the Federal grand jury next week, Assistant Attorney Shirer and Immigration Inspector Seraphic will endeavor, through the agency of a grand jury inquiry, to bring to a climax their fight against the padrone system in Chicago, which has been for several months the subject of their investigation.

It is expected that the Greek investigation will take up three days next week, and indictments are expected in all cases.

All prosecutions will be based on evidence showing that the men to be prosecuted brought children to the United States from Greece, under false representations, making false affidavits that imported aliens were sons or daughters, when they were not of kin. The most flagrant cases have been those of the proprietors of bootblack stands.

NEED STEAM?

Get It From Selected Food.

It is good to know the kind of food those with weak stomachs and hearts can get along with for when a man or woman is a little below par, an easily digested food is the thing that goes right to the spot.

A man in Kirksville, Mo., tells how he got out of trouble by using Grape-Nuts food. He says: "My trouble was intense suffering in the stomach. It was called gastralgia, but no medicine gave any permanent relief.

"In June of last year I began to grow much worse in every respect. I was terribly constipated and the stomach pains were severe. I ran down until I weighed only 120 pounds. I had to give up my business for my nerves were completely unstrung and I could not sleep more than two or three hours during the night, and that only by snatches during a lull in the pain.

"I tried almost every kind of food, but finally was put on Grape-Nuts and in a little while it began to make its worth known. I began to sleep better nights, my strength gradually came back, and I gained in weight rapidly until a little while ago I weighed 165 pounds and have been a well man for months with never a touch of the old trouble.

"My bowels are perfect, the nervous trouble has gone. You can realize I appreciate the value of Grape-Uuts food."

This is another evidence of the practical worth of Grape-Nuts food in cases of weak stomach and bad digestion. It is the most scientifically made food in existence and contains absolutely nothing but selected parts of the field grains, so cooked and prepared as to admit of almost immediate digestion and assimilation, carrying with it the elements furnished by Mother Nature for rebuilding the nervous system, the gray matter of the brain and the solar plexus.

When one gets from food what the body needs, it is easy to get well and keep well. "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pckgs.

MILITARY AFFAIRS.

CRITICISM OF THE U. S. ARMY.

America's System Declared to Be Obsolete.

Unfavorably Compared With Foreign Fighters.

Retired National Guardsman Becomes Caustic.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Our army in America is nothing but a fake," said Gen. McCoskey Butt of New York, today.

Since he retired from the National Guard, in which he commanded the First Brigade of his State's citizen soldiers, Gen. Butt has made a hobby of studying the development of military affairs in Europe, especially in France and Germany, with a view of qualifying as an expert in advising his home government on reforms in the American army system and methods.

He has just returned to Paris after observing the French army maneuvers. Prior to that he saw the German maneuvers at Metz. His conclusion is that until the United States army is trained in such details as are useful in actual war, it is worse than useless. He said this in interviews in New York, after previous visits to Europe. He is now starting homeward, sailing on the St. Louis.

SLIM PARADES SEEN.

"The sham which pretends that the United States army is efficient," said Gen. Butt today, "is kept up by the higher officers, who would be loath to face a scientific inquiry into their qualifications which would endanger their own pay and perquisites. No intelligent captain or lieutenant can be found in our army to defend the existing systems.

"Why, I have sometimes seen a parade where only three regular soldiers to a company were present. A drill, for that matter, is absolutely valueless in the training of soldiers for war. All the nonsense goes by the board when men are out on a real campaign.

"Riding, shooting, marching, are the main things which ought to be taught and taught thoroughly. Shooting at a target, too, is useless. The French and German armies are beginning to recognize these points. It is not true patriotism to hide the fact that our army is in a state of inefficiency. It is rather the duty of a patriot to count out the shams in our service, especially since foreign critics are already aware of them.

FAVORS AUTOMOBILES.

"What is wanted is an appropriation of $128,000,000 to establish a strong, permanent army, well trained, according to the most modern methods shown to military science and with officers schooled as highly as any nation's are. The American army is far behind the armies of the continent in such matters as the utilization of automobiles for commissariat purposes.

"President Roosevelt, I think, is in accord with my views. I believe he desires to do for the army what he did for the navy when he was assistant secretary, and what he has since done as President.

"The French soldiers are the best marchers of all the continental troops. I saw 60,000 men cover fifty-four kilometres—thirty-three miles—in one day, and only twenty men fell out. Their footgear is the best for service—a most important point. The French have also the best artillery. In cavalry they are about equal to Germany.

"On the whole, while I should say that a given thousand French soldiers could beat a thousand Germans, I am not so sure that 1000 Frenchmen would beat 1000 Germans. Germany has brought all its machinery of war up to the highest state of perfection."

MIKADO'S GUEST.

TAFT ARRIVES IN YOKOHAMA.

JAPANESE EXTEND WARM WELCOME TO SECRETARY.

Enters Past Signal Stations Without Being Sighted—Goes With Ambassador and Staff to Tokio—Will Participate in no Functions Until Monday.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

YOKOHAMA, Sept. 28.—Secretary Taft arrived here early this morning on board the steamer Minnesota from Seattle, September 13, passing all the signal stations without being sighted.

The various Reception Committees and the members of the American Embassy, who had come in from Tokio to welcome Taft, were aroused by runners. The town was soon enlivened, and the bay was crowded with launches displaying American flags and other colors.

Secretary and Mrs. Taft and Thomas J. O'Brien, the new American Ambassador to Japan, and Mrs. O'Brien, who are early risers, met the visitors from the shore in the main saloon of the Minnesota at 7:30 o'clock a.m. while the United States cruiser Chattanooga, anchored in the bay, saluted Secretary Taft's flag as Secretary of War, which was hoisted at the fore.

After a brief consultation with the Reception Committees and others, Taft accepted the entire programme for his entertainment, but declined to participate in any function today or Sunday. On Monday the Secretary will be received in audience by the Japanese Emperor, which function will be followed by luncheon at the palace.

Count Hayashi, the Foreign Minister, will give a dinner in Secretary Taft's honor Monday evening, and on Tuesday the Secretary will be entertained at luncheon by the Minister of War, Lieut.-Gen. Terauchi Masaki, which will be followed by a reception of the American residents of Yokohama on Wednesday.

While in Tokio, Wednesday, Taft will also take luncheon with the American Chargé de Affairs, Percival Dodge.

The Minnesota had a rough but not unpleasant voyage across the Pacific.

During his stay here, Taft will make his headquarters at the Grand Hotel. The Secretary, on landing here, was greeted on every side by the Japanese, with whom he is exceedingly popular.

Ambassador O'Brien and Peter Augustus Ja, First Secretary of the American embassy at Tokio, and the staff of the embassy, left Yokohama for Tokio at 11 o'clock.

SWEDISH PRINCE AND HIS BEAUTIFUL FIANCEE.

PRINCESS MARIA PAVLOVNA
PRINCE WILLIAM OF SWEDEN

A Royal Betrothal.

The good wishes of many thousands of Americans go out to Prince William of Sweden on the occasion of his coming marriage to Princess Maria Pavlovna of Russia, because, during his stay in this country recently, the Prince endeared himself to those who met or came into contact with him by the true simplicity of his manner and by his frank, straightforward but dignified bearing. His bride-to-be is the daughter of the Grand Duke Paul, uncle of the Czar. Her mother was Princess Alexandra of Greece, the first wife of the Grand Duke. She is only 17 and is reckoned a beauty.

TAKING NOTICE.

EUROPE WATCHES AMERICAN MOVES.

STRONGLY IMPRESSED BY ACTIVITY OF POLITICIANS.

President Roosevelt's Tour of Western States, Secretary Root's Trip to Mexico and Secretary Taft's Journey Around the World Are Discussed Across Atlantic.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] American polity comes in for general discussion in many European quarters this week, on the strength of President Roosevelt's approaching tour of some of the western States, Secretary Root's trip to Mexico and Secretary Taft's journey around the world. Europe is impressed by the activity of American politicians.

Writers on economics discuss President Roosevelt's attitude toward the trusts and "bad corporations," but as a rule they do not condemn his public utterances as calculated to disturb the confidence of European investors in American securities. A German writer says:

"Time will show that the charge of political campaigning made against Mr. Roosevelt for his efforts to compel the trusts to obey the law, is groundless. The overwhelming majority of thoughtful Americans believe that he is on the right course, and do not believe that his remedy is worse than the disease."

His forthcoming speech at Canton, however, is awaited with lively curiosity in the London, Berlin and Paris stock markets.

In the suggestion that Mr. Taft's visit to St. Petersburg may lead to a Russo-American convention, all the chancellories take keen interest. The possibility that he will be Mr. Roosevelt's successor in the White House gives added importance to his movements, but it is the bearing of a possible agreement between Washington and St. Petersburg upon the future relations of Japan and the United States that dwarfs all other features of the Taft pilgrimage. The notion that Japan and the United States will fight within ten years is one that will not down in Europe.

FLOODS.

MANY HOUSES UNDER WATER.

HERAULT VALLEY, FRANCE, NOW A VAST LAKE.

Rivers in Rhone, Gard and Vaer Overflow Banks and Cause Great Damage and Distress — People Forced to Tops of Buildings—Row-Boats Rescue Sufferers.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, Sept. 28.—Although the flood situation in the south of France was a little better today, reports from the departments of the Rhone, Gard and Vaer say that rivers everywhere have been overflowing their banks, causing much damage and distress among the people, many of whom have sought refuge in the upper parts of their houses and have been without food for days.

The authorities are hurrying rations and supplies to the flood sufferers.

A correspondent of the Temps telegraphs that the country in the vicinity of the Herault River is completely submerged. Only here and there are little islands and tops of house visible, and upon this vast lake rowboats are engaged in the ceaseless work of rescue. The grape harvest in the lowlands is a total loss.

The church of Benamargosa at Madrid, which was undermined by the flood, fell last night. There was no loss of life.

At Malaga many dead bodies have been washed down the river and out to sea. The weather in the south of Spain is clearing.

NEW SINGERS FOR CLUB.

Parisian Automobile Institution Employs Cafe and Opera Vocalists Instead of Gypsies.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Automobile Club of Paris, one of the livest institutions in the gay city, has started a new idea.

The music of the gypsy bands, which used to delight the ears of the members, has been superseded by vocalists from the café Chantantes, and even from the Opera Comique. The effect on digestion is said to be excellent.

PRINCESS STUDIES SWEDISH.

Two Wedding Ceremonies Will Be Performed, One in Petersburg, the Other in Stockholm.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Prince William's future bride, the Princes Pavlovna, is now studying the Swedish language and history under a Swedish teacher. The wedding ceremonies will first take place in St. Petersburg, and then in Stockholm.

The Grand Duke Dimitri will represent the Russian government at the Stockholm ceremonies.

SCANDINAVIANS WARNED.

Told to Beware of Agents Enlisting Workers for Farmers in United States.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Foreign Minister Raben Levetzau, in an interview, warns the people against agents from the south and southeast of the United States now traveling in Denmark, enlisting workers for American farmers.

The Minister says that climate in the southeast is dangerous to Scandinavians, native competition is strong, the work is too hard, and that the contracts are misleading, as well as void under the new immigration law of the United States.

VOTE ON COALING QUESTION.

Peace Conference Committee Unanimous for Use of Neutral Ports in Time of Warfare.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

THE HAGUE, Sept. 28.—The committee of the peace conference, which has been discussing the propositions regarding the treatment of the building of warships in neutral waters, today voted unanimously in favor of warships being allowed to take on board sufficient coal in neutral ports to enable them to reach the nearest belligerent port.

The committee was unable to agree on the period which belligerent warships should be allowed to remain in neutral ports.

PLANS FOR WAR MONEY.

New Bill Drafted in Germany Will Increase Currency If Passed by Reichstag.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In pursuance of the effort to solve the problem of financial readiness for war, a number of important measures are under consideration by military officials.

Among these projects, according to reports, is a bill now ready for introduction in the Reichstag, the adoption of which would involve a considerable increase in the silver coinage of the empire.

According to the belief of the projectors of this measure, who say that it has received favorable consideration from high authorities, the bill will be presented formally to the Bundesrath and made public soon after October 1.

SWISS WANT "IN" ON IT.

Exporters Demand Same Tariff Terms as Were Given to the Germans.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERNE (Switzerland) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Swiss exporters to America, disturbed by the fact that the tariff agreement of America and Germany is not applied to Switzerland, have succeeded in inducing the government to take up the matter with Washington.

Should the authorities there refuse to grant the Swiss exporters the same terms as those granted to the Germans, the Swiss government will retaliate by annulling the present agreement by which American goods are admitted to Switzerland at minimum tariff rates.

In that event, the Americans will be forced to pay in some instances 50 per cent. more than now on vegetables, oils, canned meats and wool. America sells Switzerland $13,000,000 worth of merchandise annually.

MISSED HER CALLING.

HEART TURNS TO THE CHURCH.

Former St. Louis Girl Talks of Her Husbands

Will Come to America to Attend Wedding.

Thinks French Marriage Plan Best of All.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "I have missed my life's vocation. I should have been a nun, for all my hopes, desires and interests are centered in the church," said Countess Spottswood-Mackin today, somewhat sadly.

Your correspondent interviewed the Countess in her beautiful house on the Rue Auguste Vacqueri. Converted to Roman Catholicism and ennobled by the late Pope Leo XIII, the Countess says she finds Parisian life less agreeable since church and state have been separated. She is only passing through Paris from Rome, and will sail in a fortnight to attend her niece's wedding in America, then return to Rome.

The Countess very recently rejected an offer of marriage from a distinguished French statesman, a member of the Chamber of Deputies.

"I have twice sacrificed myself," said the Countess, today. "First, when as a girl, I made a marriage of convenience to gain a position in the world; second, when I broke my engagement to marry Gen. Spirodovitch, whom I loved greatly. But I could not sacrifice my principle that in marriage a wife should maintain her independence, especially as to her own property. However, I do not even regret losing Spirodovitch, for I love him no more."

Then the American Countess, who was born the lovely Sallie Britton of St. Louis, added that she should have wedded herself to the church. Apropos of her niece's approaching wedding, Countess Spottswood-Mackin discussed marriages in France and America, saying:

"I think the French marriage arranged between the parents, but with the final consent of the direct parties, conduces more to happiness because everything is understood beforehand. The American idea of throwing a young woman and man in each other's society often results in a happy marriage, but as often, it seems to me, in a mere flirtation, which, after lasting a long time, does not end in marriage."

ERRATIC.

LORD ROSEBERY KEEPS MOVING.

FORMER BRITISH PREMIER IS ECCENTRIC.

He Flits from Point to Point and Continually Misstates His Destination—One Theory Is That He Is Attempting to Overcome Persistent Insomnia.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Lord Rosebery's eccentricities are daily growing more marked, and his friends all tell remarkable stories of his recent inexplicable conduct. He has a penchant for flitting from point to point, misstating his destination.

The other day he was spied among the audience at the Pan-Celtic Congress in Edinburgh, and the delegates at once called for him to address them, but instead of responding Rosebery grabbed his hat and umbrella and scrambled out of the room in undignified haste. Two eminent Celtic scholars pursued him into the street, but they were unable to persuade him to return. They went back to the meeting, crestfallen, explaining that all they could get out of the former Premier was a declaration that he had a pressing engagement.

Lord Rosebery's constant and erratic dodging about from point to point, without apparent reason, is attracting widespread attention. He is constantly on the go. He seems to vibrate between Menmore, his mansion in Bucks; Dalmeny, his place near Edinburgh, and his racing lodge at Epsom. Again he is off on the train to Naples, where he has a villa at Posilipo. Frequently Lord Rosebery announces that he is off from Dalmeny, and the next heard from him he is in Naples.

The only sure thing about the former Premier is that he is likely to be found anywhere except at his announced destination.

The elaborate game of mystification appears to have no point, and seems to be played for its own sake. It has become a joke among his intimates, and his friends lay wagers as to the place he will be reported from next.

Lord Rosebery rarely stays longer than two days in one place. It has been suggested that he moves about to overcome the persistent insomnia from which he is known to suffer, but this explanation does not explain, because Lord Rosebery's flittings necessitate long and tiresome railroad journeys, wholly incompatible with rest or sleep.

Others explain his lordship's erratic journeyings as simply expressions of intense nervousness, and regard them as a sort of safety valve, an outlet to the man's extraordinary nervous activity.

FRENCH FARMERS WISE.

On Account of Flies, Charge for Grazing Short-tailed Only One-half of That for Long-tailed.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DIEPPE (France) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] An American automobilist, traveling in this region, was surprised to read a sign in a field. "Grass. Short-tailed horses half a franc a day. Long-tailed horses one franc a day."

Thinking he had discovered a French Mark Twain, he discounted, and inquired, but he found he was face to face with a perfectly serious proposition. The sturdy farmer explained to him in the best Norman French that during the best of summer, the flies annoyed the horses so much that the short-tailed animals are kept busy brushing them off with mouth, as well as with tail, consequently they can only eat half as much as the long-tailed ones.

The Norman farmers know this so well that the regular tariff of half price has become established for the short-tailed horses.

CUBAN OUTLAWS.

GUARDS PURSUE BANDIT BAND.

SHOOTING RESULTS, AND LATTER ARE DISPERSED.

Government Does Not Believe Appearance of Desperadoes in Santiago Province Was Part of Conspirators' Plan, but Their Capture Is Much Desired.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

HAVANA, Sept. 28.—A band of fourteen bandits attracted the attention of the authorities of Santiago Province recently, and today a detachment of Rural Guards was sent to apprehend them.

Shots were exchanged and the bandits were dispersed. The government does not believe that the appearance of the bandits in Santiago Province was part of the movement planned by the conspirators recently arrested here. They are believed to be outlaws representing several foreign nations who have been employed in the Santiago mines.

Capt. Dougherty, supervisor of the guards at Santiago de Cuba, has left that city for the scene of the disturbance, with an additional detachment of Rural guards, and it is believed that the bandits will be captured within a few hours.

Reports received from all other sections of the island say that quiet prevails.

Throughout the night the Cabinet ministers and the court officials and chaplains had waited in an apartment adjoining the death chamber for the end to come.

At the Grand Duke's bedside when he expired, were the Grand Duchess, Princess Louise of Prussia, the hereditary Grand Duke Frederick of Baden, Prince of Baden, brother of the Grand Duke, the Crown Princess of Sweden and others.

"WHAT WITCH!"

A Husband's Question.

When a man, from drinking coffee, gets to such a condition that he cannot eat breakfast without throwing it up, it seems time to quit, but there are thousands of people who do not understand that when an article of food or drink produces such conditions as these, it should be absolutely left off.

A little woman out in Mont. writes that she and her husband knew enough to quit coffee when it had rapped them hard. She says: "My husband was so badly affected that he ate no breakfast for three or four years. He would often try to drink a few sips of coffee and invariably threw it up.

When Postum Food Coffee was brought to my attention I tried it without having any faith in it, but when I found what a delicious beverage it was when prepared according to directions, and from trying it on myself found there were no bad effects, I induced husband to take a cup without telling him what it was. He objected at first, saying that he would be sure to throw it up, but when I insisted upon his trying it, it agreed with him.

"Morning after morning I gave him Postum without telling him that it was any different from ordinary coffee. His stomach quickly recovered and he began to eat breakfast. He asked me one morning as he called for a second cup 'what witch' had taught me 'to make such delicious coffee,' and where I 'found some that would agree with him?' Then I told him for the first time that he had not been drinking coffee but Postum, which had so strengthened his stomach that he could now eat as much breakfast as any one.

"My two sisters were badly troubled with stomach disorder but after leaving off coffee and taking Postum they both recovered their appetites and took on considerable flesh. I wish everyone could be induced to use the health-giving, aromatic Postum." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in packages

"I think the whole nation should know of your Peruna. I Peruna too highly."

Mouth breathing is a very common habit, especially among growing children. Boys are even more liable to it than girls.

It is a very pernicious habit, and is generally forced on the child by a catarrhal condition of the posterior nares, causing enlarged tonsils. The child soon experiences difficulty in breathing through the nose, and gradually forms a habit of breathing through the mouth.

Mouth breathing does harm in a good many ways.

First, the non-use of the nose for breathing purposes soon causes a shrunken condition of the nostril.

The turbinated bones become deformed.

The sense of smell is destroyed.

Speech is affected, and the victim is constantly annoyed by an increasingly bad breath.

Inhaling the air directly into the lungs through the mouth more or less affects the lungs and bronchial tubes.

Air drawn through the nose is warmed, the dust is strained out, and an element of moisture is added, thus protecting the lungs. But in mouth-breathing the cold, dry, dust-laden air is drawn directly into the lungs, which is sure to do damage sooner or later.

Thus it is that catarrh and nose sets up numer culties, which always barrassing and sometimes ing.

Warning of Plot to Rescue Constantine Causes Court to Take Quick Action in Case.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It was learned this afternoon that Frank J. Constantine, slayer of Mrs. Louisa B. Gentry, who was taken to Joliet today, was hurried there following the receipt of an annonpmous letter by Sheriff Strassheim, which contained a warning that a plot was on foot to free Constantine.

The letter was shown by Sheriff Strassheim to Judge Kavanagh in the morning, and after a conference with Assistant State's Attorneys Holt and Day, Judge Kavanagh hastened the hearing of the motion for a new trial for the convicted murderer.

Although Robert Cantwell, his attorney, was out of the city, Judge Kavanagh compelled Attorney McCauley, who appeared for Constantine, to argue the motion for a new trial himself, and after it was refused, he immediately passed sentence.

This afternoon Constantine was taken to Joliet under a strong guard.

Passenger Who Attempts to Escape Meets Instant Death and Three Others Are Injured Through Alleged Carelessness of Motorman on Euclid Avenue Line.

One man was killed and three were severely injured by the overturning of a Los Angeles Railway car just before midnight last night, at Fourth street and Euclid avenue. The identity of the dead man was partially established as Charles Koch, address unknown. He was about 60 years old. The injured include William Conkhite, passenger; Frank Meany, motorman, and M. A. Clark, conductor.

The car was No. 253 of the Euclid-avenue (Boyle Heights) line. It is said to have been running at full speed when it approached the sharp curve at the corner. When it struck the curve, it suddenly capsized, and the motorman and conductor were caught in the wreckage.

The man who was killed attempted to save himself when he discovered that a capsizal was imminent. He leaped from the car, but was caught under the heavy body when it went over, and his life was crushed out. Papers found on his person indicate that he was Charles Koch, but his address was not to be had.

According to Conkhite, who was sitting near Motorman Meany, the car was running at a high rate of speed when he noticed that it was approaching the stopping point at Euclid avenue and Fourth street. The motorman apparently was unaware of his whereabouts. Conkhite gave a shout when he saw the curve just ahead, and leaped from the car.

Conductor Clark was standing at the rear of the car, making out his report. He says that the first thing he knew all was darkness and there was a crashing of glass and breaking wood. He was knocked unconscious. When he regained his senses, he found himself within the car and buried beneath a mass of débris. He was released with the motorman's assistance.

CAMPAIGN'S STRENUOUS CLOSE.

Disincorporationists and "Antis" at Ocean Park Leaving no Stones Unturned.

OCEAN PARK, Sept. 28.—This has been a strenuous day for the leaders of both sides of the disincorporation fight. Automobiles have been pressed into service and heart-to-heart talks have been frequent. Politics is about the only thing discussed on the streets today, and tomorrow, notwithstanding the fact that it is Sunday, promises to be an even more active day for the workers.

The Trustees and some of the city employés and officials are leading the "anti" movement and the disincorporationists are led by the Chamber of Commerce, the Mechanics' and Laborers' Association, the Abbot Kinney Company, and a number of the leading citizens, who urge disincorporation on the ground that desired improvements will not be made while the present Trustees are in office. The sewer trouble is also laid at the door of the present board.

Both sides are equally confident of victory at the polls on Monday. One over a two-thirds vote is necessary to carry disincorporation. There are 409 voters on the register, but the most conservative estimate puts the total vote at 350. Of this number over 200 have signed the petition for disincorporation.

Both sides are holding mass meetings tonight, the "antis" on Ocean Front in front of the Decatur, and the disincorporationists at the Venice Auditorium. Both have a band of music and the disincorporationists gave a grand pyrotechnic display on the breakwater, before the meeting.

A RESCUE!

OLDER OUT OF TOILS OF LAW.

"Saved" from "Kidnapers" He Journeys Home.

Blood-Curdling Tale in Santa Barbara Court.

San Francisco Editor Feared for His Very Life.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA BARBARA, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A horde of deputy sheriffs, policemen, lawyers and civilians swooped down upon Coast line train No. 18 on the Southern Pacific Railroad as it halted at this station at 8:20 this morning and "rescued" Fremont Older, managing editor of the San Francisco Bulletin, who was kidnaped last night, after his arrest on a charge of libel, from the minions of the law. The "rescue" was conducted in an opera-buffet manner, policemen, sheriffs and civilians boarding the train and threatening to destroy it.

After a two hours' hearing on habeas corpus proceedings, reviewing the facts of the rearrest, Older at noon today was admitted to $3000 bail, which was given by H. P. Lincoln, cashier of the First National Bank, and Paul Fox of Santa Maria.

The order of arrest will be returned to Justice J. W. Summerfield in Los Angeles, who issued it, together with the bail bond and a date, probably some time next week, will be set for hearing. Older, meantime, will return to San Francisco.

The ground on which the original warrant for the arrest of Older was based was a story printed in the Bulletin on Wednesday connecting the name of Luther G. Brown, an attorney of Los Angeles, who is interested in the defense of Tirey L. Ford in San Francisco, with a silly story of an attempted kidnaping of Supervisor Lonergan, whose testimony was given the following day. Brown was accused of riding round the city in an automobile with another man and two women and of other acts which he regarded as offensive.

Brown brought suit for libel through his brother, Eddy L. Brown, in Los Angeles. He did this, he explains, because his home is in the southland city; and that he desired vindication in the courts there. The warrant was given to Constable B. Cohn of Los Angeles who, with Deputy Constable F. G. Cochran, went to San Francisco, arriving there Friday.

OLDER'S THRILLING STORY.

Following is Older's thrilling narrative of his capture and abduction:

"I was in the offices of Heney & Cobb, No. 109 Franklin street, last evening, when, shortly after 5 o'clock, the telephone rang and I was summoned to it. The man at the other end said he was 'Mr. Stapleton,' and that he wanted to see me personally at the Savoy Hotel on important business. He wouldn't discuss it over the 'phone. I turned to Cobb and said: 'I think this is a trap,' and he returned, 'Undoubtedly.' But I went just the same, telling Cobb that if I didn't return immediately he might know I was trapped. I walked toward the Savoy and when I got to the corner of Franklin and Geary streets, an automobile dashed past and began to circle. It contained Luther Brown, Mr. Ashe and Mrs. Brown. Another auto dashed up to the curb beside me and a man whom I now know as Constable Cohn jumped out and told me I was under arrest. I asked to be allowed to see my counsel, which was refused. Then I demanded that I be taken into court to give bail, which also was refused.

"They jammed me into the auto, which, led by the one Brown and Luther were driving, we started away at a terrific pace. A man, not an officer, who was with the arresting party, ran his hand over my back to see if I had a gun. I hadn't. He pushed me into the auto. When he seated himself beside me I felt that he had something in his pocket that felt like a revolver, and the muzzle of it was pressed against my side. After a few moments I asked where they were taking me. They said, to Justice Cooke's court. I saw they were not going in that direction, and later they told me I was being taken to the justice's home. This, as the suburbs flitted by, was plain deception, and I demanded that I be let out. I made such a move, although the car was going thirty miles an hour, and the man at my side said: 'You sit still, or—' and I felt that thing jab me in the ribs again. I verily believe that if I had attempted to get out that fellow would have plugged me.

"AFRAID TO CRY OUT."

"We traveled twenty-eight miles to Redwood City, where, while waiting for the train, the motor was in the dark, and my guard stood beside me with that thing pressing my side. I didn't dare cry out. When the train came, I was hustled on board and taken into the smoking compartment of the drawing-room car. There I told Brown, wro, with Ashe, accompanied the officers, that they were doing their case of the grafters tremendous harm; that all San Francisco was by that time up in arms and searching for me. For I'm the boy, I said, that started this whole graft investigation. It was I who brought Heney down to San Francisco to look into the gang, and the Bulletin has been following up the prosecution of the grafters ever since.

"Why they should want to get me I don't know—I'm not to be a witness for the State. Of course, Mr. Spreckels is my friend, and that may have something to do with it.

"On the train Constable Cohn was most kind. He said he'd take any message I cared to send, and at San José I sent him out to telephone to Spreckels about my capture. I wrote the message and he sent it over the wire. Spreckels got busy, and—and—well, here I am."

Mr. Older was a most surprised man when taken from the train. Awaiting its coming were Under Sheriff Smith and a large force of deputies; Chief of Police James Ross and the whole police force; Lawyers Richards and Carrier, who were, early this morning, retained by Rudolph Spreckels by telephone, and who got the machinery of the Superior Court in motion at that unearthly hour, and newspaper men. About half the town was on the spot to see the kidnapers foiled.

But the axes of the officers were unsullied, and their guns undrawn. Surrounding the car with a force of men, the Under Sheriff entered the car, followed by officers representing both the county and city, and made a thorough search of the interior. They finally entered a smoking apartment, in which were seated four men. One was tall, dressed in a light suit, and he was slightly bald. He admitted that he was Older, and a rotund individual owned up to the title of Constable Cohn.

CONSTABLE ARRESTED.

Whereupon the Under Sheriff served his order of rearrest upon the constable and his prisoner. Cohn glanced through the document.

"Well," said he, quietly, "our tickets read through to Los Angeles, but I guess we'll get off here, all right." And they did, escorted by the Santa Barbara officers, and followed by half the population of the city. Into an auto they piled, and were whirled away.

Mr. Older was taken into the Sheriff's office. There he lolled in contentment, smoking and chatting with his guards. "In the hands of two counties," he mused; "was ever man so honored?" It was here that he told the story of his kidnaping, and after it was over the guards were glanced over critically by the crowd, when some one facetiously asked if some one wouldn't "pdease make a noise like a kidnaper."

The whole party looked weary, but Lawyer Ashe, with a smile that wouldn't come off, remarked that their prisoner had been very docile. They had had a peach of a time on the train, he said.

COURT RULING.

At 10 o'clock the entire party trooped into the Superior Court, where Justice Crow took the bench. City Attorney Henley C. Booth appeared for the Brown interests, while Mr. Richards conducted the defense. Mr. Older told his story substantially as above related, and explained to the court that he feared to be taken to Los Angeles in custody of the Brown coterie.

Mr. Booth contended that the prisoner, having been arrested in San Francisco on a warrant issued in Los Angeles, should have had himself admitted to bail in the former county if he desired to stay there, and that the only other bailable territory was Los Angeles county, under Section 822 of the Penal Code. But the court quoted Section 1491, which covers kidnaping cases, and his decision was based on the provisions of that section.

In the end, the prisoner was declared to be in the custody of the Sheriff of Santa Barbara county, and bail was fixed and provided. Mr. Older, before the latter detail was reached, went to dinner between Deputy Sheriffs representing both counties.

After spending the day in this city, getting some sleep, Older departed at 7:30 this evening for San Francisco.

CALHOUN EXPLAINS OLDER'S ARREST.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 28.—Patrick Calhoun said tonight that the alleged attempt to kidnap Fremont Older could not be truthfully made to appear to have been undertaken by those defending themselves from charges of bribery.

"The facts are," said Mr. Calhoun, "that Luther Brown, who is a lawyer of Los Angeles, and one of the associated counsel of my defense, was attacked by the Bulletin a few evenings ago, which printed an infamous story regarding him in connection with an attempt to kidnap former Supervisor Lonergan.

"Under the State constitution there are but two places in which a man charged with criminal libel can be arraigned, one of which is in the county of the person libeled, the other is the county where the libel is published.

"Mr. Brown swore out a warrant in Los Angeles county and had the warrant approved in this county by Judge Cook. Older was then arrested and an attempt was made to take him to Los Angeles. It was but an ordinary arrest."

It is further pointed out by Brown's friends that it is perfectly obvious that it would have been futile to have attempted the arraignment of Older in San Francisco county in view of the close relationship existing between Older and the prosecuting officers of San Francisco county.

CONSTABLE SAYS IT WASN'T A KIDNAPING.

Justice Summerfield yesterday admitted that he had issued the complaint against Older last Thursday, after, as he asserts, consulting the District Attorney's office, and stated that Constable Ben Cohn and Constable B. F. Cochran of Justice Selph's court, had gone north the same afternoon to secure the prisoner.

Justice Summerfield appeared to take great pride in the secrecy with which he had succeeded in surrounding the affair at this end, a secrecy that was unbroken until the publication of the facts of the alleged kidnapping in The Times yesterday morning.

Justice Summerfield declined to say what representative of the District Attorney's office he had consulted, and none of them would admit that he was the one. It was remarked that Justice Summerfield had visited Deputy District Attorney McCartney Thursday, but the Senator yesterday denied that the question of the legality of a warrant for Older was discussed.

B. F. Cochran, who returned to Los Angeles yesterday afternoon, after his prisoner had been taken from him in Santa Barbara, stated that there had been nothing like kidnapping in the matter. Constable Ben Cohn served the warrant, he said, and the prisoner submitted quietly to the arrest.

DENVER, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Driven to desperation when he became blind and realizing that he could be nothing but a burden to his friends for the remainder of his life, John H. Stewart, aged 43 years, decided to put an end to his existence this morning.

Securing the services of a twelve-year-old boy to lead him about, he left his room in the Princeton Hotel at 9 o'clock, went first to a Larimer-street pawn shop, where he purchased a 38-caliber revolver, and then to the city park, where on the lawn just inside the Twenty-first-avenue entrance, he shot himself twice and died instantly.

What Root's Trip to Southern Nations Means.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is felt here that the contemporary visits of President Roosevelt to the Mississippi Valley, and of Secretary Root to Mexico, have greater significance than the average citizen realizes.

The tours of these distinguished men, taken together with other important events, indicate that the "Star of Empire" really is taking its course westward, and that not only the Pacific Coast, but Chicago and its great tributary territory in the Middle Western States are destined soon to play a most important part in the economics of the world.

Sub rosa, there is much jealousy in New York over the visit of the President and his trip down the Mississippi. The large commercial ports of the Atlantic hardly look with complacency upon the results that are expected from this tour of the Chief Executive.

The construction of a deep waterway connecting the Great Lakes with the Gulf of Mexico, for the continuous passage of freighters of deep draught will inevitably turn much commerce from Atlantic to Gulf ports.

Such a highway of commerce, it is believed here, will promote the growth and material interests of Chicago wonderfully, and take from the prestige of New York, Boston, Baltimore and other ports.

Events of the day show the irresistable trend of affairs—the trend from East to West. While the President is taking his ride down the "Father of Waters," and making speeches to his countrymen, the visit of Secretary Root to Mexico may be overshadowed somewhat in popular interest, but its prime importance will not be obscured long.

Upon his return to Washington, a few weeks hence, the Secretary of State will have visited personally all the great nations of the South. Besides fostering a friendly political spirit, he is bringing these countries more closely together commercially.

STICKS TO HER STORY.

Woman in Sensational Badger Case in Portland Is Arrested in Vancouver.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Belle Waymire, who is charged with having sought to place Mayor Lane in a compromising position in his private office, Thursday night, was arrested at Vancouver today.

E. E. Radding, who is charged with having been an accomplice, surrendered to the authorities late last night. An acquaintance of his says Radding was getting $1000 for shadowing the woman.

Mrs. Waymire refused to make a statement for publication at Vancouver tonight, but she maintains that she was merely protecting herself when she screamed for help. She further maintains she will tell her whole story at the proper time.

A political plot to defame the Mayor is the accepted theory of the incident. The authorities are probing the matter further and expect to make further arrests.

NOT PERSONAL AFFAIR.

E. H. Harriman Is Not Expected to Be Involved in Indictment of His Companies.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 28.—Although the indictment by the Federal government of the Pacific Mail and the Southern Pacific was practically an accusation against E. H. Harriman, who controls the two corporations, it is not likely that the Wall-street financier will be involved personally in the government prosecutions.

The legal documents to be served on the defendants were placed in the hands of United States Marshal Elliott today, and under the law they may be used to bring to court the managing agent or secretary of each corporation.

E. E. Calvin will be called upon to answer for the Southern Pacific and R. P. Schweritt for the Pacific Mail.

Don't Buy a Suit Image

All About Suit Values

WHITE Sand can be made to look like Flour.

But make this Sand Flour into Bread, and you'll tell immediately when you try to eat it that it is Sand.

A piece of Wood can be Painted to look like a juicy Beefsteak—

But try to eat it—then you'll know that it's just Wood.

The Ability to merely make things Look Like another is therefore not enough to make it Valuable.

The article must have more than Mere Appearance—it must be able to Do Things—to give "Service" because it's "Service" that you pay for.

Therefore, when you buy a Suit of clothes—don't congratulate yourself that you have a Real Suit, because you may buy an Image of a Suit—

You see a Suit should give Wear, and should hold its Shape—and should Fit—in other words, should give you "Service"—because that's what you're paying for in a suit and that is Something a Suit Image will not give.

Since Shape, Style and Fit in a Suit Image are merely pressed into the Fabric temporarily by the Hot Flat Iron, Old Dr. Goose.

And about 80% of Suits are Suit Images.

But if you want a real Suit giving you actual Service—Fitting you perfectly—Wearing Properly and holding its Shape permanently, see that the Label "Sincerity Clothes" is in the Coat of the next one you Buy.

The very best Tailoring Skill and Sincerity workmanship are employed in Making "Sincerity" Suits—

CREATING NEW PLACE IN U.S.C.

Rumored That Dr. Healy May Be Chaplain.

Some Likely Changes in Appointments.

Are Opposed to Reducing Representation.

The business of the Southern California Methodist conference yesterday forenoon was mostly of a routine nature, but a warm debate occurred on the proposed amendments to the constitution of the general conference, which contemplate cutting down representation.

There was no session of the conference in the afternoon, but the lobby and headquarters in the Sunday-school room were well crowded until evening, and a number of committees were in session. The ministers' wives also held their anniversary social in the ladies' parlor.

The newest thing of the day was the discussion in the Committee on Education of the advisability of creating a new position in the University of Southern California, to be known as "vice-president and chaplain," the understanding being that Dr. E. A. Healy will be elected to fill it should the plan be carried through. Dr. Healy is an old and able minister, has just closed seven years in the pastorate of the University Church, and would be ideal for the duties attached to the proposed position.

The elections of Friday so engrossed the time usually spent in gossip that little has been said about the appointments, but some of those probably definitely determined upon are as follows:

Dr. F. M. Larkin, formerly of San Francisco, will likely go to Long Beach, and W. A. Betts, who has been at the latter place, will probably go to Redlands; J. A. Wood of Oceanside will likely secure his choice at South Pasadena, and G. W. Coultas of the latter place will likely go to Whittier; Robert S. Fisher of St. James, this city, will go to Riverside, and E. J. Inwood of Riverside will go to University Church, this city; G. W. Foster of Newman Church is talked of as head of the City Missionary Society, and C. J. Miller for his place at Newman.

STEED CASE STILL STEWING.

There were a few moments of excitement in the Southern California Methodist conference yesterday morning when Dr. F. D. Mather, the first thing after the opening, rose to a question of high personal privilege, with reference to the statement made in The Times yestrday morning, concerning the Steed case.

The house was crowded, and while some of the members may have enjoyed the grilling of the reporter by Dr. Mather, most of them deprecated it, and freely said that the less said about the Steed case the better.

The objection was to the remarks quoted from a layman, in which the speaker is a little severe, and technically got a trifle away from the facts, according to the objectors, though correct in the main. Dr. Mather, Dr. J. B. Green and Dr. E. A. Healy, all three concerned as counsel in the case, were appointed a committee to prepare a statemnt.

The lay delegates elected to the General Conference on Friday appeared in a body and were presented to the conference by Bishop Neely. They were Hugh E. Smith, Mrs. I. J. Reynolds, A. M. Drew and G. W. Hazzard. Mr. Smith, as spokesman for the delegation, first said, for the Lay Association:

"We pledge to you most cordial support in every phase of church life, and as much as in us lies, we desire to have you come to the churches of the conference with the greatest spiritual blessings." For the delegates, he said: "In the General Conference we shall stand for the best interests of the conference."

Dr. J. B. Green, the veteran who has in charge the management of the superannuate funds, made a fine report of his year's work, saying at the close: "We want to be able to say to young men: 'We want you without secular entanglements, and we will take care of you forever.'"

LIKE A BIG CONFERENCE.

The proposed amendments to the constitution of the General Conference, which, if adopted, will reduce the representation about one-half, found little favor in Los Angeles.

R. L. Bruce of Santa Barbara was the first speaker on the subject, and the principal thing he did was to jump on the neck of Dr. J. M. Buckley, the little giant of New York. Buckley wasn't here. Bruce thought that as Buckley is the whole thing, the body might just as well be half as big.

P. H. Bodkin spoke in opposition to the amendments and favored a large body, mainly for the reason that the church needs the educative influence of the General Conference on the leaders of the denomination.

Dr. T. C. Miller favored the cutting-down process. He said: "In the General Conference in this city four years ago I saw one man who cost the body $25,000 by raising points of order."

Dr. Alexander Hardie thought that the large number of delegates elected gave rise to too much electioneering, and as he had no hopes of getting there, the number had better be cut down. He had three votes on Friday, and intimated that some of the preachers must have voted for themselves. He then said:

"I never voted for myself, and have always been able to prove it till this year, when three brothers insisted on voting for me and spoiling my reputation."

Rev. Alfred Inwood opposed a reduction, because it would, to his mind, increase politics in the districts, and because a large representative body should stand for a great world-wide church. The cost of 2 cents per member, he said, was not worth considering.

More or less chaff had been thrown at the presiding elders, and others who were termed "leaders," during the talks of those who favored smaller representation, and this finally brought Dr. A. W. Adkinson, presiding elder of the Los Angeles district, to his feet. He said:

"I deprecate the spirit that has been somewhat prevalent. There seems to be a disposition to say that because a man is a presiding elder, he is good for nothing else. It is a position you do not want to take, and you do not want to be led into it; we are all brothers together. The general conference is not too large, and it is a great mistake to talk about cutting down."

Dr. Will A. Knighten declared: "We are in favor of increasing rather than decreasing the number of delegates. We should not take a step backward."

Dr. W. K. Beans said he was opposed to this talk against Dr. Buckley, declaring him to be one of the brainiest, all-around men in the country, and also announced that he was opposed to whittling down anything, and he regarded the influence of a great body of men as invaluable to the church.

Dr. E. A. Healy,
who may become chaplain of University.

A vote was then taken, which resulted in 97 against the amendments and 28 in favor.

The following probationers were received into the conference on trial: O. C. Laizure, A. Ray Moore, M. R. Walton, William Reberger, Oliver Saylor, Burton Hamlin, C. D. Hicks, William Vimont, T. C. Maxwell, J. L. Moore.

TODAY IN THE CHURCHES.

The usual plan of making up a list of pulpit supplies for Sunday was not followed this year, but every pastor was left to scratch for himself. Dr. Healy has secured Dr. L. T. Guild of San Diego for his pulpit this morning, and all Methodist churches will probably have supplies, as well as some of other denominations.

At the First Methodist Church, conference love-feast will be held at 9:30 o'clock this morning, led by Rev. T. S. Urenn; Bishop Neely will preach at 11 a.m.; Dr. W. W. Cookman at 3 p.m., followed by the ordination and consecration services, by the bishop; Epworth League, led by Rev. F. G. H. Stevens, at 6:15 o'clock; evangelistic service by Dr. J. W. Mahood at 7:30 o'clock.

Conference will meet for business at 9 o'clock Monday morning; Sunday-school anniversary at 2 p.m., Dr. H. W. Brodbeck presiding; Epworth League anniversary at 3 o'clock, Clyde M. Crist presiding, and an address will be delivered by Oliver Clark. In the evening Bishop Neely will deliver a lecture on South America, at the close of which the appointments will be read.

PATRIOTIC.

GERMANS PLAN JOYOUS FEAST.

WILL CELEBRATE THE COMING OF FIRST IMMIGRANTS.

Typical Village of the Fatherland Going Up at Chutes Park for Brilliant Affair Next Sunday and Monday, to Include Street Parade and Other Entertaining Features.

On Sunday and Monday of next week Chutes Park will be turned into a typical German village, the occasion being the celebration of the two hundred and twenty-second anniversary of the landing of the first party of German immigrants on American soil. The festival will be under the auspices of the German-American Alliance of Los Angeles, composed of the different German-American societies of the city.

In transforming the park into a German town, more than $1400 is to be spent. Canvas to the height of twenty feet will line the park streets and on this will be painted a representation of a row of typical German homes. In all, 18,000 feet of canvas will be decorated.

An old-fashioned German fair ground will be represented, the booths being filled with lebkuchen, bratwurst and the other delicacies always present at German festivals in the fatherland.

Music will be one of the principal features of the celebration and, in addition to a number of excellent orchestras which will participate, the Arion and Fidelia singing societies and the singing section of Turnverein Germania will take part. Special songs in the German tongue have been written for the occasion and for one day at least English will be banished from the park.

Although the German-American Alliance of Los Angeles is conducting the celebration, the German-American Alliance of Southern California will be largely represented, the directorate of the two bodies being composed of the same men. At the celebration last year 10,000 German-Americans participated. It is estimated that the number will be almost doubled this year.

Germans from all parts of Southern California have signified their intention of taking part in the festivities and have made inquiries concerning the programme.

The festival will open at 10:30 o'clock next Sunday morning with a parade. The procession will form at Main, Spring and Seventh streets at 9 o'clock. The line of march will be north on Spring to First, west on First to Broadway, and south on Broadway to Tenth, where the procession will break up.

For Sunday and Monday afternoons elaborate musical programmes have been arranged. Vocal music will be rendered by the United Singers of the German Alliance, a choir composed of the singers of Maennerchor Fidelia, the singing section of Turnverein Germania, and Maennerchor Arion, under the leadership of H. Schoenfeld.

October 6 is observed by German-Americans throughout this country as German day. On October 6, 1683, the first organized party of German immigrants landed at Philadelphia and founded Germantown. They were induced to come over by William Penn, who visited Germany and told of the beauties of the new world.

The first settlers sent back such glowing accounts of the conditions that other parties were organized and soon the number of Germans in the new world grew so large that they became an important factor in the growth of the country. Anxious to keep a knowledge of their mother tongue alive the descendants of the immigrants have organized the German-American Alliance, the object of which is to promote fellowship among all German-Americans and work for the advancement of the people.

The officers of the German-American Alliance are Robert E. Kaestner, president; Dr. F. W. Graeff, first vice-president; Mrs. E. Grosser, second vice-president; Nicholas Schwegel, recording secretary; August G. Mayer, corresponding secretary; Hans Zoellner, financial secretary, and Lee Winter, treasurer.

The Celebration Committee is composed of the following members: Dr. F. W. Graeff, chairman; H. Karstadt, secretary; Joseph Blust, treasurer; Mrs. C. Johansen, Mrs. J. Fischer, Mrs. E. Grosser, Mrs. E. Kieshauer, Mrs. R. Morlock, Mrs. E. Nollac, Mrs. C. J. Rohds, Mrs. B. Scheubel, Mrs. B. Schneider, J. Bartholowsky, C. Brunold, Dr. C. O. Dietsch, F. Dorner, P. W. Ehlers, J. Heiss, F. Heussler, Dr. H. Herbert, H. Hueffner, F. W. H. Jahn, Franz Kern, P. Puerrmann, F. G. Weik, M. Lersey, R. Matthias, A. G. Mayer, R. Murlock, K. Mueler, E. Nollac, J. H. Riedemann, E. Roedel, C. J. Rohde, K. F. Ross, E. Sailer, N. Schwegel, E. Stuetz, E. Sohler, G. B. Thomas, C. Warter, G. W. Weik, J. Winkler, L. Winter and H. Zoellner.

CAST IN JAIL, CRIES MISTAKE.

GARDENER SAYS HE'S INNOCENT OF VAGRANCY CHARGE.

Affecting Scene in the Police Station When Wife and Children Plead for Prisoner Accused by Associated Charities Agent of Securing Funds Under Misrepresentation.

When Richard Drees, a gardener of No. 1423 Court street, was conducted from the desk sergeant's office at Central Station yesterday afternoon to the doors of the City Jail, his wife and four children clung to him, weeping and pleading with the officers to release the man. Drees is charged with vagrancy by a representative of the Associated Charities. He says a great mistake has been made.

W. G. Searles of the Associated Charities went to the Drees home early yesterday afternoon and upon learning that the gardener was out left word for him to call at Central Police Station. Mrs. Drees sent her oldest child to a house where Drees was employed in a garden. He hastened home and later went to the Police Station, his wife and his children going along.

Drees did not seem to understand the case when the officer explained to him. He was told that the bail was $50 but he did not have the money. The gardener started out of the station to get bail, but the officers detained him, saying he should wait in jail until his trial.

The gardener is a slight man, about 50 years old, and illness has left its traces upon him. He weakened and turned to kiss his wife, when told he must go to a cell. That was a signal for a heart-rending demonstration on the part of his family. It was several minutes before the officers could disengage the wife and children from the prisoner.

"I know nothing about this," vehemently declared Drees. "Nor do I know the man who brought the charge against me. I have been a resident of Los Angeles for fourteen years and have worked for several of the large firms. They cannot make me out a vagrant. I work every day that my health will permit. Since I have been seriously ill I have taken up gardening, but I make enough to keep my family."

Assistant Prosecuting Attorney H. B. Alexander said Searles applied for a complaint against Drees on the ground that he has appropriated funds which he obtained ostensibly for another family.

"What little knowledge of the case I have is from Searles," said Alexander. "He stated to me that he had been requested to investigate Drees and had learned that he had secured money from Giles Kellogg, Dr. Weatherby, former superintendent of the County Hospital, and Herman Silver. Searles claims he can find no trace of the family for whom the gardener was supposedly gathering funds."

Mrs. Drees declares that the whole affair is a mistake and that her husband is not the man in question. The woman said her husband is subject to severe attacks of asthma and she fears he may be overcome while detained in prison. She added that he is a faithful worker and has always provided for his family through his own labors and that they have never accepted alms.

The classes will be in charge of T. C. Horton and R. A. Hadden.

The following assignments have been made: T. C. Horton, Monday night; young men, at Fishermen's clubroom; Examiner elevator to fourth floor. Tuesday night, Highland Park Presbyterian Church; Friday night, Boyle Heights Presbyterian Church.

There will be no charge in connection with the classes and all interested are cordially invited to attend. The work begins this week and many persons have been pledged for attendance in each district.

BOTH SEEK DIVORCE.

Wife Charges Husband With Cruelty and He Follows Quickly With More Serious Allegation.

Just as Mrs. Rose E. Walker and her attorney left the Courthouse yesterday morning after the filing of her suit for divorce from R. P. Walker, the husband entered with his attorney and filed suit for divorce from his wife. Cruelty is the ground upon which Mrs. Walker will base her case, while Walker alleges infidelity, naming a co-respondent.

The Walkers were married nine years ago in this city. They have a daughter 6 years old and so far as their friends knew, their relations were amicable up to last month. At that time they had a disagreement and Walker left home, leaving his wife in possession of their house at No. 641 Gladys avenue.

In her complaint, Mrs. Walker does not charge that Walker submitted her to physical violence; simply that his manner of treating her was such as to constitute cruelty.

Walker, in his complaint, is more decided in his charges. He alleges that on several occasions his wife was guilty of indiscretions. These acts are said to have extended over a period of two years or more but it is asserted that is was not until last month that the husband learned what was going on. Then he left home.

Walker is proprietor of a bicycle repair shop. He owns the place on Gladys avenue. On the child's account he is said to have been anxious to have the matter settled.

DROWNED AT PARK.

Body of East Los Angeles Man Found in the Pond at Eastlake Is Recovered.

The body of W. H. Ferguson of No. 510 South Sichel street was found at 6:15 o'clock yesterday morning by Park Officer G. W. Rushton in the south end of the lake at Eastlake Park. For several hours the body remained unidentified at Bresee Bros.' morgue, but late in the afternoon relatives identified the remains.

It is believed Ferguson accidentally walked or fell into the lake, although it is possible he committed suicide. Ferguson had passed middle age, and had been ill for some time. He left home for the last time on Friday morning.

INDUSTRIAL.

CHIEF CONCERN TO FILL ORDERS.

STEEL COMPANIES NOT PREPARPARING FOR SHUT-DOWN.

Edgar Thompson Plant Will Be Closed Next Month for Purpose of Making Extensive Repairs—Sails Will Be Trimmed to Meet Trade Conditions.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In connection with the break in steel trust shares yesterday Wall street heard that steel plants were being closed at Homestead and Braddock and that the Illinois Steel Company was preparing to lay off thousands of men.

E. H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, said the Edgar Thompson plant would probably close a month hence for the purpose of making extensive repairs, the expenditures for which were arranged last December, when the annual budget was made. He pointed out that considerable electrical equipment is to be installed, and that the ingot converters are to be doubled in size. Open-hearth furnaces are to be installed at the Homestead plant.

"There will be no extensive suspension of work at the Illinois works," said Mr. Gary today. "Our chief concern now is to fill the orders on our books. Our future policy will depend on the volume of business. The company will not pursue a policy of increasing its inventory accounts, and will not store material. We will trim our sails to meet the trade conditions."

TO PROBE LUMBER TRUST.

Fifty Witnesses Summoned Before Minnesota Grand Jury to Testify Against Combine.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. PAUL (Minn.) Sept. 28.—The Federal grand jury will next week begin an investigation of the so-called lumber trust, which is understood to have its headquarters in Minneapolis.

Fifty witnesses, it is reported, have been summoned to testify before the grand jury. Of this number twenty are from this State and the rest are from Iowa and the two Dakotas.

It is understood that the government has been collecting the testimony to show that the lumber trust has been using the mails for unlawful purposes in its crusade to squeeze the independent companies out of existence. The report of the grand jury on this particular line of law infraction may be of a sensational nature.

STRATEGY IN CANAL ZONE.

Camp of Battalion on Duty in Panama Will Remain at Bas Obispo for the Present.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—For strategy and other purposes, the camp of the battalion on duty in the canal zone will be retained at Bas Obispo for the present.

It was recently recommended by the commanding officer of the battalion that new barracks be erected on a site selected on the Sabanas road, about one and one-half miles from the railroad station in Panama, but an investigation of this locality developed the fact that it was not large enough to accommodate the garrison proposed.

NUMEROUS CHANGES MADE BY NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Commanders Who Have Limited Time to Serve in Their Present Grade Before Fleet Sails for Pacific Are Relieved—Ten Battleships Retain Present First Officers.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—In conformity with the announced policy of the Navy Department of relieving the captains of Admiral Evans's battleships who have a limited time to serve in that grade before the fleet sails for the Pacific, orders were issued today detaching the following commanding officers from their ships:

Capt. W. W. Kimball from the New Jersey; Capt. Samuel P. Conley from the Alabama; Capt. Gottfried Blockinger from the Illinois; Capt. Herbert Winslow from the Kearsarge; Capt. Edward B. Barry from the Kentucky; Capt. Lewis C. Heilmare from the Ohio.

Capt. Albert G. Barry is also detached from the command of the armored cruiser Tennessee and his place will be taken by Thomas B. Howard, formerly in command of the Olympia and now on waiting orders.

The detachment of Capt. Theo Porter from the armored cruiser Washington was announced several days ago, and it was stated that he would be succeeded in command of that vessel by Capt. Austin M. Knight. It is understood that Capt. William H. Sutherland, a member of the board of inspection, is to be assigned to the command of the battleship New Jersey and Charles W. Bartlett, on duty in the Bureau of Ordinances, will be commander of the Ohio. By this arrangement ten of the battleships retain their present commanders for the Pacific cruise.

"PAWNEE BILL" UPSET.

Show Train Hits a Freight in Arizona, Injures Several and Cossacks Go on a Rampage.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BISBEE (Ariz.) Sept. 28.—"Pawnee Bill's" private car was overturned and two other cars were badly smashed in a rear-end collision between a freight train and the "Pawnee Bill" show train on the El Paso and Southwestern Railroad, near here, today.

One woman, name unknown, had three ribs broken, and sustained internal injuries and may die. Several others were injured.

In the excitement following the accident, the Cossacks in the show drew swords and chased the engineer of the show train a mile up the tracks.

MEXICANS MEET ROOT.

TELLS OF RACIAL CONDITIONS ON PACIFIC SLOPE.

Former Congressman from California and Present Head of National Order of Eagles Intimates That Influx of Asiatics Will Eventually Cause Serious Trouble.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW HAVEN (Ct.) Sept. 28.—In an address to the local Aerie of Eagles last night, former Congressman Theodore Bell of California, the national head of the order, speaking of racial conditions on the Pacific Slope, said:

"We on the Pacific Coast, when we look upon the ingress of the Oriental, the Chinese, the Japanese, think we discover a war cloud. We will require common decency, the decency required by the law. We will not tolerate men who prey upon weaker men, upon the weaker sex, to triumph over us. We have a race in the great West that is full of American blood. We do not propose to settle down with any Asiatics, Chinese or Japanese. Here you live in peace with Europe. There we look to the Pacific. We don't know how to interpret what is coming from over the Pacific. You don't know. Do not settle down easy, my brother Eagles, and say that we should not heed.

"The middle classes will eventually have to fight this battle, as they have in the past."

AVING PROJECT IN A MUDDLE.

CH CONFUSION OVER IT IN PASADENA.

onflicting Petitions and Resolu- ons Bearing on Whether One Kind Another of Improvement Shall Made on One of the Thoroughfares of the Crown of the Valley.

e of The Times, No. 28 South Raymond ave.
ASADENA, Sept. 29.—The paving Los Robles avenue is one of the f public questions here now. As natter of fact, neither the Mayor, members of the City Council, nor residents along the street to be ed, either with bithulithic or as- ltum pavement, can tell where the tter stands.

irst, the residents and taxpayers itioned for paving, believing that it uld be asphalt. The Council had wish in the matter, and, as the perty owners will pay the expenses paving, were willing to grant the ition. Then came another petition, ned by a majority of the property ners, who wanted bithulithic pave- nt.

t was understood in the first place t the Barber Asphalt Company uld do the work. The second peti- n was filed with the intention that Warren Brothers of Boston, Mass., ould lay their pavement. The sec- l petition was granted, and reso- ion of intention was read and adopt- by the City Council.

hen comes a series of conflicting olutions. From that date, no one tell what is to be done. The Coun- is willing to pave the street any y the property owners determine. a bed-rock difference between the npanies, there is a difference of 2 its per square foot in the cost of ving, with the lower price in favor the Barber Asphalt Company.

Twice have the residents said that y would prefer the dearer pave- nt, and awarded their verdict to the arren Brothers, and probably three es have they shifted back to the phalt as laid by the Barber com- ny. No one, be he lawyer, judge, yman or Council representative of city, can tell from the papers what real wish of the residents of Los bles avenue is.

Mainly, the fact is that a paving ntract is to be let for this avenue ng its length from East Colorado eet to California street. The con- ct involves more than $100,000 worth work. There is no suspicion of aft in the matter. The whole ques- n turns upon the wishes of the prop- y owners. First they sign one pe- ion and then another. It would take lomon to understand what they real- want.

Now the whole matter is up in the again over a question about water ains. Property owners along the ave- e object to the laying of pavement fore water mains of proper size are d down. On this point there is no ntroversy from the city officials. mmissioner W. D. Medill opened this estion several weeks ago before the ople were alive to the fact that they re petitioning for pavement in ad- nce of the laying of proper-sized ains. He called attention, through columns of The Times, to the neces- y of laying the water mains before pavement was put down if the res- nts desired a good street.

This had nothing to do with the con- oversy about the kind of pavement. llowing his advice the property own- s take up the question of water mains d branch back into the old question bithulithic or asphalt. No one now ows where the question stands.

ROLLER TOWEL DEATH ROUTE.

VETERAN HANGS HIMSELF AT SOLDIERS' HOME.

Somewhat Uncommon Method Employed by One of the Country's Aged and Sick Defenders in Taking His Own Life—Tragedy of a Bathroom Discovered by an Accident.

SOLDIERS' HOME, Sept. 28.—Martin Keeler, a member of the home, ended his life with a towel this afternoon. The tragedy occurred in a bathroom of the hospital, in which Keeler was a patient.

An attendant, alarmed over the length of time that Keeler had occupied the room, found it locked. He procured a stepladder and, peering through the transom, saw that the veteran was lying in a peculiar position on the floor. The attendant advised one of the assistant surgeons and the door was forced.

Keeler had wrapped a roller towel about his neck and, without taking the towel from its hanging place, had sunk toward the floor so that it strangled him.

The man had been suffering from cancer of the stomach and had expressed a determination to end his life. He was a member of Co. D, Seventy-fifth Illinois Cavalry and a native of Germany. His age was 53. He was admitted here from El Paso, Tex., in 1906, and was formerly in the branch homes at Leavenworth, Kan., and Milwaukee, Wis.

OLD BUS STICKS.

Proprietorship in the bus line, which operates between Soldiers' Home and Sawtelle, will change on October 1. Tom Gulliver, who has been in possession for several years, concluded he had earned a rest, and, he wishing to sell out, Lieut. T. Cunningham, a member of Co. L at the home, decided that the exercise, as well as the income would just suit him, and is now about to become proprietor.

When the Los Angeles-Pacific Railroad introduced a spur into the home, it was thought the day of the bus was over, but a number of the barracks as well as the hospital, are far from the railway line, and inconvenient for the elder men and cripples; hence the bus line is still liberally patronized.

R. J. Elliott, late Co. E, Tenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry (Spanish-American War,) has for more than three years been employed as surgeon's clerk in the hospital here. Ambitious to take up the profession of medicine, he employed all his leisure moments in pursuit of study to that end, and to such good purpose that he recently passed a good "exam" and entered for the coming term in the medical department of the U.S.C.

Miss Genevieve Perkins, for five years a nurse in the hospital here, has been promoted to chief nurse, vice Miss Slingerland, resigned.

John A. Martin Post, G.A.R., and its auxiliary, the W.R.C., together with numerous friends, enjoyed a picnic in Santa Monica Cañon Thursday.

Another of the popular concerts under direction of Prof. Geissinger of the home orchestra, will take place in Memorial Hall Thursday evening.

RECENT DEATHS.

John Hegeman, late Co. B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry, a native of New York, admitted from Eureka in 1905, died at the latter place September 13, while on furlough, aged 70.

Henry C. Smith, late Co. F, Twenty-fourth Massachusetts Infantry, a native of New Hampshire, admitted from Los Angeles in 1901, died in Los Angeles, September 14, while on furlough, aged 81.

LONG BEACH, Sept. 28.—Joseph E. Pugh, personal representative of John F. Craig, this morning received a full set of plans for the Craig shipbuilding plant, to be built on the inland harbor, with instructions to advertise at once for bids on the construction of the buildings, and the bulkheading.

The various buildings to be erected are punch shop, 46x174 feet, foundry, first section, 90x100 feet; machine shop, 90x128 feet; power-house, 50x150 feet; boiler-house, 25x50 feet; mold loft, 40x150 feet; forge shop, 45x35 feet; joiner shop, 40x50 feet; bending floor, 35x35 feet; office, 30x50 feet.

All of these save the last will be of heavy mill construction, limited to one story, by reason of the immense weight of the machinery. The cribbing and bulkheading in front of the plant will be 600 feet long, the cribbing to extend back twenty feet. The plans were prepared by Chief Engineer Baker of the Craig company.

While bids are being secured, which will occupy two weeks, the Salt Lake Railway Company will proceed with the construction of its spur tracks into the ship yards. There will be one main spur from the main line, branching into three lines, two of which will run to the water front, the other into the machine shop.

HURLED INTO SEA.

Oliver Sisk, a bridge builder, in the employ of J. D. Mercereau, on the jetties at the mouth of the San Gabriel River, was thrown into the ocean this morning by the uptilting of a plank on which was lying a heavy crosscut saw. The saw followed him, barely grazing the side of the victim's head as he went down into twenty feet of water. Dazed from the blow, Sisk rose to the surface and wildly flinging his arms, by good fortune caught the plank which caused his fall and kept afloat until he could be rescued by a boat. Sisk was working on one end of the plank, and a fellow-workman on the other end, unthinkingly stepped off onto the pier and, relieved of his weight, the plank tilted, throwing Sisk into the water and twelve feet below the deck of the jetty.

SEASHORE NEWS NOTES.

A statement of the National Bank of Long Beach, published today, shows total resources of $1,339,052.07, with cash and sight exchange of $378,339.98. The deposits amount to $949,957.50. The statement shows a marked increase in deposits since the last statement, August 22. Vice-President Hatch says conditions are very encouraging, and people are promptly paying off their obligations and meeting their contracts.

Miss Ella Campbell, secretary of the Young Woman's Christian Association, this morning tendered her resignation to take effect October 1. It was necessitated by the recent bereavement of her brother in the loss of his wife, leaving two young children to the care of the sister. Miss McLemore of Los Angeles has been appointed as her successor.

Building permits for September amounted to $60,695, a decrease as compared with August. Only two large permits were issued, for a bank building and an apartment-house. The others were for small cottages and more pretentious buildings.

ARTISTIC GARDEN FETE.

Mr. and Mrs. Beveridge Entertain at Hollywood—Unprecedented Activity in Railway Matters.

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 28.—Artistic in every detail was the garden party given by Mr. and Mrs. Philo Beveridge, and the spacious grounds about the home at Prospect and Wilcox avenues were thronged with guests, representing Los Angeles and Hollywood society. The grounds, with their numberless strings of bobbing decorative balls of every color, were a delight to the eye, and the interior of the residence was also handsomely decorated.

The guests were received by host and hostess on one of the wide stretches of green sward. Then they passed along winding walks to different portions of the grounds, where ices, punch, coffee and tea were served by groups of society maids and matrons. An enormous silver punch bowl, decked with huge bunches of purple grapes, with foliage, attracted special attention.

Among those present were Mmes. C. J. George, Davidson, Allan Gardner, C. H. Lippincott, Riley, Mary Hancock, Charles Hanchett, Connell, E. W. Elliott, S. T. Wier, R. P. McJohnson, Fred Smith, E. W. Waldron, Hay, Horace Candee, Wellington Clark, and Misses Brydges, Connell, Clough, Kays, Chapin, Hoff, Vail, Shurtliff, Morgan, Moody, Williams, Williamson, Fitch, Wright, Sandison, Bailey, Candee, Douglas, Shrader, Magoon, Somers, Janes, Siggins, Squire, Lewis and Dunbar.

HUNGRY FOR FRANCHISES.

The Los Angeles Pacific has for some time been fortifying its position in the local field. Within the last few weeks it has secured three franchises, one on Western avenue and Franklin street, extending from the southern city limits to Prospect avenue and Vine street; one connecting with this line and running into Sepulveda Cañon, where are located the stone quarries of the company; and one on Highland avenue from the north to the south city limits. Wednesday night this company applied to the Trustees for still another franchise, commencing at the end of its Franklin-avenue franchise and west on that street to Cahuenga avenue, thence north on Cahuenga to Highland avenue and the city limits.

This last franchise, if granted, will give the Los Angeles Pacific a complete belt line around Hollywood and will also give it absolute control of Cahuenga Pass and effectually shut off any other company from reaching the San Fernando Valley by that route.

HUNTINGTON TO ENTER FIELD.

The people are greatly interested in the announcement that Huntington has made up his mind to enter the Hollywood field either by way of the Bimini Baths line or by the Sixth-street line, both of which have already been extended almost to the city limits here. It is stated that Huntington has signed an agreement to run the Sixth-street line into the heart of Hollywood upon the payment of a bonus of $18,000. A committee of prominent citizens of Hollywood and Colegrove is now raising the amount.

Last night a meeting of property holders on Sunset boulevard was held at the City Hall to discuss the advisability of making an effort to bring the line up Sunset, either from the terminus of the Bimini Baths line at Melrose avenue or from Edgemont and Benefit streets, to which point Huntington secured a franchise from the county a few months ago. Property owners representing over 7000 feet of frontage on that portion of Sunset boulevard over which the road would run voted in favor of the projection.

SAN PEDRO.

SAN PEDRO, Sept. 28.—The local Chamber of Commerce held an annual meeting last night and selected the following officers: President, Sam Storer; vice-president, Philip Gaffey; secretary, W. C. Miller; treasurer, Frank Burns. Including the foregoing officers, the directorate is composed of W. F. Bickenbach, John E. Logan, C. J. Adair, H. P. Feri and Charles Mason.

SAN FERNANDO.

SAN FERNANDO, Sept. 28.—Electric power service from Kern River has been extended to this point, and the Edison company is soon to furnish the town with light and power.

The Adventist College has opened, with an enrollment of 20 students, an increase of 40 per cent.

WHY A BUSINESS COLLEGE SOLICITOR?
Suppose We Should Say:
"Write or phone for catalogue and we will send our SOLICITOR to your HOUSE, and he will worry you to death for months until he 'gets you;'" you would properly and wisely AVOID US. But that is about what it amounts to when you communicate with a "solicitor" school—one that employs a professional solicitor, or utilizes its teachers to make "calls" instead of attending to their proper teaching business.
"NO CANVASSERS, PEDDLERS OR BEGGARS." Thus read hundreds of signs. This means that the class of persons mentioned are considered undesirable "callers."
The grocery clerk calling at the back door to take the daily order is a convenience to many, but with the advent of the telephone even HIS "calls" have been dispensed with to a great extent.
The home is sacred ground. It is an EXCLUSIVE place, dedicated to the FAMILY, and to rest, comfort, PRIVACY. Business calls are proper at the business office—not at the home. Even the conventional social "duty" calls are often a bore to caller and "callee" alike, to say nothing about the in-and-out-of-season calls of a gadding neighbor or telephone fiend.
A wholesale or manufacturing concern may legitimately secure business by means of "drummers" and samples, but these jolly men "on the road" never invade the HOMES of their customers.
Does a successful and self-respecting hardware house, or clothing house, or dry goods house, or professional firm peddle its wares, or solicit, or make "calls" AT PEOPLE'S HOMES?
Then Why a Business College Solicitor?
FACT 1—Every person intelligent enough to attend a business college KNOWS—or knows enough to find out—that his city has one or more business schools.
FACT 2.—Every person who could possibly profit by a business college course has the intelligence to write or telephone to one or more schools for catalogue and information.
FACT 3.—Having received and read the literature, it is the prospective student's privilege to call at the College to make further inquiries and investigation.
FACT 4.—The College office is a BUSINESS office, and is the proper place to talk business. The HOME is not a business office.
FACT 5.—A "professional" business College solicitor works on commission, and that means a desperate effort to "get you." Repeated "calls," a human-nature tendency to improve on the truth, and superhuman interest IN YOU—these are the "signs of recognition."
FACT 6.—To use the regular business college TEACHERS as solicitors is a prostitution of their legitimate function. During business hours the teacher is needed in the school room. The time outside business hours is needed by the teacher for diversion and self-improvement. A commissioned-salaried solicitor-teacher is practically worthless as an EDUCATIONAL factor.
FACT 7.—The purpose of this article is NOT TO KNOCK ANY SCHOOL OR PERSON, but to make business college soliciting and "calling" UNPOPULAR, to the end that the Business College may maintain its dignity, not only as an EDUCATIONAL institution, but as a BUSINESS institution.
Should the Woodbury ideas and methods appeal to you, we shall welcome you cordially. You will find our school vibrant with enthusiasm and life. Our teachers are strong, helpful, sympathetic, inspiring. You will receive an impetus successward that will last through life. Upon graduation, some business office will want you at a good salary.
Do not hesitate to call, write or telephone for catalogue and information. We shall not worry you with solicitor or uninvited calls.
October Enrollment, Monday, September 30, and Tuesday, October 1—and all week.

NEWS REPORTS FROM CORRESPONDENTS OF THE TIMES.

SECRET IN GRAVE.

FIND NO CLEW TO MURDERER.

DIM HOPE OF GETTING SLAYER OF UPLAND AUSTRIAN.

Official Investigation Brings to Light Many Peculiar Features in Life of Old Recluse Who Met Tragic Death—Complications in Robbery of Hen Roost.

SAN BERNARDINO, Sept. 28.—Mystery continues to shroud the identity of the slayer of Vasco K. Davidovic, the eccentric Austrian who was murdered at Upland Thursday morning. Sheriff Ralphs and Under-Sheriff McNabb returned from that place tonight, having little hope of apprehending the guilty one. Coroner Van Wie also returned, having held the inquest yesterday, the jury returning a verdict of death from gunshot wounds inflicted by persons unknown.

The investigations of the Coroner and Sheriff brought to light many peculiar features concerning the past of the deceased. He had been in this country since 1891. During his residence here he went under several aliases. To a countryman he had explained that he was a refugee from his native land, and that for years he had been shadowed by strangers to him, whom he believed sought his life.

Among his effects his passport was found, showing that he came from Dalmatia. There he was known as Kristor Vaso Davidovic. A year after his arrival here he sent a draft for $100 through the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles to Proter Losarn Davidovich, at London, England, and in the following year, through the same banking house, a draft for $40 was sent to Milicia V. R. Davidovichа, who is supposed to be his wife, also at London.

In 1900 he was employed at Riverside as S. Davis. This fact seems established by the finding among his effects of a number of bank checks on the defunct Orange Growers' Bank of that city, issued by C. W. Rogers, as agent. Instead of cashing these checks he put them away among his papers, and now they are valueless. They total $100.

It is believed by many that his murder was for the purpose of securing supposed valuable papers, possibly of a political nature, and that these were carried in a pouch attached to his belt, which the murderer cut with a knife. At the time Davidovic was killed he had the bank checks in his pocket in a wallet, and this had not been disturbed.

The officers do not believe that the murderer secured any money, as the deceased had none so far as is known. When he first came to this country he worked as a common laborer, and, living frugally, managed to save about all he made, and was therefore able to send bank drafts to London. For many years, though, he lived on the refuse thrown away by workmen at packing-houses, and shunned labor of all kinds.

CUPID IS DENIED.

To be wedded and then attend the circus was the hearts' ambition of Robert Clay Smith, aged 21, and Isabelle Jeannette Oelhausen, aged 19, both of Riverside, their romance being rudely nipped by the County Clerk's office, which refused the necessary license, owing to the juvenile appearance of both.

The girl's father is C. A. Oelhausen, a cement contractor. Her mother was greatly surprised tonight to learn of the attempted marriage, and explained that the couple had left Riverside only to attend a circus here.

PERILOUS DESERT TRIP.

Mrs. Jennie Grimes and four children passed through here tonight for Los Angeles in a wagon, having been seven weeks coming overland from Salt Lake City. This side of the Muddy they became lost, and were caught in a sand and rain storms. After going over 200 miles out of their course they were stranded on the desert, being found by Henry and Paul Morrison, prospectors. One of their horses had died, three of their children were ill, and the party was without water.

HEN-ROOST COMPLICATIONS.

At an early hour this morning the police had an exciting chase for a chicken thief, who was detected in the act of looting a hen-roost belonging to Eugene E. Davis on E street. The fellow was better acquainted with the locality then were the officers and made his escape tarough a blind alley, though several shots were fired at him.

During the excitement the officers encountered a neighbor, who, armed with a revolver, was cautiously sneaking in the shadows of the Davis residence, in search of a pot shot at the thief. When commanded to halt and throw up his hands, the neighbor supposed he was facing thieves, and with a pitiful cry, appealed to the officers not to shoot, that they could have his revolver and anything else they might want.

STANFORD WILL PLAY.

Arrangements have been perfected for a game of football between the Stanford team and the local High School next Friday afternoon. It came to the ears of the local players that the Stanfords are to play in Los Angeles next Saturday, and Leon Atwood, local manager of the High School league team, bombarded the northern players with telegrams inviting a try-out on the Meadowbrook field in this city. These invitations have been accepted, and the local enthusiasts not only intend to show the bigger team some lively playing, but also it is proposed to make their coming something of a society event, and a grand reception will be accorded them.

AUTOS TOO SPEEDY.

E. Metske and H. Packer of San Bernardino, W. S. Gregory of Pomona and L. McCoy of Redlands, each driving touring cars, were arrested by the police this afternoon for exceeding the speed limit. Though the streets were thronged with the circus crowd, the accused drove their machines along the streets at a high rate of speed. Each deposited a cash bond for future appearance.

STUNT BY TRICK HORSE.

Man in Automobile Kicked Out of His Machine by Circus Equine. Notes.

RIVERSIDE, Sept. 28.—J. J. Claflin, a Riverside hardware man, suffered a peculiar accident yesterday. With his wife and a party of friends, he was driving in his automobile around the circus grounds, where preparations for the Ringling Brothers' show were in progress. As they passed a string of big trick horses, one of the animals became frightened at the machine and plunged violently, kicking backward at the same time. One hoof struck Mr. Claflin on the right knee with such force that he was kicked out of the automobile.

The women of the party screamed and the horses danced about the machine in terror, creating considerable excitement for a time. Mr. Claflin's knee was not broken, but was so painfully injured that he will not be able to use it for some time.

RIVERSIDE NOTES.

Judge F. E. Densmore's chambers in the Courthouse were the scene of a simple wedding this noon, when Miss Fannie Kreigbaum became the bride of Frank W. Kight. Both of the young people are residents of Riverside and will make their home here.

Miss Eugenie Fuller, principal of the Riverside High School, returned home yesterday afternoon from a three months' tour of the Philippine Islands, Japan and China.

Meteor Explodes Near Colton and Gives Brilliant Illumination.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

COLTON, Sept. 28.—Shooting through the sky toward Slover Mountain, a meteor exploded near that eminence last night. The phenomenon occurred at 12:30 o'clock this morning.

IRON PLANT PROJECTED.

Ohio Corporation to Establish One at San Diego—Railway May Be Extended—News Notes.

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 28.—C. A. Robanavitz, a millionaire iron manufacturer of Marietta, O., appeared before the Harbor Commissioners yesterday to announce that he and his associates had decided to locate a plant on the water front, between Twenty-third street and National City, the site comprising about six acres. A petition for a wharf franchise will be presented to the board at the meeting Tuesday afternoon. The plant will call for an initial investment of at least $100,000. Much of the machinery will be moved here from Marietta. It is purposed to manufacture almost every iron product, including machinery and engines. The raw material will be brought from the East in rolled bars, and both ships and railroad will be utilized as carriers.

E. S. Babcock, president of the Los Angeles and San Diego Beach Railway Company, announces that the directors are considering the feasibility of extending the road from La Jolla to the marine biological station, two miles north of the caves.

E. W. Scripps has applied to the City Council for permission to erect a private telephone line between La Jolla and his home in Miramar, via the marine biological station.

SECRETARY RESIGNS.

John S. Mills has tendered his resignation as secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, a position which he has held since the retirement of James A. Jasper. O. W. Cotton has been placed in temporary charge of the office.

The City Council has authorized the Board of Police Commissioners to make a contract with P. J. Benbough for the furnishing of a patrol wagon for the police department. The consideration for the first two years is to be $100 a month, and $150 a month the second two years.

FORESTRY EDUCATION.

RUGBY ELEVEN COMING SOUTH.

STANFORD TEAM WILL PLAY IN LOS ANGELES.

Scheduled for Game Next Saturday With Local Union—Northerners Will Send About Eighteen Men, One Coach, "Dad" Maulton and Manager Knupp.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Graduate Manager Knupp, has announced that the 'varsity Rugby team will make a trip to Los Angeles next week to meet the players of the Los Angeles Rugby Union. The game will be played at Los Angeles next Saturday.

This trip is welcomed by the coaches and trainer, as nothing has been heard from Reno, and the impression is that there will be no game with the University of Nevada this year.

The Rugby players in the South are led by "Pat" Higgins, an old Rugby player of ability, and he promises to have a strong line-up. L. M. Edwards, who played on the Stanford 'varsity last year, is now in Los Angeles, and he may be seen in the line-up.

The men who will make the trip have not yet been named by the coaches, but there will probably be eighteen players, one of the coaches, "Dad" Moulton and Manager Knupp.

A successful military balloon ascension was made at Washington Friday by Capt. Charles F. Chandler, U.S.A. An elevation of 4300 feet was attained before the supply of gas compelled the descent. The balloon traveled sixty miles in three hours.

The Greatest Offer of All

This is the grandest offer ever made by reputable specialists, and is given to demonstrate that permanent cures can be made in the most complicated cases. This grand offer of Drs. Shores & Shores goes into effect at once and holds good until further notice.

THE DOCTOR AND SPECIALIST

DO YOU HAVE CATARRH?

READ THESE SYMPTOMS AND SEE. MANY FOLKS DO HAVE CATARRH AND DON'T KNOW IT

CATARRH IN THE HEAD AND THROAT

This form of catarrh is most common—resulting from neglected colds—quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Is your nose stopped up?"

"Does your nose discharge?"

"Is your nose sore and tender?"

"Is there pain in front of head?"

"Do you hawk to clear the throat?"

"Is your throat dry in the morning?"

"Do you sleep with your mouth open?"

You can be easily cured now—don't let it run into complications.

THE BRONCHIAL TUBES

When catarrh of the head or throat is neglected or wrongfully treated it extends down the windpipe into the bronchial tubes and after a while attacks the lungs. Quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Have you a cough?"

"Have you pain in the side?"

"Do you raise frothy materials?"

"Do you spit up little cheesy lumps?"

"Do you feel you are growing weaker?"

Don't risk neglecting these warnings—stop the disease before it reaches the lungs.

OF THE EARS

Catarrh extends from the throat along the eustachian tubes into the ears, causing partial or complete deafness. Quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Is your hearing failing?"

"Do your ears discharge?"

"Is the wax drying in your ears?"

"Do you hear better some days than others?"

"Is your hearing worse when you have a cold?"

Don't neglect this until your hearing is irreparably destroyed.

OF THE STOMACH

Catarrh of the stomach is usually caused by swallowing poisonous mucous, which drops from the head and throat at night. Quickly cured at little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Is there nausea?"

"Do you belch up gas?"

"Are you constipated?"

"Do you bloat up after eating?"

"Is there constant bad taste in the mouth?"

Now is the time to be permanently cured. Drs. Shores are curing hundreds every year.

$5.00—A SPECIAL DEPARTMENT FOR MEN—$5.00

Shores about the most delicate or embarrassing private troubles, with the assurance that you will be given honest advice and skillful treatment, and everything will be STRICTLY PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL. WHAT THE $5 RATE MEANS

It means if you have Catarrh, Asthma, Deafness, Lung Trouble or any Chronic affection of the Stomach, Liver or Kidneys, any Nervous or Private Disease or any skin trouble or any complication of Chronic Diseases, no matter how many, if you have a dozen ailments, $5 is all the money you need for one month's treatment, all medicines furnished free, provided you apply this week.

All Diseases $5 a Month. All Medicines Free. Apply This Week.	$5	A Month All Diseases. And all Medicines Free. Apply This Week.

Beware of Fake Medical Companies

Did you ever hear of a genuine reputable physician doing business with the sick as a "fake company?" The "company" furnishes the cloak under which any quack can practice.

$5 We Also Cure by Mail $5

Do not despair because you live at a distance from the city. Drs. Shores' new system of HOME TREATMENT makes it easy to get expert advice and treatment at home. Their new symptom blank covers every symptom of disease, which enables them to diagnose your case and tell you what your trouble is, and what can be done for you. WRITE for their new symptom list and take advantage of this grand special offer. CONSULTATION FREE. Whether you take the treatment or not, the advice costs you nothing.

Drs. Shores have been asked time and again why it is that their treatment cures so many people whom other first-class physicians are unable to cure. They have also been asked if they would advise people to give up their family doctors and employ specialists exclusively.

To the first question Drs. Shores would say that the reason that their treatment cures is not because Drs. Shores are the only good physicians in California, for there are hundreds of eminent doctors here. It is not because they possess superhuman powers, for Drs. Shores never attempt any such shallow deceit as that.

IT IS BECAUSE

They have specially studied the diseases they treat and nothing else. They pay special attention to diagnosis, have every facility and a world of experience to enable them to properly diagnose a case, and after a diagnosis is complete they begin to REMOVE THE CAUSE of the diseases and make the organs do their proper work, instead of simply giving drugs to do the work of nature in an artificial way.

THE SPECIALIST'S FIELD

is narrow. He treats only certain diseases. He is not trying to saw off a leg today and cure measles tomorrow, but confines his time to his specialty, hence he is better able to treat successfully his specialties than the tired, overworked family doctor.

We have no quarrel with the family doctor. His work is a blessing to humanity, and in sudden and acute diseases is better qualified to treat the patient than the specialist; but can you reasonably expect him to have the instruments, facilities and experience necessary to cure a chronic case of Catarrh, Deafness, Stomach Trouble and like ailments?

NEVADASTOCKS

I wish to advise my clients that I am now established in my new offices at No. 119 West 4th St., in the Herman W. Hellman Bldg., and very conveniently located with references to the Board Room of the Stock Exchange, which enables me to give immediate service on all orders.

I am prepared to handle on commission orders of any magnitude in the active stocks.

There are a number of stocks representing special good properties which I believe will make money for anyone buying them at present prices.

When stocks are dull and weak, and at the bottom, it is always the time to buy. It takes courage to buy at such times, but it is the courageous who make the money. Buy at the bottom. Johnnie especially, is a good buy now. With the big mill fast nearing completion on the Johnnie Consolidated, and with over 80,000 tons of ore in sight, this stock is one of the best buys in the market. The developments on the Crown Point Globe has opened up a very rich high grade ledge, running directly into the end-lines of Johnnie Consolidated and carries ore of very high value. This has greatly increased the value of Johnnie Consolidated as a mine. The big mill will be completed by December 1st, and the stock should be bought now.

Write me about any of the listed stocks. Telephone No., Main 513; A5983.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Out-of-town trading for the week was good, while local dealing was below average. There was no lack of desirable stuff, but continued stiff figures hindered free movement. Excepting potatoes, staples were without fluctuations, and firm. Buyers did not feel safe in laying up stock under conditions, and dealing was in small quantities, the tendency being to hang back for a lower market.

Eggs—Week's receipts, 617 cases. Arrivals were far under demand and necessitated heavy drawing on storage. Prices closed very firm at an advance of 1 cents on local ranch during the week. With no receipts of eastern, and the continued heavy output from storage, better figures are expected.

Butter—Week's receipts, 92,500 pounds. Inquiry for best grades of creamery was steady, the stock keeping well cleaned up. Prices ruled stationary, the feeling at the close of the week being for better on creamery extras. Eastern grades held firm and were in good demand. An advance is anticipated on all grades, owing to an upward market in the East and North.

Cheese—Week's receipts, 2548 pounds. Demand continued steady, with arrivals no more than adequate. Little cheese was received from the East, while arrivals of the Coast product were comparatively light. Prices remained unchanged, but firm.

Potatoes and Vegetables—Week's receipts of potatoes, 8245 sacks. Arrivals were heavy on an overstocked market. Both fancy and choice Salinas and Highlands made several declines, the week closing with Salinas easy at 1.95@200, and Highlands at 1.65@1.75. The market is gradually falling, and a further drop is expected this week.

Sweets—Week's receipts, 415 sacks. Inquiry was fair at declining figures for an ample supply.

Onions—Week's receipts, 1297 sacks. The market was bare of Silverskins, Yellow Danvers being in excellent request at fine figures. Other vegetables lacked interest with prices at bottom.

Fruits—The first car of Jonathan apples from Colorado arrived yesterday. Bellefleurs continue plentiful, but are having slow movement because of high prices. Red apples were in big demand, but there were few on the market. Prices on all varieties were very firm, with no probability of decline. Limited receipts of fancy oranges and lemons were picked up on the spot at stiff figures. Culls were abundant, but in poor demand. The market closed practically cleaned up of figs and canteloupes. Grapes were in big supply all week, and easy under steady demand.

Groceries—The week's business was entirely satisfactory. Sugar witnessed a decline, while coffees and teas were on the upward. Spot canned goods were low, with future deliveries short and quoting high.

Poultry—Receipts during the week ran lighter than usual, demand being urgent and prices firm. The market was cleaned up of hens.

Beans—Week's receipts, 1013 sacks. Arrivals were heavier than for several weeks, but inadequate for the demand. Prices ruled very firm and closed at a slight advance on No. 1 pink.

DRIED FRUITS EXPENSIVE.

Apricots and Peaches in Packers' Hands—Pears and Plums at Very High Figures.

The dried fruit market is becoming bare and prices are soaring in all lines except raisins, which are steadily declining.

The market on apricots is nearly cleaned up. The very small quantity of this fruit left in the State is in packers' hands. The market rules very firm on a basis of 20 to 24 cents on 25 pound boxes.

Peaches continue firm and most of this stock too, is in the possession of packers. The demand from the East is very heavy. An advance in prices is indicated. Ruling prices in 25 pound boxes, carload lots, f.o.b., are: Standard, 10 3-4; choice 11 1-4; extra choice, 11 3-4; fancy, 12½. All Coast packers report an excessive demand and many northern houses are running day and night to meet orders.

There has been a decided advance on prunes during the past ten days, based on a shortage of the crop. The most conservative estimates of packers put the total output of the State for 1907 at 65,000,000 pounds, as against 125,000,000 pounds, last season. Europe has been a heavy buyer and northern packers report that the present European demand is without precedent. A sharp advance is expected in prices.

On a bag basis Santa Claras are quoted at 5 to 5 1-4 cents, and outsides at 4½ to 4 3-4.

The raisin market, as has been stated, is quiet, and lower quotations are the rule. The State crop is a record breaker. Fancy 16 ounce seeded run from 8½ to 8 3-4, with choice at 8 1-4 and 8¼, loose Muscatels are easy at 6 1-4 and 7 cents, a pound, and layers at $1.40 to $2. per 20 pound boxes.

The output of pears, plums and nectarines is very light and extremely high figures are ruling. Per 25 pound box pears are quoted at 11 1-4 to 14; plums at 12½ to 13½, and nectarines at 12½ to 13½.

WALNUTS SCARCE.

Lowest Estimates of Crop Believed Too High—Other Varieties of Nuts Plentiful and Cheap.

All varieties of nuts, except walnuts, will be plentiful, this year, and will be low.

Almonds are quoted lower than a few days ago, and there is a tendency toward a still further reduction. Now that the walnut harvest is on and growers are delivering the nuts, it is reported that the crop is even smaller than previous lowest estimates, and it is believed that exceptionally high prices will prevail.

The largest non-association shipper of Santa Ana has forwarded eight cars of walnuts. The total shipment of the State to date is eighteen cars.

NEW YORK MARKET.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—Stocks continued to decline today and the volume of selling was augmented. The principal motive avowed for the depression felt by the sellers was fear of the consequence of the coming public addresses by President Roosevelt in the West and South. It is supposed that these addresses will largely advocate the extension of measures against corporations. The selling continued to give evidence of a professional origin for a large part of it, but the fall in prices had the usual consequence of dislodging weak account and of inducing some liquidation by the sentimental effect on holders of securities. The bank statement was weak and was made the occasion for some of the selling. The decrease in cash was only as much as the lowest of the preliminary estimates and the loan increase was moderate, but the falling off of $2,728,525 in the surplus brings that item down to $5,546,575, which offers a narrow margin of resources, with the interior movement of currency in full force. The clearinghouse banks report an increase of over a million dollars for government deposits. There was some demand for remittance to London for cable incident to the end of the month, but demand sterling was lower. The heavy withdrawals of gold from the Bank of England for Egypt was the feature of the foreign money markets, but the discount rate in London was unaffected and the turn of the quarter is looked forward to bring relaxation. Crop damage reports were in circulation, but the grain and cotton markets moved moderately. The lack of explanation for the selling on the news caused rumors of some possible undisclosed developments. The covering of shorts after the publication of the bank statement was evidence of the professional nature of the selling. The closing tone was feverish and unsettled. Bonds were easy. Total sales par value, $962,000. United States 3's have advanced ⅛ and the 4's have declined ½ per cent. on call during the week.

GENERAL EASTERN MARKETS.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—The wheat market, with the exception of a few minutes at the immediate opening, was weak all day. The first quotations were firm because of higher cables, but prices soon slumped on realizing sales. From then until the close the market was weak. Very little support was given and the bearish sentiment seemed to grow stronger as the session advanced.

December wheat opened unchanged to ¼ higher at 100 to 100¼, sold between 99¼ and 100¾ and closed weak at 99¾.

The corn market was weak all day because of a slack demand, large offerings of cash corn and poor shipping call. The close was weak. December corn opened unchanged to ¼@½ lower at 59¼@59 to 58¾, sold between 59½@59¾ and 58¾ and closed at 58¾@58⅞. The oats market was exceedingly dull, but prices held firmer than those of wheat or corn. December opened ⅛@¼ higher at 52¾, sold between 52@52½ and closed at 52¼@52⅜, the final quotations being the same as that of yesterday. The provisions market opened firm because of higher prices for live hogs, but the market soon became easy on selling. At the close January pork was 2½ lower at 15.35. Lard was 2½ higher at 8.85. Ribs were 2½ lower at 7.97½.

We Still Urge Oil Stocks
Of the better class as a purchase. They have had a big drop, induced by tight money and liquidation of weak holders.
On a basis of DOLLAR OIL, now the price in Los Angeles, it means good times in the near future for the producing companies. We are optimistic on oil stocks to hold for a fall and winter rise. The oil business has prosperity in its wake for the coming year. We believe in Union Oil, Central, Western Union, Rice Ranch, and some others.

BUSHER SHOWS THEM.

HITS TWO HOME RUNS.

Tom Stevens, manager of the local Elks' ball team and one of the directors of the Los Angeles ball team, performed a very charitable act yesterday that stamps him as a grand man and the people of San Diego should never forget his kindness.

The San Diego Elks' team, which played the local Elks' club at the Chutes grounds yesterday and will play again today, came here from the Grief City and then discovered they had no pitcher who was in shape to play against the local demon Elks. Tom Stevens, of course, was right there with the big heart and gladly offered to go out into the highways and find a pitcher for his dear brother Elks from San Diego. He went, but it was with the demon purpose of digging up some bum pitcher that his own team could beat.

He finally picked up a young kid that no one seemed to know, but who said in a hesitating manner that he had played one or two games and would like to learn more of the game of baseball.

Well, Tom engaged him at once and laughed to himself with the hope that 99 would give this busher something he wouldn't want again and the game commenced. Strange to say, the unknown busher failed to blow up. He allowed the 99 boys but seven scattered hits; struck out seven of them and proved the great big feature of the game by hitting two home runs. These were long fly balls to left field that bounced over the fence. The final score was 8 to 1 in favor of San Diego and the young bush pitcher turns out to be a boy named Ferris from Santa Barbara.

The teams will play again this afternoon. Tom Stevens may dig up another bush pitcher, but just ask him what he thinks of the one he did locate.

LIPTON IS ANXIOUS.

Tea Merchant Will Build Ninety-foot Yacht if Any Designer Will Draw Plans.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LONDON, Sept. 28.—The officers of the Royal Irish Yacht Club have decided that, instead of sending a reply to the New York Yacht Club, to call a meeting of the Irish club for October 2, at which time the answer of the American club to Sir Thomas Lipton's recent challenge for the America's cup will be fully considered. Sir Thomas expects to be present, and will explain what he is anxious to do in order to bring about another series of races for the cup, namely, to build a 90-footer under the new American rules.

He is so desirous of arranging for another contest that he said to the correspondent of the Associated Press today that he really believed, after all, he would challenge under the old rule if he could get a designer of note to plan a boat for him. He was afraid, however, that it was impossible to get any man whose boat would have any chance of winning, to do the work, as all those he had spoken to took the same view of the matter as William Fife, who says it is useless to attempt to recapture the cup with a freak boat, which would have to be sailed across the Atlantic, and under no circumstances would he undertake to design such a yacht.

AN UNEQUALED

OPPORTUNITY

The NEW YORK MAIL says:

"A strike of shipping ore has just been made in the workings of the Nevadan Mining Company working on the Florence. The ore was found in a winze 110 feet east of the shaft at the 200-foot level. The ore body is 3 feet wide in which the pay streak shows to the extent of 18 to 24 inches. 12 inches gave an average assay of $71, while 6 inches returned $1600. It will be seen that an average of $100 will be easily maintained."

Next to the Nevadan lease on the west is the famous Reilly lease, which produced $1,000,000 in gold in 90 days. On the north and adjoining is the ground of the Florence Leasing & Mining Co. They are making heavy shipments of ore running from $100 to $300 a ton. The Nevadan lease has this same vein and conditions warrant the assurance of the same grade and quantity of ore within 30 days.

That development may be pushed to the utmost in opening the known reserves of the mine within the time of the lease, the Nevadan Mining Company has consented to the management placing stock sufficient to accomplish this end at the low price of ten cents per share; and as only a few thousand dollars will be required, which when secured will cancel this sale, reservations should be promptly made by wire or letter to insure delivery.

No salaries. Every dollar goes into the mine. Three shifts of men are working daily.

Help take out the gold and share the profits. You cannot afford to lose the chance. Send in your orders for stock at once. We believe it will be worth fifty cents in 60 days.

THE CITY IN BRIEF

BREVITIES.

There is more satisfaction to pay for a hat like you want, a reasonable price, according its actual value, than an imaginary fancy figure, which is necessary on account of high expenses. By avoiding these high expenses it is possible for Mrs. Kruseman, milliner, 1302 Pico, corner Rich, to charge only according to quality and quantity of materials used and always strictly first class work done, consequently to be always reasonable. Mrs. Kruseman has an established reputation for perfect order work through her European experience and shows this by taking all responsibility, so that ladies ordering, not only do not run any risk whatever, but besides, have the benefit of always reasonable prices. Mrs. Kruseman gives the same careful attention to all her work, new or retrimming, and is through close family relations in Paris, always thoroughly posted.

Features perfected, wrinkles and facial blemishes painlessly removed. Hollow cheeks, thin neck, arms, hands, shoulders and busts rounded out to perfection by the only flesh building tissue strengthening chemical fat ever discovered by advanced chemistry and science. It stands alone preëminently in this advanced age. It will positively build flesh in any part of the body one desires to have filled out. It matters not whether you are ill or well. Saddleback and deformed noses, scars, indents, receding chins, double chins and sagged faces corrected without pain or detention. Noses molded to fit nose glasses. All work guaranteed. TIP FOR HUNTERS.

"Nigger Slough," for years the favorite haunt of duck hunters, no longer is open to the casual man with a gun. The general public is debarred from hunting on the slough through the fact that it has been leased to the Dominguez Gun Club and the Gardena Gun Club, members of which hereafter will be the only ones permitted to enjoy duck shooting on the great marsh just south of Gardena.

With the opening of the duck season on Tuesday, it is likely that scores of hunters, accustomed to making free use of these grounds, will make their way thither, only to run up against the warnings posted by the clubs to which the slough is under lease.

The Lowest Price Steinway Pianos

Steinway Vertegrand $525

Steinway Miniature Grand $800

The lowest price Steinway Pianos are the Vertegrand at $525 and the Miniature Grand at $800.

These prices are absolutely net—except a 2 per cent cash discount—and even this does not apply when a second-hand piano is taken in exchange.

So general is the practice of cutting prices on pianos that you will be surprised that we quote you a price and stand by it, regardless of argument. We absolutely refuse to consider any price other than that first quoted.

If you are not prepared to pay these prices for the Steinway Piano, there is no need to waste your time or ours.

Our prices are exactly the same as those charged by Steinway & Sons in New York City—to these prices we add $25 on uprights and $50 on grands—the actual cost of freight and handling. You can verify our prices by reference to any of the standard magazines—where you will find the Steinway advertisements containing prices and illustrations as above.

If you want a Steinway piano you must make up your mind to pay the price—a proposition from which there is no appeal.

HOLED.

WITH WORKERS' CHEERS GREAT TASK FINISHED.

Last Shovelful of Cement Laid on the Million-Dollar Outfall—City's Triumph.

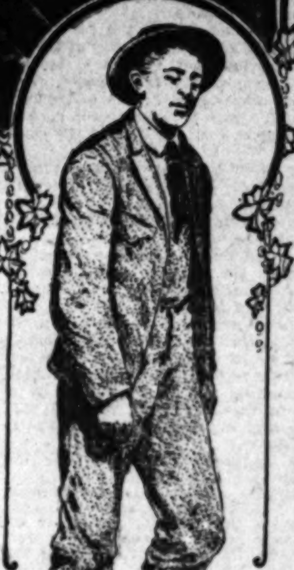
THE last shovel of concrete was laid yesterday in the outfall sewer; bricklayers are closing the final gap in the arched roof of the great tunnel; within thirty days sewage will be flowing through the new $1,000,000 conduit to the sea.

Four years have been consumed in building this immense brick and concrete subway that is to give to Los Angeles its first gravity sewer to the ocean. Its vicissitudes have been marked; it has made and broken politicians, contractors and supply houses; the final completion of the work is a triumph of brains over politics, mind over matter.

In estimating the cost of the outfall the first engineers fell short about half a million dollars; an overrated deputy in the engineer's office laid out a grade for the tunnel section almost thirty feet below the water level in the Inglewood highlands.

In 1903 a bond issue of $1,000,000 was voted to build the outfall and main laterals. This sum was considered ample by the engineering experts then employed by the city. The expense of the sewer and main laterals is now estimated at $1,600,000; if the suits pending are decided against the city this cost will be increased to $2,000,000.

Against this record of extravagance and mismanagement one fact stands forth in bold relief. A year ago City Engineer Hamlin presented to the Board of Public Works an estimate of the time necessary to complete the outfall, and of the probable cost, including material to be used. The finishing touches are now being put to the conduit. The work will be completed six weeks within the time limit, and several thousand dollars under the estimate of cost.



Last Touches on Conduit to Sea.

Top view shows final dab of concrete going into the tunnel, City Engineer Hamlin and Foreman Phil Grohs looking on. In the middle picture workmen are closing the only remaining gap. Assistant Engineer A. G. Hansen, below, was estimating the number of days that must elapse before sewage runs to the ocean when sketched.

For this the Board of Public Works deserves equal credit. During the last eleven months it has stood as a bulwark between the politicians and the outfall, and the wire-pulling and log-rolling have never reached the sewer.

POLITICS, AUCTION, DELAY.

When the city first advertised for bids on the outfall a number of local contractors entered into a combine and made an offer almost $200,000 greater than their private estimate. Their scheme was exposed, and the contract readvertised. Then the combine bid $120,000 under its first offer. Securing the contract, the different firms met and auctioned off the building of the sewer. The successful firm bid $60,000 of the privilege of digging the sewer for $565,000, so members of the combine allege now.

The political brick makers came and held back the construction work for six months, trying to deliver third-grade brick under first-grade specifications. While this was going on a portion of the tunnel caved for want of brick; this necessitated further delay, and laid the foundation for claims against the city, yet unsettled. Finally the political brickmakers closed their kilns, leaving the city in the lurch.

After working for two years and drawing more than $300,000 from the city, the original contractors flunked in the tunnel section, and for a time it looked as though the whole sewer scheme would have to be abandoned. For six months the still unseasoned Board of Public Works bemoaned the city's misfortune and the sewer waited.

Finally, when the clouds were the darkest, the board secured a City Engineer and an assistant who are trained, practical men—Homer Hamlin and A. C. Hansen.

Hamlin and Hansen are finishing the outfall six weeks within the time estimate, and several thousand dollars within their estimate of expense. Experts who have inspected the work say it is the greatest sewer in the West.

MILLIONS AND THOUSANDS.

The estimated cost of the outfall, including the finishing touches, is $1,229,000. It is twelve miles long and contains a tunnel two and a quarter miles in length.

In building the outfall 55,500 barrels of cement and 18,000,000 brick have been used.

The sewer has a capacity of 50,000 miner's inches. As this is 25,000 greater than the city's total water supply, it is plain that the sewer will be adequate for a number of years.

City Engineer Hamlin says that Providence has apparently taken a hand in finishing the outfall; the old outfall is almost out of commission; with the first rains it will cave in in a hundred places. But for the completion of the new outfall the city would be without a sewer this winter.

Health Officer Powers says the new outfall is a godsend; that it would have been hardly possible for the city to go through another year with present sewer facilities and avoid an epidemic.

The old outfall carries but a portion of the sewage at the present time; hundreds of inches is given away to ranchmen because there is no place for it in the outfall. As soon as the new sewer is finished no sewage will either be sold or given away by the city; all will flow through the big conduit to the sea.

DIFFICULT CONSTRUCTION.

At times 600 men were employed on the outfall. The tunnel section proved to be one of the most difficult pieces of construction ever attempted in the West. The Inglewood hills are underlaid by an underground watercourse leading to the sea; the earth proved to be quicksand and water-bearing gravel, and the cost of caring for this water while the tunnel was building equaled the cost of labor and material going into the tunnel.

Stansbury & Powell, the original contractors, built the first 33,000 feet of the tunnel—the dry part. The City Engineer finished the remaining 73,000 feet through the wet section.

In building the outfall the city furnished all the brick and cement; it has paid $150,000 for the cement and $118,000 for the brick.

The city paid Stansbury & Powell $336,800 on their contract for the work they did on the outfall. The contract specifies that one-fourth the cost should be held back until the work is finished; the contractors claim the city still owes them $112,000.

The original contract for construction work was for $565,000; eliminating the price paid for material, the sewer has still cost $150,000 more than that. The city will try to hold the contractors and their bondsmen for this $150,000. These counter-claims will doubtless form the basis for suits in court that will last almost as long as the outfall.

Commissioners of the Board of Public Works speak in terms of highest commendation of the work on the outfall under the direction of City Engineer Hamlin and his assistant, Engineer A. C. Nelson. They say the early completion of the outfall is due to the efficient management of these two men. Hansen is praised for the way he has handled the workmen; there have been no strikes, no disturbances and, some say, not an idle man on the outfall.

LAST DAB, THREE CHEERS.

The City Engineer went to Inglewood yesterday to witness the placing of the last shovel of cement in the tunnel. This was laid by Philip Grohs, foreman of the concrete construction crew. The men gathered at the bottom of shaft No. 20 and gave three cheers when the cement went in, although they knew that these cheers ended their jobs on the outfall.

Most of the workmen have registered for places on the Owens River aqueduct. Members of the Board of Public Works say they will endeavor to re-

BEACH YIELDS TREASURE.

Rare Collection of Prehistoric Relics Is Unearthed at Spring Near Redondo.

Rare prehistoric relics have just been unearthed on the ocean shore between Redondo and Fisherman's Cove. The finds include a small but exceedingly smooth blue stone mortar and pestle, half a dozen cylindrical stone beads, seven arrowheads, two life-like carved bone fishes, and an awl or dagger of what seems to be seal bone.

The find was made by F. C. Morse of Scranton, Pa., at a small spring where good soft water trickles from the rocky bluff and loses itself in the sands. Above the spring the bank slopes back gradually to the level of the mesa, changing from soft stone to dry soil, which is constantly crumbling and being swept away by the winds and winter storms.

Just above the spring, and a foot or so below the top of the bank, Mr. Morse found the mortar, partly exposed by a slip of the soil. A few inches back of it he dug out the other objects.

Dr. F. M. Palmer, Curator of the Southwest Museum, says the mesa near this spring was the home of many people in olden times, as was every place along the beaches and mesas. water was found. There he secured part of the collection now at the Chamber of Commerce.

"Our whole coast line is rich in fossils, prehistoric utensils, and ornaments," says Dr. Palmer. "By keeping their eyes open, interested persons may make many interesting finds along the beaches and mesas.

DOCTORS FORM ASSOCIATION.

HEALTH OFFICERS COMBINE TO KEEP MILK PURE.

Meeting of Physicians and Officials from All Southern California Counties, Except Ventura, and Co-operation in Crusade Against Impure Milk and Plague Is Begun.

Impure milk and the bubonic plague are the bonds which have brought together the health officers of Southern California and at a meeting in the Angelus Hotel yesterday they formed an association which is intended to further coöperation between the health officers of the various cities and counties in conserving the public health, especially in regard to preserving the purity of the milk supply.

The organization was perfected yesterday afternoon with the election of Dr. C. C. Valle of San Diego president; Dr. Stanley P. Black, Pasadena, vice-president, and Dr. W. W. Roblee, Riverside, secretary-treasurer. It is proposed to hold annual meetings, or, in case of epidemic, to meet at the call of the chair.

An exceedingly interesting programme was discussed. Dr. Foster, secretary of the State Board of Health, who was to have spoken upon the spread of the bubonic plague, sent word he could not be present, but there was a general informal discussion regarding this menace and the work of the Marine Hospital Corps and of those now engaged in stamping out this dread disease, was commended. Especially the rats and their fleas should be destroyed everywhere.

One of the special objects of the formation of the association is to enable the health officer of one city to report to the health officers of another in regard to the supply of pure milk.

Dr. A. E. Rishel, chief inspector of the Bureau of Animal Industry, read a paper on "Veterinary Inspection and Tuberculin Testing of Dairy Cattle." Dr. George W. Hood, chief milk inspector of Los Angeles, spoke upon "Cleanliness of Milk; How it Can be Secured Through Inspection." Prof. E. H. Miller, city chemist, told of "Milk Standards, Simple Chemical Tests for Standards and Adulterations." Dr. L. M. Powers, city health officer, read an important paper upon "Diseases Conveyed Through Milk." Then followed a paper upon "Coöperation of State and County Medical Societies Towards Securing Pure Milk," by Dr. George H. Kress, secretary of the Pure Food Committee of the California State Medical Society. Dr. Stanley P. Black concluded the programme with a paper upon "Means Available Towards Securing a Pure Milk Supply."

All through the discussions which followed the physycians and health officers present laid great stress upon the absolute necessity for a pure milk supply for the cities of Southern California. All agreed that much of the disease engendered was traceable to impure milk, especially among children.

Those present were: Drs. Stafford and Kress and Messrs. Miller and Hood of Los Angeles; Drs. Black, Pasadena; Trueman, Fullerton; Hill, Carpinteria; Hurley, San Bernardino; Clarke, Santa Ana; Patten, Imperial; Mead and Valle, San Diego; Roblee, Baird and Mr. Campbell, Riverside; Jones, Long Beach, and Drs. Adams and Browning, Monrovia.

A constitution was adopted which permits the affiliation of all persons interested in the work to conserve public health.

EASTERN STAR TO ENTERTAIN.

Palestine Chapter, O.E.S., will entertain its friends Monday evening from 8 to 9 at Masonic Temple. Living pictures and progressive whist will be the attractions.

AGE LIMIT.

SAD HUNT FOR BABY ACTRESS.

But Young Lady Says She's "Sweet Sixteen."

School Officers Get Order to Search Theater.

Hard to Believe Little Girl Is "Growed Up."

"Oh Daphne Pollard, how old are you?"

"Sweet sixteen, and that is true."

But W. E. White and J. C. Reinhard, attendance officers of the Los Angeles city schools, are suspicious just the same. It appears that they won't take a lady's word as to her age. They think that Daphne is a child. The fact is she's an actress at the Los Angeles Theater, if you please, and takes a part in "The Bohemian Girl" at $40 per. Anyway her salary is not childish.

But then there is the child labor law to be observed and it is the duty of the attendance officers of the public schools to see to it that children, whether they receive fat salaries or not, attend to the business of getting an education.

Unfortunately for the public officers, the theater managers of Los Angeles, who held a warm meeting Friday afternoon and decided to Fight with a big "F," have not extended to the representatives of the city's educational system that distinguished consideration to which, as public officers, they are entitled.

Miss Daphne Pollard.

On the other hand the representatives of the Humane Society and the schools are "sore." They feel that every impediment possible has been placed in the way of their duty and they are asking no favors from the theater managers. The result is that where these antagonisms meet there is trouble like flying sparks.

MAKES-UP YOUNG.

Now Daphne's make-up is fetching as a little girl. An ordinary Humane Officer would swear she was no more than 7 years old, if he saw her on the stage. The report that it was a shame that such a little girl was permitted to work o' nights, reached the attentive ears of the Messrs. White and Reinhard and they proceeded to try and investigate.

This was last Wednesday evening, and they went to the theater, flashed their tin stars and demanded admittance. Nothing doing. The ticket-taker demanded tickets and they did not have any. They were referred to Manager Lotto. A red rag would have pleased him more. He refused to permit them to enter, even denied their right to investigate under the circumstances, actually threatened to "fire" them out.

Thursday Manager Lotto received a call from City Prosecutor E. J. Fleming over the telephone. He wanted to know why the officers had not been permitted to do their duty and asserted that they would go through the theater even if he had to send a platoon of police to help 'em do it.

Lotto called up Chief Kern and gave his side of the case and asked about that platoon of police. Chief Kern, reports Lotto, replied that he was running the police department and that platoons were scarce and he needn't worry, or words to that effect. Lotto supposed that was the end of it all as the officers and police failed to materialize.

But yesterday morning White and Reinhard went before Judge Wilbur in the Superior Court and Attendance Officer Reinhard secured a court order permitting them to enter "all parts of the theater" in their search for a baby actress.

COULDN'T BELIEVE.

Armed with the order they invaded the sacred precincts of the manager's office just before the matinée was to begin. They presented their order, when Lotto refused to let them "raise a disturbance."

"Do you mean that you intend to enter the dressing-rooms of the women while they are changing their costumes?" demanded Lotto.

"That order means all parts of the theater," responded Reinhard.

"Well, I'll send for Miss Pollard,"

THE RUSH.

MORE TOURISTS COME, AND MORE COLONISTS.

Largest Movement Into Southern California Ever Known, Say Railroad Men—Significant Results of Wisely Directed Publicity.

"THERE never was a time before in all the years that I have been railroading when so many tourists and settlers were coming into Southern California in the early fall, as right now. There has never been a time in these years when we have had so many inquiries from the East about passenger rates and freight rates on household goods by eastern people intending to come here during the winter as are reaching our office every day during these current weeks.

"How do I account for it? In a general way by the well-known fact that we have here the real God's country, which is the heart's delight of all and to which all eyes are turned as an abiding place whenever circumstances will permit removal from the old eastern homes. The knowledge of the country is spreading all the time. More specifically I attribute this to the unusual amount of advertising done all over the East, and perhaps most of all to the work of the new organization known as the California Development Society, which has been spreading abroad most attractive advertising matter all over the country for the last few months."

This is the declaration made by T. C. Peck, general passenger agent of the Salt Lake railroad.

MR. BYRNE CONFIRMS.

"It is pretty early in the season to make definite statements about the future movement of tourists and settlers into Southern California for the winter," says J. J. Byrne, general passenger agent of the Santa Fé railroad system. "But it is easy to speak of the immediate present. We are bringing more people into the State at the present time than in any previous September since our railroad has been in operation. These people are coming in a great many instances with their household furniture either preceding them a day or two or following immediately after them on freight trains. This indication is plain that they are coming to stay.

"As to the prospects for the winter movement westward, we can only judge from the reports coming from our eastern offices. These are all of the most encouraging and satisfactory character. There are an unusually large number of people making inquiry from our agents all over the territory from which we mostly draw, the great central West, as to details of getting to California.

"How to account for it? We serve for the most part, as I have said, the great central West. That country was never before, since it was first opened up, anything like so prosperous as it is at the present time. The people there have been blessed with abundant crops for several years. These have sold at good prices and the farmers all through that region have abundance of money. When the farmers are doing well the merchants in their vicinity are also prosperous. The sale of goods has been unusually large in volume and merchants have made a good margin of profit out of their business. The manufacturing industries of the section are quite as prosperous as the farmers and the merchants. Besides this, there is an ever-widening amount of information going abroad about Southern California. In every way, through direct advertisements, by newspapers sent back by people living here, and by tens of thousands of letters people are becoming more thoroughly informed about these conditions."

M. H. Martin, district passenger agent of the Southern Pacific, expressed practically the same views about the present inflow of new population into Southern California and the prospects for the future. Both the passenger and freight departments of the Southern Pacific report a heavier travel westward than in any previous year at so early a date in the season and the number of cars of household goods arriving at the present time is unusually heavy. This road reports a particularly heavy movement of tourists and home-seekers from Texas and that southwestern section of the country.

STILL THEY COME.

The transcontinental freight organizations and the van and storage companies, which are in close touch with this movement of tourists and settlers, one and all give out information exactly similar to that coming from the railroad companies. They are in constant receipt of an unusually large number of inquiries as to the details to follow in shipping household goods from all over the eastern country to Los Angeles.

The hotel-keepers tell the same story. Wherever you go among the hotel-keepers of Los Angeles or those at the beaches or throughout Southern California generally, you hear the same optimistic tale of the summer, of the fall and of the prospects for the future. The beaches have had an unusually prosperous season in the way of visitors from outside our own immediate section. The mining regions of the adjacent Territories from Salt Lake to El Paso have all poured an unusually copious flood of visitors into these beach towns. They have come from even farther north, reaching up as far as Montana and even into the Dominion of Canada.

The story is not new. It is only the same old story in a much more expanded and impressive form. Southern California is the creature of publicity. Never before was there a section of country possessed of such an enthusiastic population as this. The enthusiasm has been the natural growth of the exceedingly attractive conditions surrounding life in this country of beautiful scenes, of mild climate, all enhanced by the unusually high character of the people attracted here from the beginning until now. This enthusiasm, inspired by fine climate, lovely scenes and good neighborship, was too much to be locked up in the average human breast. We have all had to tell of these things to our people back East. The press of Southern California has been as loyal to the section and as enthusiastic about its attractions as the mass of the people.

The business men of Los Angeles recognize that this publicity has been expanded in a most effective and judicious manner during recent months by the newly organized California Development Society. The great point of excellence in this organization is the fact that it is under the immediate direction of a large number of the leading business men of Southern California. It embraces in its directorate prominent railroad officials, hotel-keepers, financiers and other business men of Los Angeles and Southern California. It is supported by a very large number of the most intelligent, progressive and upright citizens all through this region. The affairs of the association are kept closely in hand by this directorate of business men of large experience and of thorough integrity. The funds pass through the hands of a treasurer, a banker of this city, in whose integrity and judgment the whole community has the utmost confidence. All expenditures are made under the advice and supervision of these citizens, and the accounts are carefully audited by competent business men.

ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY.

There is no haphazard work about the management of this association. It is no individual's affair. There is no large sum spent on luxurious offices or figure-head officials. There is no opportunity for any person to graft upon the funds contributed for the support of the association and the carrying on of its work. The advertising has all been done in a most effective and judicious manner in well-established and legitimate newspapers and magazines in those sections of the country where the largest results are likely to come from the expenditure of each dollar. At least 90 per cent. of every dollar contributed by the business men for carrying on this excellent work goes directly to give publicity to California, its resources, climatic attractions, scenery and every element of life likely to draw new settlers to the State.

It is a recognized fact, confessed by those who have taken pains to ascertain, that a great deal of the tourist business which the beaches and other parts of the country have enjoyed during the past summer, the present fall and the numerous inquiries for the future, are directly due to the effectiveness with which this association has carried on its work of publicity. The California Development Society is drawing to its support week by week a larger number of the business men of all parts of the State. As the work progresses, we may expect to find the inflow of tourists and permanent settlers increasing in due proportion with the expansion of this excellent work.

THE BOOM IN PIOCHE.

Approach of Railroad Puts Old Camp in a Bustle of Improvement.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PIOCHE (Nev.) Sept. 26.—From Caliente to Panaca the railroad is completed, ballasted and fenced. It seems evident that the line is but the part of a long arm to stretch out to Ely and perhaps to the old camps of White Pine and Eureka, to say nothing of a dozen old camps now dead, but which will spring again to very active life under the stimulus which is awaiting them with the coming of the rail. These old camps, such as Bristol, Silver Park, Patterson, Silver King, Ward, Taylor and others, had each its period of activity in the early day, but finally languished and died because no mining camp can thrive long without a railroad.

Above Panaca the grade is completed to within three miles of this town. The camp fires of the graders seem to the people of old Pioche as inspiring a sight as the beacon light at the harbor mouth to a ship-wrecked mariner. For forty years they have been looking for them and hoping for them and often expecting them. Only a handful of men, all wrecks now upon the shore of time, were here in the day when that hope began.

The construction train is already five miles above Panaca and each day sees the front advanced about half a mile. It will be but very few days now before that also will be seen from the hills of Pioche.

Everywhere in town is seen the bustle of preparation. Twenty buildings of various kinds are in process of erection. Almost pathetic is the cry now for every variety of building material. Three hotels are going up. On one of the principal business corners grading is in progress for a two-story business structure of reinforced concrete. A new fire-proof building for a meat market is to be built immediately. In the list of new industrial enterprises planned are an ice plant and a steam laundry.

A few miles from Pioche is a marble quarry of exceptional excellence. A few weeks ago a Mr. Couch, a marble cutter of thirty years experience in all the principal marble fields of the country, came here, saw and tested the marble, recognized its importance and organized a company to develop it. Samples were sent to contractors in far distant cities. An order was placed for some to go to San Francisco to be used in erecting one of the finest structures to go up in the renaissance of that city. A building with marble front was planned for Pioche, to furnish its impressive object lesson of the varied resources of this region. Mr. Couch regarded the marble as especially excellent for monumental purposes and spent much time in carving a beautiful monument, which should illustrate its possibilities. But yesterday Mr. Couch died, and the headstone which he so elaborately carved will mark his last resting place.

To one who comes in here fresh from the great centers of commerce, filled with impressions made by falling stocks and financial apprehension, the general feeling which he finds here shared by all people is exhilarating. Instead of bewailing the fall of copper and the decline in lead, everybody seems to feel that for this section existing conditions will prove a distinct and lasting benefit. Mining men who need good miners now see a probability that they can get them. No one believes that the country is passing through a serious crisis. They think it is well that the tension of the speculative period should be relieved a little and that a readjustment now will be very beneficial. While it is true that this section is going to produce besides gold and silver, copper, lead and zinc, all mining men can vividly remember the time when even present prices for the last three metals would have been regardd as millenium. They know that the $7,000,000,000 to come from the crops will be spent in development, which will require lots of all three metals, and that every product of this camp will find a profitable market and probably a rising one by the time we are lined out and ready.

PRESCRIPTION FOR COMPLEXION AND SKIN FOOD MIXTURE.

The formula given below is said to be the most effective known to science for clearing the complexion and developing shrunken or hollow parts. It is in general use among the French society women who are renowned all over the world for their exquisite complexions. Procure from the druggist the following:

Two ounces of Rose Water; one ounce Spirits of Cologne; four ounces Sartoin (crystalized).

Put the Sartoin into a pint of hot water (not boiling) and when dissolved and cooled strain through a fine cloth; then add the Rose Water and Cologne Spirits.

This is to be applied daily to the face, neck and bust, and massage thoroughly into the skin. If the treatment is persistently used remarkable results will follow even for the worst complexion or roughest skin. The above formula is inexpensive and makes sufficient of the mixture to last a month.

GOOD TO SHIPPERS?

REBATE CASES ON TOMORROW.

SANTA FE AT BAR ON CHARGE OF GIVING FAVORS.

After Long Preliminary Skirmish, Trial of Railroad Company Will Begin in United States District Court on Ground That It Violated Regulations of Interstate Commerce.

After a preliminary skirmish lasting for many months, the first railroad rebate case to be tried in the local United States District Court will open tomorrow morning, with the Santa Fé company as defendant. It is expected that the trial will consume nearly two weeks. The government has summoned more than fifty witnesses. Ponderous books of accounts, ledgers and an immense pile of documentary evidence will be presented. If the railway company shall be found guilty, it is in the power of the court to impose a maximum fine running up into the millions.

The prosecution depends on the alleged giving of rebates to the Grand Cañon Lime and Cement Company, which, last year, billed hundreds of carloads of material from Nelson, Ariz., to the Ganahl Lumber Company of Redondo, and other dealers. The dealers are not involved.

It is contended that the tariff was fixed by the railroad company at $70 for each car, but that the consignee, instead of paying the full charges, was granted a concession. The method by which this was done was very simple, according to the pleadings in the complaint.

It is stated that the published schedule called for a rate of $3.50 a ton in quantities of not less than twenty tons (a carload) or $70 tariff for each carload of lime.

That the railroad company received less than $70 for each carload is the main contention. It is claimed that a waybill was forwarded with each carload to the receiving station agent. In the shipments referred to in the indictment, it is claimed, there was less than twenty tons in each car. Instead of collecting $70 for such cars, it is asserted that the agent received $3.50 per ton, giving a distinct advantage to the shipper.

The forthcoming trial will be extremely technical. On many points the government and the railway company agree. If the Federal authorities can prove the "corrections," which, in effect, rebated to the consignor a part of the scheduled rate, it will mean victory for the prosecution. But the Santa Fé officials will not rest with a decision in the District Court. If it be found guilty of a violation of the interstate commerce regulations the case will be carried to the Supreme Court.

United States District Attorney Oscar Lawler will head the list of prosecuting attorneys, and the Santa Fé undoubtedly will have a strong array of legal talent.

Ore from Constantinople.

It isn't often that ore is sent thousands of miles for an assay in these days when assayers are found in every city of consequence, yet there came through the mails only a few days ago to James Irving, refiner and assayer of Los Angeles, a package from faraway Constantinople, Turkey, accompanied by a letter requesting an analysis of the sand. The letter, written in French, is from Karnik H. Manoukian, who probably will be delighted with the report sent him by Mr. Irving that the ore shows good value in gold and silver. Mr. Irving says his advertisement in The Times undoubtedly was the means of attracting the attention of Mr. Manoukian.

CALIFORNIA OSTRICH RANCHES

The first of our chain of Ostrich Ranches on the Pacific Coast will be established at San Diego. Negot tions for the purchase of the Bentley Ostrich Farm in that city have resulted in our obtaining an opti on Bentley's Farm, Birds and Factory, which will be taken over and title passed to us about the first of October, when we shall enter upon the active business of conducting the first of our proposed ranches. Mr. W. H. Bentley, who established the San Diego Farm, in 1884, will be retained as manager. Mr. Ben ley is the greatest living expert on the Ostrich raising industry in the United States.

Prodigious Profits

Each pair of birds produces an average of thirty-six eggs a year. The average hatch of chicks is 25 per cent, nine chicks a year. The ostrich eggs which do not hatch are not wasted, since the shells are in great demand as souvenirs. Each bird yields an average weight of plumes of one and one-half pounds a year. At the age of nine months the chicks yield as fine a crop of plumes as a full grown ostrich. These plumes are sold at $250 a pound. EACH BIRD, THEREFORE, EARNS IN PLUMAGE ABOUT $375 A YEAR.

Every tourist who comes to California visits the Ostrich Ranches, and the admission fees alone practically pay all expenses of feeding, care and maintenance. Nearly every visitor will purchase a plume direct from the factory, at from $5 to $50. This is independent of the sales to California residents who patronize this home industry to the extend of thousands of dollars a year. The profits from sale of plumes and eggs is positive, permanent and prodigious.

Business Administration

The company has been incorporated under the name THE CALIFORNIA OSTRICH RANCHES, and its org zation has been completed by election of the following ficers:

President—Horace Wilson, formerly president Merc tile Loan & Trust Co.

Secretary—C. E. Wood, manager Overland Monthly azine.

Treasurer—F. A. Anderson, vice-president Industrial vestments Co.

Directors—R. P. Boyer, cashier Mercantile Bank Trust Co., Dalas, Tex., and H. E. Folkenson, director dental Trust & Savings Bank, Los Angeles.

The plans of the company comprise:

First—To maintain, operate and enlarge the San Ostrich Ranch and Factory.

Second—To equip and operate a model Ostrich on the foothill boulevard just outside of Oakland.

Third—To open a salesroom for retailing plumes in city of San Francisco.

To consumate the second and third features of our we are offering stock for subscription.

This is absolutely the first opportunity ever offered to the public to become part owners of an Ostrich Raising Business. OSTRICH RAISING PA BETTER HERE IN CALIFORNIA THAN ANYWHERE ELSE IN THE WORLD. The bird grows larger and healthier in Cilfornia climate than where. They produce finer plumes than in their native land. They live longer, fewer young ones die, they lay more eggs and their chicks mature quickly.

The Ostrich Raising business pays prodigious profits, which come not only from sale of produce, but also from the Ostrich Ranch as a show taking in thousands of dollars per annum in gate money. Where else can you find AN INDUSTRY WHICH PAYS FOR ITSELF AS AN EXHIBIT LEAVING THE SALE OF ALL PRODUCTS AS PURE PROFIT?

This is a business which is attractive from every point of view. Women especially would like to embark in it, but until now it has been practi impossible. Private individuals have made fortunes out of the business and retired to private life to live upon an income for the rest of their This enterprise deserves full investigation and should attract popular investment.

HAPPY YEARS OF CLUB LIFE.

Woman's Parliament Reunion Promises Much Joy.

"Sweet Sixteen" Programme Full of Novelties.

Many of the First Officers Will Tell of Work.

The year that saw the birth of the Federation of Women's Clubs of America also saw the formation of the Woman's Parliament of Southern California, eight years before the California Federation of Women's Clubs was born. Now the parliament is sixteen years old, and intends to celebrate the anniversary next Wednesday afternoon in a fitting manner. The sessions of the parliament begin Tuesday morning, but the heart of the convention will lie in the "Sweet Sixteen" programme under the direction of the first president and founder, Mrs. Daniel G. Stephens.

Those who were present or contributed to the first programme sixteen years ago have been invited to be present Wednesday afternoon to take part. Especially have the original officers been invited to participate. These are Mrs. Stephens, Mrs. Frank Gibson, Mrs. Sarah Judson and Mrs. Lucy A. Blanchard, who succeeded Mrs. Judson after a few months in the office of treasurer.

Mrs. Kate Tupper Galpin was one of the original group, and her memory will be kept green by a special memorial number to be given by Mrs. Fred Fay. The county officers who were appointed by the first parliament have been reached, as far as possible, and there will be a notable gathering of the clans.

SILVER TRUMPET WILL SOUND.

Assembly singing of "Auld Lang Syne" will inaugurate the afternoon exercises, after which Mrs. Blanchard will sound the silver trumpet, "for the calling of the assembly and the moving of the camp." "The Tale of the Trumpeter" will be told by Miss Henrietta B. Freeman, who reported the proceedings of the first parliament for The Times. Mrs. Abigail Crane will give a musical toast to "Sweet Sixteen." The piece de resistance will consist of "The Book of the Chronicles, from Elvira's Line to Mary's," by Mrs. Stephens, Elvira, referring to the first president, Mrs. Stephens, and Mary, to the present bright executive, Mrs. O. Shepherd Barnum.

Miss Lawrence will sing "Work for the Night Is Coming," to precede "In Memoriam," in honor of Mrs. Galpin, by Mrs. Fay. "As the Sagas Say" will be the next number, by Mrs. R. V. Haddon, Miss Smyser singing "Only a Standard Bearer." "As Others Saw Us" will be given by Dr. Belle Reynolds, and a quartette from the Lyric Club will sing "The Girl I Left Behind Me." Mrs. W. W. Murphy will contribute "Reflections from Our Brightest Speaker," and the quartette will sing "Last Night." "Just a Few Words" will come from Mrs. J. A. Osgood, and Mrs. J. W. Osgood will follow with "Mary of Argyle."

PROGRAMME'S WIND-UP.

The remainder of the programme will include "Potpourri," by Mrs. J. J. Kiggins; "Mighty Lak a Rose," by the quartette; "The Virtues of Our Vices," by Mrs. J. D. Gibbs; "Dixie," by the quartette; "The Scroll of the First Scribe," by Mrs. Mary S. Gibson; "Prophecy," by the next president, with a musical number, "Hail to the Chief," and the whole affair will close with "America."

After the programme an informal reception in honor of the first officers of the parliament will be held. The four young women who will furnish the vocal numbers are Misses Willy Smyser, Jessica Lawrence, Pearl Teetzel and Kie Christitan. As many societies and clubs do not resume their meetings until October, delegates elected for the last session of the parliament are expected to serve at this event, or personally secure the appointment of a substitute.

Name Is Changed.

Word has gone out to all of the representatives of the Thomas cars that hereafter cars made by the E. R. Thomas Detroit Company will be known as the Thomas Detroit instead of the Thomas Forty. The change is made, it is explained, primarily for the purpose of avoiding the confusion between the names Thomas Forty and Thomas Flyer that has been apparent during the past year. Both cars are distinctive in design and are made in separate plants, the Thomas Detroits in a new steel and concrete building in Jefferson avenue, Detroit, and the Flyers at Buffalo. The Detroit Thomas cars are, however, marketed by the E. R. Thomas Motor Company of Buffalo.

By His Majesty's permission a portrait of King Edward has been added to the emblem of the Royal Motor Club of Great Britain.

HUNT FOR ACTRESS.

said the manager, and Daphne came at the call.

She told the officers that she was 16 years old last August, that she was born in Australia and had been in this country about two months. They finally acknowledged that Daphne might be 16. But she is small and not particularly well developed for her age, at that age. She is traveling with her sister, Ivy Pollard, also an actress and 20 or more.

Then Daphne retired and made up as an infant. The officers entered the auditorium, but were refused permission to take a seat. They saw Daphne and could not believe it was her. The child on the stage; well, she simply "couldn't be" the same girl they had been talking to. She must be a "ringer."

They insisted upon going back on the stage. They went, after Manager Lotto said he would have them arrested if they created any disturbance or interfered with the business of the theater.

"Your order gives you the right to enter the theater, but not to create a disturbance," he said.

They saw Daphne come off the stage. Still they were not satisfied and said that they would investigate.

Last evening Mr. White stated that there was little to say in connection with the matter and would not say whether Manager Lotto had threatened them or not.

"We went to the theater with an order of court in fulfillment of our duty and that is all I can say. I suppose you got the story from Manager Lotto."

Mr. White said he did not want anything published about it as there was no story to it. But Daphne says she needs all the money she is making and don't want to be fined.

"Anyway, I'm 16 years old and they can't fine me," she asserts.

SAD ANATOMY LESSON.

J. V. Valdo, 61 years old, a professor of anatomy, was taken to the Receiving Hospital yesterday afternoon, suffering from ptomaine poisoning. He became ill while leaving a Fifth-street restaurant. At the hospital he became deranged, and wept and prayed and attempted to tear his clothes from his body. The surgeons say that the professor was discharged a short time ago from the County Hospital.

The accidental crossing of wires created a short circuit and caused the ringing of an alarm yesterday from the corner of First and Alameda streets. All of the downtown apparatus responded.

CALIFORNIA TAFT CLUBS.

Straw votes taken by The Times in Los Angeles and many cities of the State, as well as in the agricultural districts, show conclusively that the preponderating sentiment of the Republicans of California is in favor of the nomination of Mr. Taft for the Presidency, in view of the fact that Roosevelt cannot be induced to run again.

These votes have been taken haphazard without the slightest thought of securing an expression inclined in any particular direction. It is significant that there has been a very large majority for Taft in each instance. Other signs and tokens point the same way. California is for Taft.

The Times now hears that active Taft clubs will be organized in various sections of the State. Several have already been started. In some cases they take the name of "Roosevelt-Taft" clubs, which is appropriate.

It will assure good results if this movement spreads, and spreads rapidly, if enterprising Republicans take it up earnestly. The thing to do is to make certain that the wishes of the Republicans of California are reflected in the national convention. This object could not be achieved in a better way than by the organization of working Taft clubs with watchful officers.

The Espee machine in this State has not yet revealed its purposes. It manifests no signs of activity. There are rumors that it will be antagonistic to any candidate representing the Roosevelt policies, but will get in its work under cover.

The organization of Roosevelt-Taft clubs will keep in line many well-meaning Republicans who might otherwise be deceived by sly bosses and led into ways which they do not really wish to tread.

Of course, these Taft clubs should be broad in their scope. They should invite the coöperation of every true-blue Republican who believes in Roosevelt and believes in Taft. They should not be "exclusive" organizations. They should not be tails to any private or personal kite. They should not be used to promote the interest of some self-seeker, like Dannie Ryan of San Francisco, whose real ambition, while masquerading as a reformer, is to become a boss by getting into the shoes of some other boss. They should not be factional, but should represent the Republican party as a whole.

If the Taft clubs are organized in a spirit of sincerity, and go about their business in the right way, they will aid materially in giving California a proper representation in the national convention, and, more important still, in keeping the State in the Republican column in 1908.

FIERCE AND RELIGIOUS RIVALRY.

"Africa is destined to prove the graveyard of England." So said the first Napoleon.

"Let me once again reiterate my firm conviction that the next twenty years will see Europe struggling in the throes of an African war against forces so great that at the end it is unlikely to a degree that a single white man remains in Africa." These are the words of H. A. Wilson, a captain in the British army, who writes in the Nineteenth Century Magazine for September, under the title "The Moslem Menace—One Aspect of Pan-Islamism."

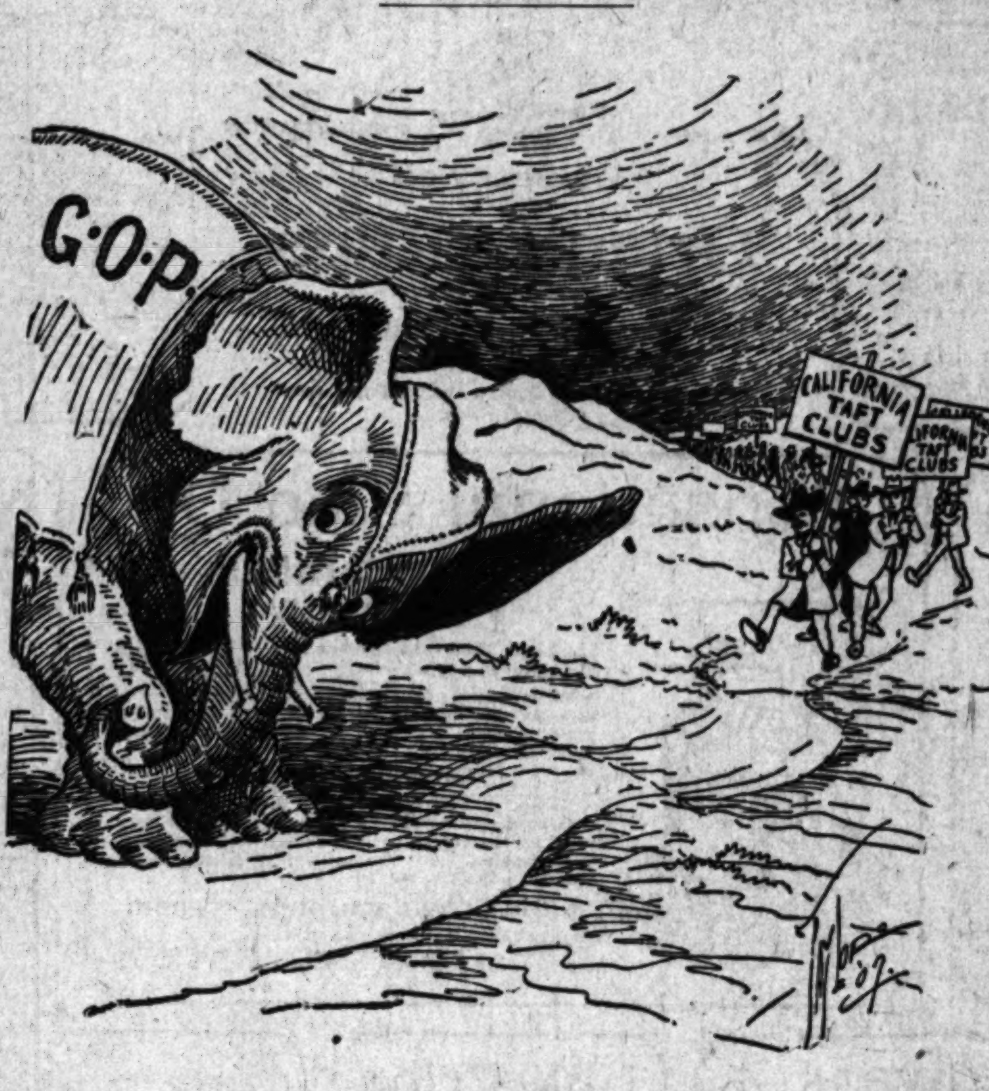
Capt. Wilson is thoroughly familiar with conditions in Mohammedan countries generally and in Africa particularly. In this notable article he disclaims all intention of being an alarmist or writing from a sensational point of view. Yet the quotation above certainly is alarming and quite sensational.

In support of his views, this British captain tells us of a Mohammedan organization which has been in existence for more than three-quarters of a century and yet about which scarcely anything is known, even by the administrators of Great Britain in Mohammedan countries. This organization is the "Senussia." The writer says: "The influence of the Senussia is both extensive and far-reaching, and being bitterly anti-European is likely—nay, almost certain—to become the source of great anxiety and danger in the future." He quotes the celebrated Dr. Carl Peters, one of the best-informed authorities on African subjects, to the effect that this organization will in the end result in the total expulsion of the white man from Africa. Its policy is to act, not on impulse or the spur of the moment. The motto of the association is, "Wait, for the time is not yet ripe. Rest now, but when the hour arrives, rise, slay, and spare not."

How well this motto has been lived up to appears from the fact that the association was formed in 1835. It has carried on its work in absolute secrecy from that day to this. It was founded by an Algerian Arab and takes its name from his. His teaching was that the mahdi prophesied by Mohammed is sure to come at some future time and rallying all the forces of Islam under his banner, will free Mohammedans from the yoke of the "infidel" and reunite them once more under their religion thoroughly reformed to the principles of the prophet originally. In fact, this mahdi is to be a reincarnation of the prophet himself.

This whole territory is at the present time honeycombed with organizations of the Senussia. The third head of the organization is now ruling over it, all descendants of Mohammed himself.

AN EAR TO THE GROUND.



The present headquarters of the organization is at Jarabub, which lies between Egypt and Benghazi. Capt. Wilson says of that city, from which the Senussia works, "No European foot has so far trodden its streets and no European eye has lighted on its walls." Many have tried to penetrate to this fastness of the organization, but they are always intercepted long before they reach sight of the city and turned back by the spies maintained by the organization. Here there has been established a manufactory of arms and of ammunition. This is continually in operation and the members of the Senussia are supplied with arms of precision and abundant ammunition. The sub-organizations all over the territory have depots of arms which are maintained in secrecy. Their members are found in great numbers in the native soldiery of Great Britain and France. The author of the article says that 75 per cent. of the native British troops in Africa belong to the Senussia. According to the writer, every disturbance from Somaliland to Egypt during the last twenty or thirty years, both against the English in Africa and the French in Africa, has been excited by the secret influences of this society. Its organization is as thorough as that of Free Masonry and the members have perfect facility for communicating with one another in secret. The purpose of the leaders is to wait until England or France, or both these powers, may be engaged in some fierce war and then to give the signal for a "jehad" or holy war, which is to drive every "infidel," and that includes every white man, from African soil. The article says:

"When the time does come every black skin in Africa, with the possible exception of the Christian Abyssinians, will be in arms against the white races. When that day does come, and come it will certain as fate, the whites in Africa will be at death grips with one of the most formidable struggles of all time. A war of Moslem fanaticism rolling in countless numbers across the continent, composed of some of the very finest fighting material—if not the very finest—in the whole world, much of it trained to arms by Europeans, ably organized and led, gathering momentum at every step, there will spring into being one of the most irresistible forces the world will yet have seen. In a day there will have risen a situation compared to which the Indian mutiny and the Soudan campaign combined will be the smallest of incidents."

If the "jehad" which Capt. Wilson foreshadows should ever break out and involve the whole of the Dark Continent in a flame, it would not stop with Africa. There would be another Indian mutiny and the whole Mohammedan world would rise in one great concerted effort to shake off the yoke of the "infidel" and to deliver their people from contact and contamination with the "Christian dogs" whom they hold in such intensely bitter hatred.

This racial and religious fanaticism is aimed primarily at England and France in Africa, as the powers whose yoke the Mohammedan and the black man feel most severely. But there is involved in this hatred the whole white race and the Christian world.

LOS ANGELES AND THE MINING INDUSTRY.

An eastern capitalist, interested in Nevada mines, complains that Los Angeles "pays little attention to the golden districts lying at her door." That complaint is ever on the tip of the tongue of many a mining man; it is heard every day on the street when mining men meet to discuss their prospects and enterprises; it is flung into the face of every Angeleño who steps foot in certain camps.

If there is any ground for the complaint, will some one kindly state it specifically, that Los Angeles may know what she should do to console the unhappy ones? What is the nature of the attention desired by miners and withheld by Los Angeles?

It would be difficult to name a capitalist in Los Angeles who has not invested money in mining enterprises in the Southwest. Many of the best-known mines of Sonora, Arizona, Southern Nevada and California are operated by Los Angeles companies, with headquarters in this city. A Chamber of Mines has been established here to encourage and promote legitimate mining business, and it is supported by the business men of Los Angeles. There are three mining stock exchanges in the city, the latest in the field organized to meet the demand of Nevadans for a reliable market, and to eliminate bucket-shop wild-catting. A great many mining engineers, mineralogists and assayers are located here, and they are all busy. The merchants of Los Angeles trade with the mining districts and furnish them with machinery and supplies at fair prices.

Even wild-catters and fakers find so much interest in mining among the people of this city that they have no difficulty in unloading bogus stocks, worthless prospects and sagebrush town lots at fabulous prices. No city in the country has been worked and buncoed more thoroughly by fake mine promoters.

In what respect does Los Angeles fail to give attention to mining interests? Some complain that the press is negligent of mining news, but the critics fail to show wherein the news service is deficient. As a rule, nothing can be more worthless, inaccurate and misleading than the alleged news sent out by boomers of new mining camps. Nine-tenths of the stuff printed by some papers devoting pages daily to mining is moonshine or designed to induce people to invest in visionary schemes. Every ten-foot prospect hole from which an assay can be obtained is "another Comstock," or has Goldfield backed off the map. The Times prints all the mining news that it can get from reliable correspondents—and consigns to the waste basket columns of extravagant gush sent out by the "publicity bureaus" of boom camps, and correspondents paid to boost stock-jobbing deals. Is that the cause of the complaint about lack of attention to mining?

Perhaps it is not easy to sell to Los Angeles capitalists a prospect hole at the price of a proved mine. Possibly the reluctance of Los Angeles to pour money into gopher holes on the desert, or to buy all the stock that is advertised to make purchasers sinfully rich over night, is proof of lack of interest in the golden districts lying at her door. The easterner who makes that complaint, by the way, is associated with a very rich but erratic operator, whose name has been used freely to promote mining deals of more than questionable character.

Los Angeles is the logical center of southwestern mining interests, and it is to her advantage to encourage the business of mining in every way. Works for the reduction of ores would be of great advantage to the miners and to Los Angeles, and no doubt a smelter will be built near the city when capitalists become convinced that the enterprise will be profitable. But smelters are not built in a day, and a city does not become a center of any industry merely by talking about it.

The mining industry of the Southwest is a growth, and Los Angeles is growing with it. Perhaps if the impatient gold-diggers cease worrying about the matter and let the laws of trade work out the problem, Los Angeles will be found giving all the attention to them and their interests that they desire.

GOMPERS MAY ELECT TAFT.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has formally declared war upon Secretary Taft as a Presidential candidate. The first blank cartridge in the fight is an "editorial" covering five pages. The burden of the contention is that Mr. Taft is the standard-bearer of "government by injunction."

This declaration of Sam Gompers will go a long way toward securing to W. H. Taft the nomination of the Republican party. Once nominated, the louder the outcry raised by Gompers, the more votes will be cast for Taft in the November election of 1908.

This is not theorizing nor guessing. Last year this same Gompers set out to defeat Speaker Cannon as a Congressional nominee. He tried the same tactics against Congressman Littlefield of Maine and other Congressional nominees of the Republican party who had refused to put their conscience in the keeping of Mr. Gompers, to violate their oath of office and let Gompers dictate to them what legislation they should help to pass or to defeat.

Gompers's campaign is a matter of history. In every case the men on whom he made warfare were triumphantly elected. That is history. We say, therefore, that Gompers's opposition to Taft because of his record as a judge will go a long way toward securing his nomination and if he is nominated will make his election sure.

It would require seven years to build a new fleet of warships for the East. Well, the West waited a good deal longer than that.

CUT OFF THE HANGERS-ON.

If the responsible officers of the city have a genuine desire to economize they will immediately cut off any and all hangers-on in whatsoever departments they may be found.

No man should be permitted to keep a job for the sole reason that he has a job. If he is not of service, drop him from the pay roll.

Probably there are many job-holders whom heads of departments appointed merely to make places for them. Perhaps they were workers for some candidate for office. Maybe some "man higher up" fancied that he was under obligation to provide positions for them, at the city's expense, to pay off his political debts. Very likely there are sinecures to which pap-suckers have been assigned, just as a matter of custom. Every man-jack of this stripe should be weeded out. The city needs for legitimate and pressing demands every dollar nursed out to these parasites.

If a place-holder is efficient and faithful, his political services or affiliations should not militate against him. The question is one of value received by the city. But the pie-eater, the fellow who does little more than draw his salary, the man who sought and got a "sit" without regard to need or fitness—let the ax descend on these, all of them, no matter who squirms!

AUTUMN REVERIES.

These days and nights of autumn fill my heart
With strange and wistful longings, undefined
As faint, aerial haze of amethyst
Brooding and wafting o'er the quiet hills.

What sorrow is surprised with passing leaf?
What pain in the mere changing of the days
That flow like dream of joy to dim regret?

A sadness floats about the autumn world,
Like tender music, whose too lovely voice
Goes deep into my soul, and calls the tears.

And yet my minister of life is Pain,
The gentle-moving nun in evening grey;
For she it is that makes my hand to seek
The hands of other pilgrims, tired or lone;
And when her eyes look full into mine own
I feel the things of earth, I understand
The striving and the yearning of all men.

Come then, thou Spirit of Autumn, beautiful
With memory and thought and breath of prayer!
Give me thy bosom, through these pensive days,
And through these nights of moon-mist, wide and still.

RUBY ARCHER.

HOROSCOPE FOR THIS DAY.

Sunday, September 29, 1907.

Quiet and peaceful signs rule all this day.
To ways serene now let your footsteps stray.

The 272nd day of the year. The moon, twenty-two days old, is in the third quarter and north of the equator.

A most mild day, peaceful and kind, but negative for either great good or ill. The only positive omen this day is that quarrels are threatened between the sexes. Let both sexes beware of starting disputes in jest this day. They are altogether likely to be misunderstood.

In the coming week there will be a scene of violence and deadly attack in the Far East. In Washington a diplomatic complication will grow acute. In New York there is threatened serious news, arriving from the direction of the sea.

Those whose birthday this is will meet with a puzzling situation during the year. The correct solution will offend their self-love, but to overcome their vanity will mean great gain.

The boy born today will inherit money to a small amount from one now quite unknown to the family. He will be too fond of the opposite sex. The girl born today will need only slight guidance to become an ornament to her sex. She will have many good proposals, but will probably not marry till late in life. She should be allowed and encouraged to read a great deal in youth.

Have You Ever Thought of Units of Business Property

As an investment offering safety
And income they are unequalled

When people think of investing money they naturally think about mortgages, bonds, stocks or the various kinds of real estate. These forms of investment come first to mind because they have long been before the public as a means of investing money. Naturally are not thought of by those who do not know anything about them. Therefore, the Associated Trustee Companies make every effort to acquaint the investing public with Units of Business Property and with their superiority over all other forms of investment. These Units are created by these companies only, therefore the investor can look to these companies only for full and accurate information.

The Trustee Company of Los Angeles, like the Trustee Companies in other cities, improves valuable, centrally-located, business ground with a modern, dividend-paying store and office building, and divides the ground and building into fractional parts (Units) for general investment so that small as well as large investors can own parts of one or more properties. This is called "Unit Ownership" and is better than stocks or bonds for the reason that a Unit is a title and after a definite number of Units are created and filed on record no more can be issued. The Trustee Company simply acts as trustee or manager of the property for the Unit Owners.

Take for example Trustee Property No. 2 (Broadway Central Building, 424-426-428 South Broadway). The ground and building is valued at $525,000 by The Trustee Company, which paid its own money for this property and conveys to the buyer of Units a clear and unencumbered title. There are 525 Units created by law and certified to by a reliable trust and title company. These Units will pay Unit Owners 8 per cent. or better, plus as much more increase value. The Trustee Company had sufficient faith in the value and earning power of this property to put its own money into it before offering any Units for sale. Therefore, it can conscientiously recommend these Units to the investors.

Units of Business Property are the best investment because:
They never pass a dividend day;
They constantly increase in earning power;
They steadily grow in value;
They are unaffected by the speculative world.

The Lancer.

SOMETHING more than two years ago—in June, 1905, to be exact—I wrote and published these words: "It is no accident of political circumstance, it is by law of heredity and natural succession that Philadelphia is today the most squalidly debased of American cities, the community most destitute of civic conscience and pride of citizenship. There is no more patriotism in that sordid community now than there was in 1776, when the Pennsylvania delegation voted against the Declaration of Independence because separation from England would injure the commercial interests of Pennsylvania."

Some natives of that State complained that the words were harsh and not warranted by the facts, but they were true words, nevertheless.

Owen Wister, a Philadelphian himself, telling in Everybody's the story of the theft of millions in the furnishing of the Capitol by Gov. Pennypacker and the old Quay gang, a story of crime brought out by investigation this year, says this of his own people:

> The people of Pennsylvania are not self-respecting. In place of self respect they substitute an impregnable complacency; and we find upon analysis that with complacency must be joined stupidity and cowardice.

Mr. Wister, treating the government of the State as a corrupt and vicious monopoly, says:

> This monopoly rests upon two special causes—a special soil and a special people; coal and iron and the tariff could not by themselves have brought a community so low. It required a people ready and willing to be brought low, and the people were there—the Pennsylvania "Dutch," and the Quakers. The former, to their good qualities of thrift and a certain solid horse sense, unite a servile acquiescence in things as they are; no "Dutch" county has ever turned its boss out. The Quaker to his well-known good qualities adds a timidity that also acquiesces in things as they are. This racial acquiescence is at the bottom of Pennsylvania's plight, and has drugged every standard, save money. Lethargically prosperous, Pennsylvania is all belly and no members, and its ideals do not rise higher than the belly. Of the traditional Philadelphian this is as true as of the rustic, only it is more shameful.

The Pennsylvanians have learned that the $9,000,000 spent in furnishing their $4,000,000 State House was at least 80 per cent. graft, that their treasury has been looted more thoroughly by Pecksniff Pennypacker and his crew than by Quay in his most reckless days, but they are neither indignant nor ashamed. So long as they are privately prosperous, Pennsylvanians care little that they are publicly plundered.

Owen Wister says: "Do not pity them. They deserve everything they get, for Pennsylvania is today a government by knaves at the expense of fools." Being a hopeful chap, however, the author of "The Virginian" ventures a guess that some day Philadelphia may "cease to be the dirtiest smear on the map of the United States."

Good Hunting.

The New York Times is responsible for the astounding statement that 1000 persons are shot by deer hunters each season in the Adirondacks, and half of them are killed. About 10,000 men with guns infest the Adirondack woods in the open season, and about 3000 deer are killed annually. Not more than one hunter in five gets a deer, and probably the proportion of successful sportsmen is even smaller, as many of the guides and more skillful hunters kill their full allowance of three. The fellows who get no venison have little reason to complain of poor sport, however, if one in eight manages to pot another chap with a gun. If the New York Times knows what it is talking about, hunting deer in the Adirondacks is the most dangerous sport in the world, and makes tiger hunting in India look like the diversion of mollycoddles and weaklings.

I do not believe the figures are anywhere near correct. Instead of one hunter bagged for every three deer killed, it is more likely that three men are shot for every thousand deer, but even that is an appalling price to pay for the sport. If the figures given were correct, no man with a grain of sense would go to the Adirondacks in the hunting season, knowing that his "expectancy" of being shot was as one to ten, and that he would be far less likely to be killed should he enlist in the French army in Morocco.

On reflection, remembering the type of "hunter" prevalent in the north woods, and also the thud of a bullet that struck a tree within a foot of my head the last time I was fishing there, I am disposed to lament that the New York newspaper's statistics are not accurate.

The Art of Wildcatting.

The wildcat mining-stock promoter has developed the business of luring money from the pockets of the foolish almost to the dignity of a profession. His advertisements are works of art, and his methods of skinning suckers are the envy and despair of Poker Davis. An essential feature of the wildcatter's or faker's prospectus is the report of an "expert," who is usually advertised as "formerly" something important in an official way—Chief Inspector of Mines for the Czar of Russia, for example. The expert makes such a glowing report on the value of the Felis Ferox Consolidated that one wonders why he didn't buy all the stock himself, and so realize in a few weeks wealth beyond the dreams of avarice. But the finest expert work I have seen recently is that of a "former government assayer," who is quoted in the promoter's advertisement, urging the public to hurry up and get rich, as saying: "I would not hesitate to sell this stock to anyone." As a recommendation of stock to the investing public, that certainly is unique. The promoter also manifests no reluctance in taking anyone's money. He doesn't care who gets rich by swapping cash for prettily-engraved certificates.

Barbarous Decoration.

What has become of the crusade against the barbarous custom, affected by the alleged gentle sex, of wearing dead birds on the head? Not long ago the Audubon societies were trying to make women understand that their demand for barbaric decoration is causing the extermination of many species of birds, and the movement seemed to have some life in it, but late fashion reports say that fall hats are gorgeously bedizened with plumage and that the millinery windows look like taxidermists' shops. This means that the slaughter of birds is unchecked and that it will go on so long as women remain uncivilized and ignorantly cruel.

A dead bird on a woman's head is as offensive to taste as a cow's head and horns on a Sioux warrior's bonnet, or a muskrat's scalp on a half-savage trapper's cap. Indeed, the grinning rat-head on the woodsman's cap is less obnoxious because there is reason for the man's use of the skin and a touch of appropriateness in the decoration.

Of course some allowance is to be made for the woman who is conscious of her unattractiveness and bedecks herself with feathers to divert attention from her face. No doubt the crafty milliners designed bird hats for the amelioration of the pangs of the plain sisterhood.

Graft of the Downtrod.

There are professional men in Los Angeles who know how the Mayor of Portland felt when he was made the victim of an attempt to levy blackmail. The game is an old one, but it is simple and easily worked and frequently it succeeds. When it does succeed, nothing is heard of it by the public.

Only a few days ago it was tried on a physician in Los Angeles. A woman entered his consultation-room, tore her clothing and threatened to scream unless he instantly paid her a sum of money. There were waiting patients in another room, and the readiness of people to give credence to a woman in such a case made the situation awkward for the doctor. He pretended to comply with the demand, and began writing a check, but, catching the woman off her guard, he seized her suddenly, threw her into the hall and locked the door behind her.

Other men, with less presence of mind, have been blackmailed by women in exactly the same way, and no doubt men who have resisted have been ruined in reputation by the charges of lying harpies.

So long as women have that advantage over men, why do they complain of being "downtrod" and clamor for the poor privilege of doing politics?

THE LANCER.

RED AND BLACK CHANGE COLORS?

[San Jose dispatch to the San Francisco Bulletin.]

The Hayes brothers, "Red" and "Black," are once more heartily coquetting with the Southern Pacific political bureau. All indications point to this. The natural presumption is that J. O. Hayes has not abandoned his ambition to be Governor of the State, and that he still relies on Harriman and Herrin to give him the Republican nomination.

The Mercury, owned by the brothers, has by no means been friendly to the Southern Pacific since the Santa Cruz convention, when Herrin "threw down" J. O.; but it has now adopted a straight out policy of friendship. A few days ago an unsigned article, glorifying E. H. Harriman, telling of his reception at the irrigation congress at Sacramento, of his unselfishness, of the splendid work he has done for this Coast, of his liberality and self-denial during the disaster of 1906, of his personal magnetism and a multitude of other alleged desirable traits, was conspicuously printed in the Hayes paper. It was an article designed to cover the multitude of sins charged to the account of the railroad in California, and while at the outset it pretended to be merely a sketch of the "little wizard" as observed at Sacramento, it broadened as it went along till it became a grandiloquent exposition of the greatness of all the works and pomps of the railroad without any reservation or exception.

Congressman E. A. Hayes himself attended the irrigation congress and was most effusive in his welcome of Harriman. Those who claim familiarity with the Hayes style declare that E. A. not only inspired the article but wrote parts of it, and that in publishing it he was to establish himself as the most outspoken defender of the railroad in California and hence was entitled to the fullest consideration from Harriman and Herrin at the forthcoming Republican convention. The chief prize sought, of course, is the Gubernatorial chair, and J. O., like the baby in the soap advertisement, will not be happy till he gets it. Heretofore the Hayes brothers relied on Abe Ruef to secure for them political preferment, but as the little boss has been very much in eclipse these seasons the San José millionaires are compelled to make other alliances.

"E. A." is in a position to be useful to the railroad, and in return for these favors he thinks he is not expecting too much if the nomination for Governor is presented to his brother. As an indication of his activity for Harriman the Congressman's letter to the New York World ten days ago, assigning objections to the third term of President Roosevelt, may be cited. (Roosevelt's reëlection, Hayes said, would be pernicious and a menace to the principle of democratic government. The President's power would grow through his continued tenure of office, for appointees and others would be under manifold obligations to him and he would become as a monarch. His remarks in this matter were singularly similar to the views expressed by E. H. Harriman, whose well-known antipathy to Roosevelt is shaping itself in the direction of opposing his renomination or diverting public sentiment from that point.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

The City Council committee of the whole yesterday discussed the proposed anti-smoke ordinance, and heard arguments from both proponents and opponents. A further consideration will be given.

Restaurant Inspector Wright, after an inspection of restaurants in Chinatown, says some are in an unspeakable condition. One hundred pounds of meat were condemned at one place. The campaign will continue.

More than 600 children appeared at the city health office for vaccination or dressing of arms. The department will keep up the work until the end of the year.

Attorney Paul W. Schenck, in the trial of his action against Leona Schenck for divorce on the ground of cruelty, told of years of endurance of an intolerable situation. The decree was granted.

Andrew Konig, who married a middle-aged woman last year, was granted a divorce on the ground of cruelty.

Charles Hill, or D. W. Hill, a dentist, forfeited his bail because he failed to appear when his case was called in Police Court.

S. D. Walker and W. C. Buchanan, charged with insulting and striking two young women, were arraigned in the Police Court, and pleaded not guilty. They will be examined on October 6.

Small boys who enjoyed the prize fight Friday night from positions outside of the pavilion were lectured by a police justice.

ESPEE OBJECTS TO SMOKE LAW.

SAYS IT WOULD STOP TRAINS AT CITY LIMITS.

Railroad Company's Agent Tells City Council Committee That Engines Should Be Allowed to Puff With Little Restriction—Gas Company Also Finds Fault.

Discussion of the proposed anti-smoke ordinance occupied the time of the Council Committee of the Whole, yesterday forenoon. After hearing arguments from both sides of the question, further discussion was postponed for two weeks, until 10 o'clock Saturday morning, October 12.

Maj. E. B. Powell, representing the Ninth Ward Improvement Association, spoke in favor of the ordinance.

"There is a possibility of consuming every bit of smoke," he said. "The installation of devices for this purpose would be expensive, and manufacturers don't want to go to this expense if they can avoid it;, but I know from personal experience that the smoke nuisance can be avoided."

Maj. Powell cited his experience of eighteen years in Illinois factories, and progress made in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

Dr. George Kress, representing the County Pure Food Commission and the Los Angeles County Medical Association, urged the adoption of the ordinance for public health reasons. Said his commission is convinced that the anti-smoke ordinance should apply to locomotives as well as to stationary engines. He said the Los Angeles Gas Company's plant is burning large quantities of sludge or refuse from the gas-making process, causing an excessive volume of smoke.

He explained the provisions for measuring smoke density and exhibited the "umbrascope," an instrument made for this purpose. He said the proposed ordinance is based on one adopted in Philadelphia, with the exception of the five-minute clause.

Frank Karr, a representative of the Southern Pacific, declared that the ordinance would work a hardship on the railroads. If the railroads undertook to obey the law, he said, they would have to stop their trains at the city limits, and use other means of hauling their cars through the city. He presented an amendment which provided that locomotives standing at rest shall be allowed to discharge smoke for not more than five consecutive minutes, and that the ordinance shall not apply to locomotives in transit across the city, or engaged in entering or departing therefrom.

Attorney Herbert Goudge, for the Los Angeles Gas Company, claimed that the present draft of the proposed ordinance is illogical, and could not be enforced, in that every household in the city where a stove is used would be committing an offense at various times, and that even a bonfire could not be started. He claimed that the gas company has spent thousands of dollars to prevent smoke.

Church Protests.

The Eastlake Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church yesterday filed with the City Clerk an appeal from the acts and determinations of the Board of Public Works in assessing the church property for payment of its part of the expense of a sewer in Darwin avenue, between Eastlake avenue and Hancock street. The church claims that its property was assessed for a sewer on Hancock street.

Drummond Bitten.

Fruit and Vegetable Inspector R. E. Drummond was severely bitten on the hand and arm yesterday by a cat which he was trying to put out of its misery. He hurried to the Receiving Hospital, where his wounds were cauterized. Drummond was attempting to snuff out the lives of several worthless cats at No. 1204 South Olive street.

More Food Condemned.

Assistant Restaurant Inspector H. G. Wright has been making an investigation of some of the restaurants of Chinatown, and a further campaign for cleanliness in this quarter will be vigorously carried on by Inspector Schwegel. Wright condemned 100 pounds of meat at the Yue Tong Quen restaurant, No. 321 Apablasa street, and found conditions almost unbelievable in some of the other places where whites and Chinese eat.

Rush for Vaccination.

A rush to the Health Office was on yesterday, when school children appeared for vaccination. One hundred and two children were vaccinated, 356 had their arms dressed, and cards were issued to 167. Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays are the periods when the health office keeps "open house" for vaccination. So far, the work has been on children presenting themselves voluntarily. Later the school nurses will visit each school, and, it is expected that this will cause even a greater rush on the health office.

Aqueduct Supply Bids.

The Board of Public Works has received bids for various supplies for the Los Angeles Aqueduct. Among these are bids from W. A. Plummer to furnish 20,000 cement sacks for $2450 f. o. b., at Oakland or San Francisco, and the offer of the Bemis Brothers' Bag Company to furnish the same number of sacks for $2475 at the same points. Various bids also were received for supplies for the completion of the outfall sewer, the largest item being motors, pulleys and other equipment, which Waite, Bailie & Co., offer to furnish for $5005.

Lumber to Lancaster.

The Board of Public Works has ordered five carloads of lumber sent to Lancaster, for use on the section of the Owens River aqueduct in that vicinity.

ATTORNEY SCHENCK IS GRANTED DIVORCE DECREE.

Tells Story of Extreme Cruelty, Constant Nagging, Due to Causeless Jealousy, Ends in His Life Being Threatened With Revolver—Child Remains in Hollywood College.

Attorney Paul W. Schenck, law partner of Earl Rogers and a brother of Sam Schenck, former Police Commissioner, yesterday was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce from Leona Schenck, on the ground of extreme cruelty. Judge Smith showed no hesitation in granting the decree.

"We had been married ten years," testified the plaintiff. "I endured everything for the sake of our child. My normal weight was 165 pounds, and I went down to 112 pounds. My health was broken, and three times I had to give up the practice of my profession and take to physical labor to get back some of my lost strength.

"It was just worry. She was jealous, and without reason. She nagged and nagged and nagged, incessantly. It was only her temper and her insane delusions.

"It began the year after our baby was born. She got some idea about a woman, who, as a matter of fact, I didn't know. She threatened me with a revolver, keeping it pointed at me for a long time.

"In June, last year, for some fancied wrong, she again threatened me with a revolver. I took it away from her, and she told me I was a dirty coward to use physical strength against a woman. I didn't have much strength, really, but I didn't like to be called a dirty coward. I cocked the revolver and handed it back to her. I told her she might as well kill me if she wanted to.

"She said to me: 'I believe you're crooked, and I don't care a rap for you;' but she didn't shoot.

"About other things we sometimes quarreled. I thought she did not give the baby proper care. She used pins for buttons. I spoke to her about it, and it made her very angry.

"The culmination came last spring. I was in the office, trying to do some work. She had kept me awake, nagging, all night, the night before, and I was worn out. She rang me up, and said over the 'phone: 'You come home early and take care of the baby. I want to go to a party.' I told her there was work which must be done, and she began railing at me over the 'phone. I just hung up while she was talking. I never went back to the house.

"Since then I have given her $100 a month for herself. The child I placed in the Immaculate Heart College in Hollywood."

The judge asked a question about alimony, and Schenck answered:

"Any provision you choose to make, Your Honor. I shall give her $100 a month, anyhow, and if there are some of the little successes that come to a man in life, it will be more. She is the mother of my child. I want to give her enough to make her happy."

Mrs. A. W. Schenck, mother of the plaintiff, testified that she had seen much of the home life of her son and daughter-in-law.

"They lived with me three or four years in Chicago, before we came out here. He was always kind. She was always nagging him. She was jealous.

"One night, in Los Angeles, the little girl, Vona, came to me crying and said: 'Mamma will kill my papa.' I know she threatened him.

"Yes, I have seen her since. She told me she did not care."

Judge Smith, in granting the decree, made an order for $100 a month alimony. The plaintiff stated that there never had been any quarrel over the custody of the child, Vona, aged 9, and that he thought it best that she should stay in the Hollywood College, where both parents could see her as they pleased. The judge accepted that arrangement.

LOCKS HIM OUT.

SHE DISLIKES MATRIMONY.

Two divorces were granted to men yesterday on the ground of cruelty. Both cases were tried before Judge Smith, who, though nominally still on vacation, emulates the example set by Judge James in looking into the Courthouse occasionally to see if he can lend a helping hand to the judges left to bear the burden of an avalanche of cases.

The first decree was granted to Andrew Konig, a Bohemian, who had married an "old maid," aged 50 years, when he was 66. Mrs. Albina Konig had not taken kindly to marital life, it appears.

"The first thing was moving the beds," testified the old man, evincing difficulty in finding the words he wanted in the English tongue. "She said to me, two weeks after we marry: 'I don't like stay here. If you take me this bed out.'"

Mr. Konig declared that he obediently took a bed into the parlor for his spouse, and that she afterward moved it into the kitchen and nailed up the door between that room and her lord and master's bedroom.

She called him a brute, he testified, and accused him of having two wives. Finally, it seems, she sought to put their relations on a monetary basis, and demanded a definite salary for marital association.

Last January, the witness averred, five months after the marriage, he fell ill, and his better half left him in helpless misery, unfed and thirsty, while she kept house for herself alone beyond the nailed-up door.

Later, he stated, she had had him arrested for disturbing the peace.

"She say I must go with the policeman out and not asleep on the places," he said, relating the incident. "I tell the policeman there is no trouble, and he go away. Next day he come and arrest my by disturb the peace. I had a trial on the station, and the judge let me free."

It developed that this trouble had arisen over the barricading of another door by Mrs. Konig. Judge Smith asked the plaintiff if he had not broken the door down, but the witness declared that his protest had been very mild, and consisted merely in the asking of a question or two.

"She had a revolver there," Konig testified further, "and she say to me that if she lose somethings she kill me. I see this was crazy talk, so I say nothings."

Mrs. Lind, a niece of the plaintiff, who lives at Huntington Park, near the residence of the parted couple, corroborated the incident of the illness and neglect.

"I came in the house to see my uncle," she testified, "and found him all alone. The house was ice cold, and there was nothing to eat. I went back to my house and brought some soup I cooked the night before, but she wouldn't let me give it to him, and made me go away."

Mrs. Konig did not appear to contest the divorce.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

GUARDIAN'S SUIT. Mollie E. Hendry, as guardian ad litem for Wilhelmina Miller, yesterday filed suit in the Superior Court for $1500 damages against Varney and Green. The complaint alleges that the child was caught beneath a falling sign board on July 15, on Broadway near Fifth street, and received severe injuries.

NEW CORPORATIONS. New York Delicatessen Company, capital stock $10,000, with $2500 subscribed; Gardner-Porter Drug Company, capital stock $25,000, with $250 subscribed; Hibbard Cigar Company, capital stock $75,000, with $45,030 subscribed.

THE INFERIOR COURTS.

DENTIST'S BAIL IS FORFEITED.

CHARGED WITH FILLING TEETH WITHOUT LICENSE.

Doesn't Appear in Police Court When Case Is Called—Men Accused of Insulting and Striking Women Arraigned—Small Boys Lectured for Seeing Prize Fight.

Rather than face trial on a charge of practicing dentistry without a license, Charles Hill, or D. W. Hill as he called himself, yesterday forfeited $50 bail.

When he did not appear yesterday in Police Court, an officer was sent to search for him at the fashionable apartment-house where he had been living, but he could not be found there.

Hill is young, handsome and has many friends. He had been in the employ of a local dental firm for several months.

A week ago an officer, whose teeth were attended to by Hill, noticed that there was no license hanging on the wall and he made an investigation which led to the arrest of the young dentist. Hill then claimed to be Dr. D. W. Hill, the officer stated. A license had been issued to Dr. D. W. Hill, but it had never been registered in Los Angeles. The State Board of Dentistry reported that no license had ever been granted to a Charles Hill.

Attack Women?

Charged with having insulted and then attacked Miss Emma Larkin and Miss Franz Weingartner, S. D. Walker and W. C. Buchanan, both well-dressed young men, were arraigned in the Police Court and pleaded not guilty yesterday. They will be examined on October 6.

The young women allege that, Thursday night, after they were insulted, one of the young fellows struck the girls and then, alarmed by their screams, ran away.

Teamster Convicted.

Henry Smith, a teamster, was yesterday convicted of violating a city ordinance for the protection of bridges. He will be fined Monday by Justice Frederickson.

Smith was arrested while loading his wagon with sand at the Ninth-street bridge. An ordinance was passed, some time ago, making is a misdemeanor to take sand from within a certain distance of bridge supports.

Boys Enjoy Fight.

A dozen boys, ranging in age from 9 to 14 years, who saw the prize fight, Friday night, from positions outside of the pavilion, were in the Police Court yesterday, charged with violation of the curfew laws.

The youngsters were permitted to go home after being severely lectured on the sin of staying up late at night to see an exhibition by glove experts.

ASIATICS IN TRANSVAAL.

The Government Up Against a Hard Problem to Enforce Orders.

[London Mail:] Whatever may be said to the contrary, Asiatic competition is a serious thing in South Africa, and the deeper the depression, the more serious it becomes. White families are being "squeezed out" by the hundred. The exodus to other lands continues. But the Asiatic trader is immovable. He survives; he grows in numbers. This may be regarded as evidence of his thrifty habits and business ability. But it is no satisfaction to those who are trying to build up a white nation in South Africa, and make the sub-continent a source of strength, instead of weakness, to the empire.

In the Transvaal today there are 1105 Asiatic general dealers, an increase of fifty-one in the last twelve months; there are 3587 Asiatic hawkers, an increase of 501 over 1906; there are 229 Asiatic peddlers, an increase of 183 in a year; there are sixty Asiatic laundry owners, an increase of fifty-five. But the insolvencies among European traders grow ever larger.

Today there is a deadlock. The government vows the Asiatics must register. The Asiatics declare they will do nothing of the kind.

It is impossible to say who will win. Prosecutions cannot be begun until the new act has been proclaimed all over the Colony. It is still open to the passive resisters in Pretoria to take train to some other center where a registration office has been opened, and make application there. But the Indian organization is complete, and every office opened will be picketed.

Two or three months may elapse before all the districts have been dealt with. There is thus time to come to compromise. But when the act has been proclaimed all over the Colony, what will happen if the Asiatics still defy the law? Will the Transvaal government build a new gaol? Or will they admit defeat?

GREAT TASK FINISHED.

tain Engineer Hansen as a part of the permanent force of the City Engineer's office.

SYNDICATE ALONG WAY.

A syndicate owning the land through which the Inglewood tunnel passes is trying to effect a deal by which the city shall buy this land and develop the water for a part of the domestic water supply. Attorneys and engineers representing this syndicate assert that the city has not carried out the terms of the contracts under which the rights-of-way for the tunnel were secured. These contracts call for water-tight and moisture-tight tunnel. The engineers assert that water leaks into the tunnel through the brick and cement walls and that sewage will leak out. The syndicate places a valuation of $1,000,000 on the water rights in this territory, but it has offered to compromise by turning the land over to the city for $200,000. If the city doesn't buy it is intimated that suits will be filed claiming damages in the amount of $250,000 for pollution of the water supply.

The assertion has been made frequently at the City Hall that this syndicate will secure an injunction restraining the city from turning sewage through the outfall pending a settlement of its claim. City officials interested in the construction of the outfall say that an injunction may be applied for, but they scout the idea that a court would grant such an application; they say the need of the outfall is too apparent for that.

When the city started to complete the outfall after the contractors defaulted it was found necessary to remedy a number of defects in the original plans. No provision had been made for foundations under the fills for the outfall near Inglewood. The contractors had built this part of the sewer according to specifications, but the City Engineer found it necessary to build foundations under these hills at a great expense to prevent the ground from settling and breaking the conduit.

Politics interfered here in relation to a spur track leading to the kilns of the independent brickmakers. In the beginning as much was asked for right-of-way through the holdings of this syndicate as the original purchase price of the land. In the end the city was compelled to build a spur track in order to avoid building a bridge.

The original plans provided for a half mile of small sewer three feet nine inches in diameter on Wesley avenue south of Jefferson street. The money for this sewer was expended in putting foundations under the fills and building the spur track, and this small sewer will not be built at the present time.

PLANNING A BANQUET.

The administration is planning to commemorate the turning of sewage through the new outfall by a banquet to the builders of the conduit. This banquet will take place about November 1.

When the city took over the outfall from Stansbury & Powell $614,818.85 had been paid for material and for work already performed. The estimated cost of completing the sewer was $614,444. In addition to these two sums $89,000 have been spent on main laterals connecting with the outfall. About $300,000 more will be spent on main laterals before the sewer as contemplated when the bonds were voted is finished.

During the last eleven months the Board of Public Works has redeemed itself nobly for the apparent inaction during the eleven months previous to that. The board has seconded ably the efforts of the city Engineer and his assistant, to keep material on hand constantly that there might be no delay. Commissioner Hubbard has saved the city several thousand dollars in the purchase of supplies for the outfall by going personally to merchants and lumber dealers and insisting that the city should be permitted to purchase at wholesale prices the same as other large corporations. Commissioner Hubbard was at one time the head of what was locally termed the "brick trust." He knows by actual experience the discounts commonly accorded to large purchasers and he insisted that the city should receive these discounts. Under the old regimé in the engineering department all purchases of supplies were made at the highest retail price, discounts were unknown.

The Board of Public Works hopes to utilize a great deal of the machinery purchased for the outfall on the Owens River conduit. In this there will be a saving of probably $25,000 to the city.

FIX EYES ON PIE COUNTER.

Job Hunters Seek "Work" on the Tax Books.

County and City Book-keeping Handicapped.

Incompetents Swarming Like Flies on Sugar.

About this time of year the hounded and much-pursued politician ceases from hiding.

He shakes the sweaty hand of his constituent and smiles upon the job hunter.

"I'll tell you what," he says, with a passionate inspiration, "I have a nice job for you; how would you like to work on the tax books?"

And the poor tax books cannot dodge.

This county is now in the throes of this tremendous work of "rush" bookkeeping. And the principal handicap is said to be the "dead ones" thrust upon county officials by industrious politicians.

The main sin is with the Legislature, which, with an eye to the pie counter, has made about twice as much work as is actually necessary. The men now at work at the Courthouse might just as well be working on the city tax rolls as their own. About half the work in both city and county is said to be red tape—but a multitude of jobs are provided.

The work, as it now stands, is really a job of fearful proportions.

Although not difficult, it requires great exactness. The County Auditor, who has most of it in charge, has put up his bristles and resisted the onslaughts of the political cockle burrs to a commendable degree.

The main part of the work is done by a force of trained experts who have been listed for many years as "extras"—the political "friend-of-mines" who stick around and tote books and other impedimenta.

DIFFERENT TAX RATES.

The nature of the difficulty is the extension of the tax rolls for this year. The real estate throughout the county bears different rates of assessment. The regular State and county rate, for instance, is $1.10. In the city, the property is also taxed 14 cents for a special school fund. In the county, outside incorporated cities, a special road tax of 60 cents is levied. In the district annually flooded by the meandering San Gabriel River there is a tax of $6 a hundred.

These various rates have to be computed, the results added and the total divided—the first and second installments of tax. Altogether, there are 153,647 notices that must be computed and sent out for property taxed.

There are fifty-seven volumes to be worked up and turned over by the Auditor to the Tax Collector, whose office force prepares the tax bills. The Auditor alone has to use over a hundred men—from a hundred ranging downward as the work progresses. The whole job has to be hurried through in a few weeks.

How to get men capable of doing the work on such short notice, used to be and, to some extent, is now a serious problem—and it is complicated very seriously by politicians and their friends.

As the work has gone on from year to year, a special corps of wandering experts has come into existence. These are notified by letter and are hustled onto the job before the politicians hear the sound of the alarm. Of the men who come afterward, it is rare to find one who can add a column of figures accurately.

"FRIENDS" WORK CHECKED.

The work has to be so arranged that experienced men check the work of the "friends." Some of the latter are employed merely to pack around books.

The trained men do the heavy skilled work of the daylight crew. At nightfall, another force goes on. Many of these night men are crack accountants. They come from banks, railroad offices and business houses for the chance of making $4 a night.

The general idea seems to be to put these trained men on the books that the "friends" have worked on in the daytime. The process is repeated when the trained men of the daylight crew come on next day.

Some of the "friends" are so "raw" they cannot be used for anything, and a constant stream of incompetents is constantly quitting the service.

Precinct committeemen bring up hopeful daughters for jobs who can't add without using their fingers to count on. Hard-heartedly, they are turned away.

JEWELS IN DULL SETTINGS.

Occasionally a competent man is obtained through political influence. Sometimes a surveyor out of a job or a skilled accountant with a "past" turns up on somebody's recommendation and proves to be a jewel.

A great deal of the efficiency of both the Auditor and Tax Collector's departments is due to G. W. Smith and Capt. Alfonzo, who manage the clerical forces therein.

Although mathematically simple, the work requires hour after hour of footing columns of figures and is exhausting. The night force, although working on short shifts, has a tough job. The room must be obsolutely quiet and the glare of the light on the glazed white paper is particularly trying. When the night force is dismissed at midnight, some of the men seem half blinded.

There is one man who knows them all. At the top of the stairway where they have been passing in and out for twenty years, sits the night watchman. As protection for the valuable papers in the Courthouse, the exact minute of every arrival and departure is registered. One can look back for years and find the exact minute when a certain man entered the Courthouse and when he came out again. For years and years, the same "flying squadron" of experts has been greeting the same night watchman.

Book-keeping under forced draught. Showing the auditor's experts making up the tax rolls at the courthouse.

"FLUFFY RUFFLES," famous throughout the East, will make her appearance in Los Angeles on October 28.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

"POLY" VOTES ON CONTROL.

Elects Student Officers to Govern Affairs.

Seventh Street Teachers in a Lunch Combine.

Sixteen Eat Daily at Cost of Eight Cents Each.

Nine hundred new-comers at Polytechnic High School this year! The very atmosphere is pervaded with a cloud of little "scrubs" who have found their way to this great and growing institution. The "scrub" of today is the hope of tomorrow, and "Poly's" future is assured. There are 1954 pupils enrolled thus far—1002 boys and 952 girls.

As becomes a democratic factor in the community, the candidates for school offices were elected by the school at large. Nominations were made by special students, who appeared before the assembled 1900 last week and gave reason why such and such a student should hold such and such an office.

Eylar Filmore President Board of Control.

Pearl Brooks President Girls Self-Government Committee

Paul F. Jeffers, President Boys' Self-Government Committee

Norma Gould, President Girls Scholarship Committee

Who's who at the Polytechnic High School this year.

The board of control, according to popular election, will be headed by Eylar Filmore, with Jennie Williams as vice-president and Leonard Wachtel as secretary. The two faculty members are F. C. Weber, treasurer, and Charles H. Thorpe, advisory member. A member from each grade was elected by the pupils to form the board.

On account of the preponderance of the young and inexperienced element, the self-government committees have been selected with care. Each ninth-grade room was allowed to select one boy and one girl; two boys and two girls represent each tenth-grade room, three boys and three girls the eleventh-grade rooms, and four boys and four girls each twelfth-grade room. The post-graduates are allowed one representative for boys and one for girls. Paul E. Jeffers was elected president of the Boys' Self-government Committee, and Pearl Brooks president of the Girls' Self-government Committee.

The scholarship committees have done good work in the school. The members are selected by the faculty, for their mission is to help on students who are not making good progress in their studies. The officers are elected by the school at large from among the committee members. Clement Reis heads the Boys' Scholarship Committee, and Norma Gould is president of the Girls' Scholarship Committee. The youth who will lead the yells for the season—Andrew Mackenzie—was elected by popular vote. He doubtless will be a popular man; at least he will be much in evidence.

EIGHT-CENT LUNCHES.

No more crackers and pickles for the "little schoolmarms" of Los Angeles; no more sour and hungry looks that come in their train. Round arms and rosy cheeks are here to stay, for the teachers of the Seventh-street school have set the pace for the city. They have taken to wholesome luncheons, and have the cheap-lunch professionals backed off the boards when it comes to serving good food for a song.

Eight cents for a single lunch! How's that for low?

Sixteen teachers at the Seventh-street [illegible] eat lunch each day at that small [illegible] and they are not running a cafe[illegible] either. Sixteen times eight cents equals $1.28. That represents the aggregate expense per day. They have a regular picnic each day.

Here is the menu for last Friday: Spanish rice (very fine;) small meat sandwiches, bread and butter, fine coffee with condensed cream, and peaches, grapes and bananas.

How do they manage it? It is all part of a system. Two teachers take charge each week. They do not go about with collection baskets to take up the pennies; it is not necessary. The two who keep house stand all the week's expenses, and every one takes a turn. They must give a goodly share of time, too. The materials are bought on the way to school.

Everything is stored away in the dining-room set apart for the purpose. Two small gas ovens and an oven to occupy one corner. Dishes and other essentials are in the cupboard.

At recess, the housekeepers do part of the cooking, and surreptitious peeps are taken from time to time to note progress. At noon 820 children troop out of the big building, and the teachers troop into the dining-room. Everything is ready to the minute—the table set and coffee steaming.

Principal Larkey has insisted on one remarkable thing—the teachers must not talk shop during the luncheon hour.

After the meal, volunteers among the school children assist in washing dishes. It is regarded as a great privilege—as great a privilege as whitewashing Tom Sawyer's fence.

Alas, the increased cost of living has penetrated the school lunch room, and has raised the price of luncheons one cent since last year. Then they were seven cents, now they are eight.

TRAVELING ART.

Fifteen pictures belonging to the traveling art cabinets of the Los Angeles Civic Association are again starting on their yearly journeys from school house to school house. During the past summer the beauty of these pictures was not wasted on the desert air of the empty school room, but were distributed to grace the Children's Hospital, Settlement House, Coffee Club, Los Angeles Orphan's Home, and Playground No. 1.

The pictures have been given as far as possible to the new school buildings for this year, as these buildings need adornment more than the others. They are all good pictures, and are intended to preach the gospel of beauty and true art.

Many a small person has learned the wonderful story of the pure and spotless knight, Sir Galahad, by looking at the artist's representation, and often he has heard then for the first time of the search for the Holy Grail.

Among the pictures in the collection is a fine copy of the Sistine Madonna.

The Ruskin Art Club supplied one of the cabinets belonging to the Civic Association. It includes one of Elmer Wachtel's paintings, "Autumn in the Arroyo." Mrs. A. B. Glass has been the custodian of the cabinets for two years. She has just arranged them anew, and gotten them ready for distribution. The schools to receive them are Magnolia-avenue, Hobart-boulevard, Loretta-street, Utah-street, and Fortieth-street.

FOUND DEAD IN LAKE.

Police Trying to Secure Identification of Body of Man With Right Hand Missing.

Lying in the shallow water near the northeast bank of the lake in Eastlake Park, the body of an unidentified man was found by officers early yesterday morning.

The man was about 45 years of age, and his right hand, at some former time, had been amputated. There were no marks of violence. The police think that it is a case of suicide, but a bench just at the water's edge suggests another theory. Park officers state that frequently men go to the park at night to sleep, and that sometimes a sleeper rolls from a bench into the water.

An inquest will be held tomorrow, and in the meantime every effort will be made to identify the body.

STYLE IS ONE THING. Quality is another. With the development in the business of making Men's Clothing, there has come the ability to turn out garments that possess a certain trig smartness, along with a cheapness in price, that enable the merchant who seeks only immediate profit to sell clothing of good appearance at low prices--and a big percentage of profit to himself.

But this is not good clothing. You may be offered a suit that looks well and yet is not worth buying. Men's Clothing must have quality, as well as style--it must look right after weeks of wear, else it is not honest clothing nor value received for the money you paid for it.

This is not a class store. It is a store for every man. We have a suit or overcoat for men who want to pay $15.00--and for men who want to pay $50.00--and for men who come between. Every garment has style, and quality proportionate to its cost. But there is not one garment in this great stock of ours but has real quality, value received for your money--not one garment but is sold for just exactly what it is.

When you buy your Fall Suit or Overcoat, buy it with these points in mind, buy it with your eyes open. As you'd expect, we're showing a stock that in variety of pattern and cleverness of style is in keeping with the new store and the H. & F. ideals and policy. We like to show our new store and the goods it houses. You'll receive a welcome and perfect courtesy if you call. And one word more--if you live outside Los Angeles, we can serve you satisfactorily by mail--our guarantee extends beyond Los Angeles, just as it protects the buyer who comes in person.

floor of the gate is ninety-eight above sea level, about five feet be- the bed of the river, and ten to n feet below low water level. Their city is estimated at 10,000 cubic per second, sufficient water to irri- the 500,000 acres of available land United States under the system, an equal area in Mexican territory. It will be capable of carrying all the low water flow of the river whenever the canals are prepared to receive it.

The gate is founded on solid granite bedrock on the most easterly spur of Pilot Knob Mountain, the last point of rock before reaching the gulf, and 800 feet north of the international boundary.

The gate structure consists of eleven culverts, each twelve feet wide and ten feet high in clear opening, in addition to a twelve-foot "navigation pass," for small boats. These culverts are separated by piers of reinforced concrete eighteen inches thick and are surmounted by a massive cellular structure of reinforced concrete loaded with 1650 tons of gravel, and extending twenty-six feet above the sub-floor, placing the top of the structure well above maximum floods.

Each of the culverts is closed with a steel frame gate in the form of a segment of a circle, hung on a heavy shaft of solid steel, and hoisted by two cables of phosphor-bronze. Each gate is raised independently by turning on its shaft, and may be lifted by hand or by a gasoline engine, which is attached to one end of a shaft, running the entire length of the structure, to which any gate may be thrown in or out of gear, for hoisting or for lowering. Two men can easily lift or lower a gate, as they are so balanced as to be unaffected by water pressure, whatever the height of the river. In other words, the pressure of the water adds nothing to the resistance to the lifting or closing of the gate. It is the first gate of its class ever built in California, and, although similar gates are successfully used in Idaho, Colorado and the Northwest, they have not been introduced on this Coast heretofore, and there is none in use operating under conditions of as great pressure in flood as those. The faces of the gate are of reinforced concrete, and each weighs about ten tons, although the actual load to be lifted by the hoisting device does not exceed four tons.

The entire cost of these great gates was $44,400, of which $26,770 was the cost of the gate structure, and $14,812 the cost of the steel work, erection, hoisting devices, etc., the remainder being for incidentals and engineering. Earth excavation amounted to 12,637 cubic yards; rock excavation, 5700 cubic yards; concrete, 1205 cubic yards; gravel ballast, 1100 cubic yards; steel in gates, reinforcing bars, etc., 250,300 pounds.

For simplicity of operation and massiveness of construction these great gates are worthy of inspection by all who are interested in works of such magnitude, and they are certain to become noted as models of their class. As the new line of the Southern Pacific Railway from Yuma to Calexico and Imperial, through Lower California, passes within 100 feet of these headworks, they will be easily visited in the future when this line shall have been completed, and put in operation.

Sunday's sport was fair, and places good. Those who are with "nipper" corbina had no in getting all they wanted at dozen different places. Better point of size was enjoyed with however. Preston and his cousin from caught thirty-five nippers near Sunset Beach, and from the wharf at that place Sunday. They ranged from half to three-quarters of a pound in weight each.

Trolling has settled down to an albacore and skipjack proposition. Both varieties are plentiful. Off Redondo last Sunday a party of Rod and Reel Club members which chartered Dosta's launch filled her with big "pigs" in about an hour, Sunday noon. Ed Winfield, Henry Loewenthal, Will Stearns, Simon Spier, Charles V. Barton, F. C. Clayton and Edwin L. Hedderly made up the party. After trolling around the edge of the school for a few turns, the boat was stopped and sardine bait put on, casting it over the side. The Albacore, after their usual fashion, came up, grabbed it, and bolted for the depths.

In all, the party caught about two dozen albacore, weighing more than twenty pounds. There were no very big ones taken, and the fish were brought to gaff in two or three minutes, frequently, by fighting them hard from the first and grudging every inch of line.

Tuesday Winfield and A. M. Morse fished outside San Pedro in "Pig City" in the Unome, and Morse landed a thirty-pound albacore, the biggest of the day. The fishing was good in point of numbers.

Jack smelts are coming into market, and anglers who like that kind of fishing soon will be in their element.

Sea trout are biting well at live bait from Ocean Park, Del Rey and Redondo wharves, a few nice catches being reported. Sardines are biting at Redondo also. A few halibut and yellowtail are taken by handliners, and rod and reel men. These latter use a twelve-foot cane rod and large multiplying reel, similar to salmon gear, and have much sport when they get a big one on.

It is a quick and lasting cure for all Nervous Debility, Weakness, Rheumatism, Pains in the Back and Hips (Sciatica), Lumbago, Constipation, Indigestion, Weak Kidneys, Failing Memory and all evidences of breaking down. It cures when all else has failed.

Our arguments are good, our system is good, but we know you haven't time to study these. You want proof, and we give you that and lots of it. When your own neighbors tell you we have cured them you will know we did it.

Gentlemen: I have been wearing your Electric Belt for a little over a month now. From the benefit I have already received through the use of this appliance I feel fully warranted in recommending it. When I bought your Belt I was in such bad shape that I could scarcely walk a block. I was troubled with indigestion, constipation, sleeplessness, weakness of the kidneys, and my body was full of pains and aches. Now, since I have used your appliance, my principal ailments are overcome and I find that I can walk a dozen blocks or more with hardly any fatigue. Your Belt seems to have benefited my whole constitution. It has restored my general vitality, and that is the kind of treatment that I needed. Electricity is indeed a grand remedy when applied as it is with your Belt. The drugs that I have taken into my system would start a fair sized apothecary shop. I have quit drugs, I hope, for good.

Yours very truly,

Positively the Last Week of UTAH OIL at Only 20 Cents the Share

Activity in the Field

Fred McConnon, chief driller for the Los Angeles-Utah Oil Company, arrived last week at Virgin City and has taken charge of the drilling operations on our 1000-acre tract. Our latest word from there reports that the derricks are up, the drills are set, and boring has begun. IT WILL BE ONLY A MATTER OF A FEW DAYS BEFORE WE PENETRATE OIL-BEARING STRATA. Our neighbor struck oil on adjoining land at 660 feet.

Councilman Edward A. Clampitt, who is to have personal charge of the work in the oil field, will leave Los Angeles in a few days for the scene of action. Word has come from L. F. Sloan, a veteran oil driller of many years' experience in Pennsylvania fields, to his Los Angeles friends, that he is now employed as an expert in the new Utah Oil territory, and gives it as his opinion that THIS WILL PROVE THE GREATEST OIL FIELD THE WORLD EVER SAW.

While our company is among the first on the ground, it is by no means the only one. Railroad sidetracks and near-by stations are choked with rigs which are being freighted in with all possible expedition. Drilling is going on around us in all directions, for our land lies in the very heart of the district. The Standard Oil Company's agents are active in the field and have already offered $1000 an acre cash for the property adjoining ours. OUR COMPANY COULD SELL OUR LAND ALREADY AT FIVE TIMES THE CASH VALUATION AT WHICH IT WAS PUT INTO THE COMPANY. That shows that those who are on the spot best appreciate the intrinsic value of our holdings.

It is absurd that we should be longer selling stock at 20 cents the share, and the directors have determined to put an end to it. This week is the best chance—the only chance—and your last chance to join in a great money-making enterprise in the development of a thousand acres of land in the heart of the phenomenal oil belt of Utah. A subscription of $50 (the smallest which we accept) should be worth five times as much within five weeks from today.

THESE MEN VOUCH FOR THIS OIL COMPANY:

The board of directors of the Los Angeles-Utah Oil Co. comprises the following:

ARTHUR C. HARPER,
NATHAN COLE, JR.,
EDWARD A. CLAMPITT,
CHARLES H. FULLER,
WILLIAM H. HUMPHREYS,
ANTHONY SCHWAMM,
I. W. GARDNER,
GEORGE MONTGOMERY,
PAUL W. SCHENCK.

This is the last chance to invest in UTAH OIL at 20 cents the share. After this stock is off the market the directors will allow no more stock to be sold unless at a much higher price. We look for a strike any day in October, and when it comes the holders of this stock will not sell it at any price.

LONG WANTED CHANCE COMES.

New Steamship Line to Mean Much to Us.

Will Open the Markets of Southern Countries.

Success Is Sure to Attend Trade Promotion.

The inauguration of a steamship line between San Pedro and Mexican Pacific ports, with the prospective extension of the service to South American ports, has opened possibilities to Los Angeles merchants and manufacturers of which they will take advantage to the utmost.

"Los Angeles business men needed this steamship line," said Assistant Secretary Harry B. Gurley of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday. "For a long time we have tried to find some feasible way to get at the southern trade, but the only way to do it was via San Francisco, and, of course, that has been too great a handicap.

"If our business men will patronize the new line, even if they have to pay as high freight rates as their competitors in the North, it will bring them into close contact with the trade in the South, and ultimately they will get better rates than San Francisco merchants can possibly get."

For a number of years the United States consuls in the western countries of South America have been complaining because our business men have done so little in those markets, which the new steamship line will enable us to invade with profit.

"Recently Consul-General Harry B. Miller of Yokohama reported that the Japanese government had made an appropriation of several million dollars for the promotion of the Japanese merchant marine, and now comes word that the Japanese are invading South American ports. They are getting a large amount of business, which the United States ought to secure."

EAGER FOR OUR GOODS.

South American consuls report that they are continually called upon to furnish information regarding manufactures of the United States, and that commercial clubs and libraries are besieged by inquirers who wish to do business with this country. The countries of Central and South America are forging ahead in a commercial way, and are requiring more and more machinery, raw materials and finished products. The imports of Chile alone last year amounted to $105,672,436 in gold.

Railroad and telegraph lines are being constructed rapidly in Chile and many railroads are projected there. Only a third of the railroad supplies are now furnished by the United States.

More than 80,000,000 pounds of cement were imported into Valparaiso. Much of it came from San Francisco. Local business men declare that, with the new steamship line, Los Angeles could command practically all of that business.

In a recent report to the State Department, Consul Winslow said:

"During 1906 American interests made fair progress in Chile, and the future promises well for the capital interested. American capital is principally invested, so far, in the copper fields of central Chile, the gold fields of the extreme south, and the nitrate fields of the north. In all they amount to several millions of dollars. There are still some fine openings in these lines, with a good field for commercial houses handling American products. There was a material increase in imports of electrical machinery and supplies; mining and industrial machinery; lumber and building material and hardware; typewriters and typewriter supplies, and paper stocks.

"During the year more Americans visited this country to study the conditions and needs of the people, which has had a good effect. The residents of Chile are anxious to know more about the United States and its products, and the newspapers have much more to say about North America than ever before.

"American salesmen are much more numerous and all report good sales. There is an increased inquiry for American goods, and this consulate is receiving more than double the mail from the United States than arrived six months ago. The best of feeling exists toward Americans and American goods. I am creditably informed that the state railways have contracted for twenty-five heavy locomotives with an American firm, to be delivered this year, with a prospect of yet more.

"More direct communication is needed between the United States and Chile, if we expect to get our portion of the business of this prosperous country. The American manufacturers are doing much of late to cultivate the trade of this country, but they are badly handicapped because of such poor mail and shipping facilities. It would mean much to see the American flag flying over American shipping in this and other ports along this coast from day to day."

TRANSPORTATION HANDICAP.

The same conditions obtain all along the coast from Chile to Mexico. American goods are in demand but owing to inadequate transportation facilities much of the business that would ordinarily come to the United States goes to other nations.

Consul-General H. R. Dietrich of Guayaquil points out that practically all the great rubber, quinine and mining business of Ecuador is done through Great Britain.

Consul-General Samuel M. Taylor, reporting from Callao, gives the following practical advice to American manufacturers who desire to build up trade in Peru.

"The prevailing products of the United States in this markets are in those lines in which we have become preëminent the world over—those lines in which there is competition almost only at home—as sewing machines, typewriting machines, cash registers, and certain classes of electrical appliances; and closely following these are agricultural implements and machinery, certain lines of children's toys, especially of the 'express-wagon' class, and chemicals. But products in which we are not preëminent—which we make as good, probably no better, and possibly can sell as cheap as any other country were conditions equal—are not here in any considerable quantities. In the competition American-made goods are at a disadvantage, but some of these adverse conditions can be circumvented. The very prosperity of the United States is a handicap in one respect. The young men of the United States do not come here in the hope of bettering their condition. As a rule they think they can do better at home, and they probably can.

"On the other hand, the yonng German, the Frenchman, the Italian, the Swiss, the Japanese, the Chinese, are here in large numbers as proprietors and clerks.

"The west coast countries of South America are nearly 2000 miles closer to the manufacturing districts of the United States than they are to the manufacturing districts of Europe, and the proper utilization of this advantage in distance ought to more than offset disadvantages; just as our proximity to Canada, with superior transportation facilities, gives us great advantage over all competitors there."

WOMAN'S LONG JOURNEY.

Comes Down from Alaska and Goes to Wales on an Extended Visit to Relatives.

By her remarkable experience concluded by a 375-mile drive in a cutter from Valdez to Fairbanks, Mrs. Gilroy, a pioneer woman in the north, has in the past winter achieved a record for travel that few women have equaled. She arrived in Fairbanks, meeting her husband, who had been looking after her interests on Little Eldorado Creek in her absence. Going to Seattle, and on her return trip, she was accompanied by Willie, her sixteen-year-old son.

Having made a success of her mercantile business on Fairbanks Creek, Mrs. Gilroy last fall decided to visit her aged father in their old home at Glassford, North Wales. Accompanied by her son, she made the trip to Seattle by way of St. Michael. At Seattle the boy was put into school and she continued her long journey over the continent and across the Atlantic alone.

After a long visit with her relatives, and considerable travel through Great Britain, Mrs. Gilroy returned to Seattle and again joined by her son started back north. Instead of taking the stage at Valdez, she ventured forth in a conveyance of her own.

The cutter was not large enough to accommodate all the baggage, but with the ingenuity characteristic of Alaska women, she soon overcame this. The baggage was lashed on a double-ender, and the cutter was then coupled on behind. This plan worked successfully, despite the fact that some of the heaviest weather of the season and the worst drifts were encountered.

Every link of the long journey had its exciting or remarkable experiences. On the way up the steamer Leah, on which Mrs. Gilroy and her son were traveling, was swamped, and the passengers had a narrow escape from drowning. The worst experience, she considers, was that on a train between St. Paul and Seattle. The railroad became blockaded in the terrible snowstorms and the passengers were snow-bound in out-of-the-way places a number of times.

It would be difficult to convince a cheechacco of this fact, but Mrs. Gilroy was made more anxious by the experience on the railway train than she was by the screaming blizzards and drifts of the lonely trail across Alaska.

The Duties of Nurses.

"The late Bishop Fitzgerald," said a St. Louis man, "once presided at the graduation exercises of a class of nurses, and told a story that pleased them mightily.

"He said that during our war with Spain a certain hospital had a corps of nurses of exceptional such a corps, in fact, ladies ranged before him made.

"But it was whispered fair nurses were inclined inclined a little to flirt with young soldiers in their

CIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

YOSEMITE, Sept. —, 1907.—I do not the day of the month. It seems are no dates here. Day follows as in a dream, and now, at the full moon, it seems there is no night, a change from the brilliant effulgence of sunlight, to the radiance of moon. Many people have the impression that the valley is not attractive after July. No greater mistake could be made. In September the valley is, as always, beautiful, wonderful. It is true that the waterfalls not in full flood. But the vegetation of the floor of the valley is as as in spring; and the faint haze early autumn lends a new charm to cliffs.

The morning and evenings are delightfully cool. A slight "nip" in the a faint suggestion of frost, make realize that here there is a real season; not a mere change of months, with us of the Southland, but a change of season. The effect is heightened as oak leaves touched with gold through the air. As I write the squirrels are at work above me, laying their winter stores. Falling acorns, ing the roof of my porch, show the busy workers are preparing winter. In gathering acorns the squirrels find active competitors in the ians, who depend upon these nuts their winter's supply of meal.

It seems that appreciation of the valley at this season is increasing, as are a number of guests at the hotel, while many campers are scattered over the floor of the valley. year I entered Yosemite by the route, the Yosemite Valley Railway. This line was opened to travel May, and many tourists have availed themselves of its facilities.

along the line may be seen remains of old flumes, ditches and sluice , reminders of the old days of mining. The placer fields of the er Merced were among the best-known gold fields of early days and yielded untold ounces of dust.

Ruined cabins and other signs of miners' occupation, bring suggestions red flannel shirts, six-shooters, big poker games, romance, tragedy and comedy. Many mines are in operation day and yield rich returns. I am informed that prospecting is very active that the opening of the railway bring something like a return of old days.

Much cutting and blasting was necessary to enable the road to follow the course of the Merced. The cost of construction averaged $50,000 per mile. Grades are easy. The roadway is well ballasted, and is equipped with seventy-pound rails. The rolling stock is line with the roadway, the passenger coaches being neat and comfortable.

one can describe this valley. Its transcend human powers. these visits, I find myself unable prehend it, much less do it justice in words. But, if the reader's patience be not exhausted, I shall, in another letter, attempt to give some impressions and incidents of our stay.

It has often seemed to me that Southern California lacks only one element of perfection, and that is, the charm of autumn. One finds it here. Already the cliffs and peaks are clothed by the tender blue of Indian summer. Touches of color on the trees betoken the assumption of royal robes. More than all, that faint, dreamy suggestion in the air invites to wandering and to dreams.

See Yosemite in the fall. If it becomes cold, so much the better; it will be good for one accustomed to the perennial warmth of the South. I am told that, even in the winter, when the snow is not actually falling, the atmosphere is warm. Nights are cold, but roaring wood fires are abundant. A number of people spend the winter in the valley, and enjoy it. The valley in September was a revelation to me. I had expected to find it "burnt out," its vegetation faded. But the floor of the valley presents all the charm of spring. The river is low, but the falls are still wonderful. Water is still flowing over Bridal Veil and Yosemite Falls. Led astray by the charm of an autumn day, I must bring this to a close.

THE OIL INDUSTRY.

ESTIMATED OIL PRODUCTION.

PROBABLE SUPPLY AND DEMAND COMPARED.

A Predicted Shortage of Six Million Barrels Is Made by an Investigator of the Production and Consumption of the Oil Districts of California.

A correspondent of the Coalinga Oil Record gives the following estimate of the production and consumption of crude oil. The correspondent's name is not given, but it is presumed that the Record vouches for his credibility:

Many estimates have been made by different persons on the probable production of crude petroleum in California during the year 1907. But they have all carefuly avoided any mention of the probable requirements during the above period. If the interests were consulted on the subject, they would inform you that all rights were reseved by them as they considered the best interests of the trade demanded that such news be suppressed as it tended to create unrest among the oil producers and cause them to ask unreasonable prices for their product and thus cut down their 1 per cent (1000 per cent) profit. The consumption or requirements of California crude petroleum at present is in excess of 41,000,000 barrels per year. The following table will show by districts where this oil is used and the quantity:

	Estimated Barrels.
Railways (steam)	15,000,000
Point Richmond refinery (Standard)	3,000,000
Union Oil Refinery (Oleum)	1,750,000
All others, 22 in number	4,000,000
280 steamers, big and little, that have been granted permits to burn fuel oil	2,750,000
Japan contract	[illegible]
Chile contract	1,000,000
Panama pipe line, eastern trade, together with the government requirements for canal construction	3,000,000
All other requirements, California, Oregon, Washington, British Columbia and Alaska	8,500,000
Total	41,000,000

That the estimate for the requirements of the railways is too small is plain, as the Southern Pacific and Santa Fé railways have over 2500 locomotives equipped with oil burners, to say nothing of the other steam railways of the State. (The above estimate does not include the Western Pacific or the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake railways.)

The capacity of the Point Richmond refinery is 4,000,000 barrels per year, and is being operated to its full capacity, but we must be conservative and allow for shut downs, etc. The Union's refinery at Oleum has been greatly enlarged and the capacity is considerable in excess of the figures of the estimate. All in all the estimate has been made in all fairness. The Hawaiian Islands require a large amount which is omitted, as the amount is not now at hand. The following table is the estimated production for California given by districts for the year 1907, together with the increase over the amount produced in 1906:

District—	Estimated 1907 Barrels.	Increase Barrels.
Coalinga	9,500,000	1,000,000
Santa Maria	9,000,000	3,000,000
Kern River	9,000,000	*2,000,000
McKittrick	1,000,000	500,000
Sunset	800,000	200,000
Midway	500,000	500,000
Fullerton	2,000,000	300,000
Whittier	650,000	....
Los Angeles and Salt Lake	1,700,000	....
Newhall and Ventura	500,000	100,000
Other districts	300,000	235,000
Total	34,650,000	6,425,000

*Decrease.

The difference or shortage will about deplete the oil stocks held in reserve in the Kern River district. That the production will be increased above the above figures in 1908 no one questions, and the increased requirements demand an increase, as the Salt Lake Railway (Clark road) has already contracted for 10,000,000 barrels and the Western Pacific requirements will run into the millions of barrels per year.

The California Oil Refineries, Ltd., at Oilport will soon be in operation with a capacity of 7000 to 7500 barrels, which will make further inroads on the production.

BUSINESS MAN INTERVIEWED.

A. T. Brant, acting for The Times, recently interviewed Jerome Jones of Jones, McDuffy & Stratton, Boston, Mass., on the business situation. He said:

"Money will be high on account of the watered stocks in the big corporations, but I see no reason for a panic, as the country's resources are being developed to the same extent as they have been in the last couple of years.

"The prosperity, not only of this country, but of England, Germany and France, are on a good firm basis.

"If there is stagnation in business it will only be for a short time on account of the great resources of this country.

"The industrial disturbances prevailing in this country are caused by the unreasonable demands of the trades unions. I have no objection to the unions if they are conducted in the right manner.

"Grafting hurts the immediate locality in which it occurs, such as Philadel, Chicago, New York, Boston and San Francisco. The staunch American citizen will not take public offices, so they are left open to the politician. There are two classes of men, the man that does his share and the man who gets his share. The politician gets more than his share.

"I am a believer in tariff protection, but not to the point of the stand-patters. The consumers are the people who pay the freight and stand the advances in prices. There are a great many things that come in to this country that should be free from duty.

"There is no danger from any large mergers, if they are carefully and lawfully conducted."

True Cures for Men

No Cheaper Treatment on the Coast

DR. MILES
Master Specialist

No Better Treatment in the World

My Fee is Only $10.00 Not a Dollar Need Be Paid Until Cured.

This is My Fair Offer to Every Patient.

In Any Uncomplicated Ailment

Why pay more for inferior treatment when you can get the very best medicl attention at a fee of from one-half to one-tenth that charged by others? Remember that you are not asked to pay for any experimenting or any failures. If your case will not yield to my treatment, I can ascertain that at the first examination, and will frankly tell you so. I am a specialist for men only and have further confined my specialty to the disorders of the pelvic tract. You can make no mistake by submitting your case to me first. Call today and you will be on the road to health tomorrow.

The Only Diseases I Treat

Lost Vigor, Varicocele, Rupture, Piles, Hydrocele, Organic Weakness, Contagious Blood Diseases, Acute and Chronic Urethral and Prostatic Inflammation.

I Never Guess

Experiment or take chances of any sort. I attempt to cure only those diseases that I have been curing for the past 25 years, and feel sure I am justified in saying that I have learned all about them. Were I lacking in knowledge pertaining to my specialty I would never have attained my present success, nor would I today be recognized as the master specialist treating men's diseases. If afflicted, you can depend upon it that the service I offer you is the service you need, and is service such as can be rendered by no other physician.

Varicocle

An average of one man in five has varicocele. Most men that have this dragging, draining weakness are not aware of it until it has wrecked their lives. Varicocele causes congestion of the blood in some of the most vital blood vessels of man. It causes a dull, heavy, listless feeling which is often mistaken for nervous debility or general decline of power.

"Weakness"

My cures of this disorder are permanent and lasting. No tonics that stimulate temporarily, but thoroughly scientific treatment for the removal of conditions responsible for the functional derangement. "Weakness" is merely a symptom of inflammation or congestion in the prostate gland, and under my own original local treatment this gland is promptly restored to its normal state and complete functional activity is the lasting result.

Free Consultation and Examination

I invite every weak or diseased man to call for free advice, and if desired I will make a free examination and diagnosis, but the visit will not obligate him in any way to become my patient. Office hours 9 a. m. to 9 p. m.; Sundays 10 to 1 only.

LOS ANGELES' HUMMING PUBLIC MART, GREATEST IN WEST, DOING NEARLY A MILLION-DOLLAR BUSINESS FVERY MONTH.

hundred wagons and more than three thousand people were jammed on and around the market grounds, of which only a corner is shown, and about thirty thousand dollars' worth of produce changed hands. Bartering between Orientals and Occidentals makes a ;picture full of color and animation, to be seen during the early hours of any business day.

ANGELES has the largest and liest fruit and produce market of Chicago, both in area of devoted to it, and volume of transacted. The activities of Los Angeles Public Market are un- to a great number of residents; its busiest hours are at the time many people are still in their a million dollars worth of a month is done at this in- tion, through the buying and sell- of the products of Southern Cali- farmers, gardeners and fruit ers. The business is expanding such a rate that another year will more space absolutely necessary, enlargement of the buildings is discussed.

market grounds have a frontage feet on Central avenue; over 400 on Third street, and 170 feet on street, and the entire east- line is bounded by the main switches of the Southern Pacific, while the various electric interurban lines have direct access to the grounds and storage sheds. Standard and narrow-gauge electric car tracks reach into these yards.

Fifty-three produce firms are operating at the stalls, every available space is taken, and bonuses for surrender of leases have reached such a point that in several cases $500 has been paid for the transfer of a single stall.

There is the same state of activity in the large outdoor space. When one passes along Central avenue on the street cars during the middle of the day, there is little to indicate that the great bare tract south of the market buildings was humming with business only a few hours before. But this space is all divided off into stands for teams and wagons, and each morning sees an array of vehicles, teams and hustling men that makes a stirring scene, full of color and interest.

Probably the extent of the market business at this point can be no more strongly set forth than through the presentation of figures for an average day. These figures were collected by agents of Johnson & Musser, and are considered a conservative, careful estimate of the average day's business.

The count was made by five men stationed at the public market from 2 to 9 o'clock a.m.

WONDER STORY IN FIGURES.

At 2 o'clock in the morning there were twenty-four teams on the market grounds, and they kept pouring in until at 9 o'clock there were, by actual count, 1110. There were 242 Chinese vegetable peddlers' wagons along the crubs, reaching from Third street along Central avenue to Fourth street; along Towne avenue from the market to Fourth street, and along Third street.

There were 166 vegetable wagons; 128 fruit wagons, and 87 melon wagons.

Careful inquiry was made at each wagon as to the amount of produce the loads contained, and its valuation. There were 665 crates of canteloupes, 740 boxes of peaches, 320 boxes of grapes, 310 crates of lettuce, 1020 boxes of tomatoes and 915 boxes of cucumbers, on these wagons.

A conservative estimate of the value of these loads was placed at $40 each, bringing the valuation of the 165 loads of vegetables up to a total of $6600. The fruit loads were estimated at $25 each, or a total of $3200 for the 128 wagonloads, and the melons were estimated at $30 the load, or $2610 for the 87 loads. Besides these, there were fully 100 wagonloads of fruit delivered from the market to the stores—an average day's delivery—and this would have a valuation of $2500.

An average of six electric cars of produce is delivered directly to buyers, this having a valuation of $1800, and from ten to twelve cars per day are sold out directly on the sidings. Deliveries direct to merchants are estimated at $5000.

After making the most conservative estimates and careful calculations, these five tally men figured that the business for this one day—which was considered a normal, average one—reached the total of $31,710.

While this has to do entirely with the business at the Public Market, even these figures do not represent the volume of such business in the city, for daily hundreds of loads of produce which go directly from the producer to the business houses of the retail districts that have no connection with the busy mart on Central avenue.

Recently there have been as high as ninety extra produce wagons seeking stands at the Public Market, and these have to shift place from day to day, as all the regular spaces are held by lease for regular patrons of the market.

FROM SMALL BEGINNING.

Old-timers will remember when the Public Market was the space along Main street, between First and Second streets, when the wagons used to line up almost to the exclusion of other traffic. Then the traffic was shifted, by order of the city officials, and the vegetable men made their headquarters around the historic old Plaza, and farmers backed up their wagons around the circular plot of land until it became a congested mass for the entire distance around the little park.

Here again the congestion of the streets demanded a change, and the city leased for a term of five years a tract of land at Ninth and Los Angeles streets, and established the Public Market at that point. When this lease expired the city leased the tract of land where the market now is located, at Third and Central avenue, from Joseph Wolfskill, and erected a market building.

But the produce dealers didn't take kindly to the change, for some reason, and they refused to leave the old quarters, which had passed into private hands. For months the city market building stood idle, while each quarter brought a large rent bill for the city to pay.

Finally, the market men having become dissatisfied at the private market place at Ninth and Los Angeles streets, because of inability to secure leaseholds longer than from month to month, they organized the Los Angeles Market Company, purchased the city's building, and assumed the city lease, much to the relief of the Councilmen who had got the city into the ill-paying muddle. The produce men moved in a body to the present site, and from that time there has been a constant expansion of the market interests.

The market company is an incorporated body, with R. E. Goddard as its president; A. M. Klein and J. D. Robinson, vice-presidents; W. A. Henry, Secretary, and H. E. Houk, treasurer.

The activities of the Los Angeles Public Market have attracted to its immediate vicinity some of the largest wholesale produce houses in the city, and the district has been improved with substantial buildings to house these concerns.

LY GRAPES IN IMPERIAL VALLEY.

great agricultural resources of Imperial Valley have been so fre- a theme that it would hardly necessary to say anything fur- Nevertheless the following state- by W. S. Corwin, regarding the of grapes and asparagus, is ing:

is a well-known fact that the iest fruit-producing sections of ornia are those devoted to special ts which are found to be pecu- y adapted to the soil, climate, etc., each respective place.

raisin and table grapes need dry, warm climate, a soft mellow soil and plenty of water, all of h are found here in perfection. dry, rainless climate does away with all chance of mildew, and the continual sunshine puts a greater amount of sugar in grapes than is found elsewhere, hence we can make the finest kinds of raisins. There are about twenty varieties in my vineyard of fifty acres, planted two years last spring, and hardly with an exception they have made a growth and produced crops of fruit superior to anything I have ever seen in twenty-two years' residence in California and the remarkable part is that the fruit ripens one to two months earlier than in any other locality in the State. I make this statement after having visited practically every grape-growing section of the State.

"Many experienced grape growers from all over the State have visited my vineyard and I have never heard anything but expressions of amazement at the growth of vines, size of crop, for the age, and earliness of ripening. Judging from actual results, I think it safe in saying that Imperial county will be the leading table and raisin grape county in the State. The growth and yield is unsurpassed. There is no rainy weather to contend with and raisins could be dried on paper trays at a nominal cost any time from July to December. The Muscat carries more sugar and is thinner-skinned here than elsewhere and so makes a better raisin.

However, as the market is bare when our fruit ripens, the green fruit can be marketed at far superior prices. The table grapes all produce fine bunches and remarkably large berries—the two qualities most essential for market and the earliness of ripening puts this valley above competition with other parts of the State as all the leading varieties can be marketed by the end of July.

As to the profits to be derived, a great variation can be expected, due to degree of cultivation, special fitness of the soil and varieties planted. Some parts of the valley are decidedly too heavy soil to grow grapes, but will improve with cultivation in other crops. Under proper conditions a bearing vineyard should return from $100 to $200 per acre, and in some places far more may be realized. Some varieties on my place have returned at the rate of $250 to $350 per acre this, the third year of growth. Good vineyards in bearing in any of the grape-producing parts of the State are valued at from $200 to $1000 per acre, and it will not be many years before Imperial will be in the front rank. This will not be any more remarkable than what has happened all over the State where we have seen grain lands and cattle ranges transformed into garden spots and in many places into the most beautiful and productive fruit orchards and vineyards in the world.

So far I have only mentioned grape growing, but I have made a thorough test of asparagus here and have about forty-five acres out at present and it promises to fully equal grapes for profit. Asparagus rust cannot thrive here in this dry desert air and the warm continual sunshine in winter makes it possible to start the growth at almost any time desired. As the country develops, doubtless other kinds of vegetables and fruit will show fine returns also, as the great extent of farms in this valley will show variation enough to suit almost all kinds of fruits that need a warm climate.

One of the essential things in all kinds of fruit growing is thorough cultivation not only to keep all weeds out of sight but to keep the soil loose and aerated and to preserve an even moisture. Of course, the more mellow the soil is, the easier this is done and the better the results to be obtained.

As to varieties of grapes to plant, perhaps the Malaga is the general favorite for a table shipping grape and of course the Muscat of Alexandria is the one leading raisin grape. Flame Tokay grows to immense size in vine, bunch and berry, but does not color highly, however, as it is of fine quality, sells readily and at good prices. The same may be said of Cornichon and Emperor. Rose of Peru gives an immense crop for local markets, but is not a good long-distance shipper. Neither is the Muscat. Of new varieties, the Purple Damascus is one of the best, if not the very best. The berry is exceptionally large and of beautiful color and appearance and is also a good shipper and bearer. Doubtless other varieties of great value will be developed here, as some varieties worthless in one locality prove a perfect success in another place under different conditions.

In conclusion I would say that the holder of good, soft land anywhere in the valley suitable for fruit growing and within reasonable shipping distance from the railroad, has an investment that will yield handsome returns in the next five or ten years.

He Was Still Unconvinced.

A Kansas City matron who visited in Southern Alabama last winter told a number of children there about snow, which they had never seen, says the Washington Herald. They were much interested, but when she had finished one little fellow said:

"Mrs. Browning, I can't quite believe that."

Next morning a caller was announced for Mrs. Browning, and she found doubting Tommy awaiting, his cap in hand. He said:

"Mrs. Browning, mother says it was very wrong for me to say what I did yesterday, so I'm sorry and want to apologize. But," he added ingenuously, "I don't believe it yet."

POSTOFFICE PROGRESS.

DELIVER YOUR WASHING BY POST AND SEND BABIES BY EXPRESS.

Parcel Post Office Is Considered So Much Cheaper and Better in England That Express Companies Have Practically Abandoned Field.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON (Eng.) Sept. 18.—Parcel delivery by the government while you wait—nor is it very long to wait, either—is now one of the most popular features of the British postal system. Not only do the general public eagerly avail themselves of the service for the transmission of all sorts of articles, ranging from a hat pin to a wedding trousseau, but the great retail houses, in increasing numbers, also employ it for sending home the purchases of customers, instead of using their own delivery wagons. They find the government does the work for them cheaper and better than they can do it for themselves. The price charged, which is paid, of course, in postage stamps, varies from 2 cents for a parcel weighing under two pounds, to 22 cents for a parcel not exceeding eleven pounds. Many of the London laundries now send home the week's washing by the parcel post for the same reason that the big stores are taking to it. The service costs less than that which they have previously provided themselves.

One of the great advantages of the parcel post, as compared with the work of private companies, is its celerity. Before it came into vogue customers often had to wait days for their goods. Now within the London radius it is a case of only a few hours, for the parcel post makes several deliveries daily. By paying a small additional fee "immediate delivery" is secured, which means that the parcel is started to its destination as soon as the payment is made.

INSURANCE FEATURE.

Another feature of the parcel post service which commends it to the public is the fact that all goods transmitted by it are practically insured up to a certain figure which covers the value of most packages sent. Where the goods are of higher value than that for which the government guarantees compensation in case of loss or damage additional payments on a graded scale secures special insurance. Thus, for instance, by paying 10 cents more than the regular delivery fee an insurance of $60 is obtained and 31 cents extends the claim which may be made for compensation to $600.

An entertaining feature of the British parcel post system is the great variety of articles which it is open to receive. It is quite a common thing to "parcel post" live bees, and according to a new regulation even human beings may be "mailed." Not long ago a couple in London posted a live baby in this way. It was delivered at the West Strand postoffice properly tagged; the fee was paid; postage stamps of the requisite denomination stuck on the label—and the baby reached its destination within a very short time.

LIVE ONES.

Living animals are also accepted, provided they are "properly packed," and the distance is not too long. A partial list of some of the curious things sent by parcel post includes, weasels, young alligators, leeches, lizards, pigeons, mice, cats and dogs. Officials point with pride to the skin which a snake shed in the postoffice some time ago. It was being sent through the mails, and took occasion to change its coat while stopping in the parcels office. As the postal authorities undertook to deliver the snake only, they claimed the skin as belonging to the government—another instance of "unearned increment."

Aside from curiosities sent by parcel post, a large business is done in staple articles of trade, particularly foodstuffs. Fish are often sent to the large hotels by parcel post direct from seaport towns; and their freshness is assured, as they are delivered the same day as shipped.

Fruit, vegetables, and eggs in huge quantities are sent from country farms to London markets by the same method. The postoffice egg business is so large that special departments are assigned to it, and minute instructions for packing and shipment are issued. The postoffice, however, pays no compensation for broken eggs; but it is remarkable that the breakage is extremely small, provided packing instructions are followed. Eggs are shipped in boxes containing small card-board divisions. Fruit—especially soft fruit—such as strawberries, must be packed in boxes in such a way that the juice will not exude and injure other parcels.

Parcel Post by Bicycle.

This method is employed for speedy local delivery all over the kingdom. The big stores avail themselves of it, as it enables them to send purchases to customers within an hour or two.

At Christmas time, vast numbers of turkeys are sent by parcel post. Strange to say, many of these birds never reach their destination. The reason alleged generally is either that the labels get torn off in transmission or that they are insufficiently addressed. These derelict turkeys find their way to the "dead" parcels office and are promptly disposed of by public auction. Few compensation claims for lost birds are ever paid, however, and the government plea of "insufficient address" covers a multitude of turkeys.

SIZE OF PACKETS.

The size of the packets which may be sent by parcel post is, of course, limited. The greatest length allowed is three feet, six inches, but a parcel with a length and girth combined of six feet may also be transmitted. For instance, a parcel whose longest dimension is three feet, six inches, may measure, in girth, as much as two feet, six inches, while a parcel three feet in length may measure the same distance around, the essential requirement being that the two factors combined shall not exceed six feet. The weight must not be over eleven pounds.

The rates for transmitting parcels have been steadily reduced from year to year, as the business done has increased. This year the rates for parcels are as follows:

For parcels up to	2 pounds in weight	6c
" "	2 pounds up to 3 pounds	8c
" "	3 to 5 pounds	12c
" "	5 to 7 "	14c
" "	7 to 8 "	16c
" "	8 to 9 "	18c
" "	9 to 10 "	20c
" "	10 to 11 "	22c

It will thus be seen that an eleven-pound parcel bulking to six feet, may be sent anywhere in England for 22 cents—a remarkably cheap rate. Another great advantage which the parcel post has over its private rival is the vastly larger number of shipping points it provides. There is a parcel postoffice in every small town and hamlet, and in London they are situated very near each other, in some districts one such office is apportioned to every four city blocks. Private companies could not possibly provide so many branches. Their great number and the ease with which they are reached account for no small part of the enormous extent of the parcel-post business in England.

BUSINESS DONE AT LOSS.

That it is steadily increasing is shown by the following figures, which were obtained from the postoffice controller:

1902-03,	total parcels	90,310,000
1903-04,	"	94,426,000
1905-06,	"	101,682,000

The gross amount paid to the postoffice for the transmission of parcels for the year 1905-06 was $10,898,365.

Despite the fact that last year 101,682,000 parcels were delivered at a cost of more than $10,500,000, the parcel-post business is carried on at a loss. At first glance this might appear to be a serious objection, which would militate against the general adoption of the system, but it is an objection which, in the course of time, is likely to be removed.

The reason for it is that the railway companies through the powerful "pull" which they are able to exert in the houses of Parliament, have succeeded in capturing 55 per cent. of the money paid for all parcels sent by rail, under government transmission.

However, by dint of organization, these wagons provided a remarkably good service, even to points thirty and forty miles away from the metropolis. For longer distances, the railways get their "rake off," which makes such a big hole in government receipts. In the last two years, however, the government has been able to trump the railway ace, so to speak, by instituting a motor-wagon service, which is really competing splendidly, even as to speed, with the railways. Huge motor vans, especially built for quick work, deliver parcels from house to house direct in the country districts throughout England. Several hundreds of these are in operation, and many others are now being built. By means of the motor wagons, the government hopes to break the back of the opposition, and eventually compel the railways to accept parcels at low rates. In spite of the cost to the government of operating these opposing lines, the charges are very low. The average rate per parcel throughout the country is only 10 cents. The rates charged by express companies in America are far in excess of those now levied by similar English companies. Because the latter, owing to the postoffice competition, have been compelled to lower their figures.

The English parcel post is also available for transmission of packages to Europe, Australia, Canada, Egypt, India and other foreign countries. Of course, the rates vary according to distance. The rate to the continent is very low, comparatively, but no house delivery is made. The parcels have to be called for at the foreign railway station, or customhouse, as the case may be.

All things considered the British parcels post service is a most excellent one. Were it not for railway opposition, it would support itself and probably yield the government a reasonable profit.

GERMAN SYSTEM.

In some respects the German parcel post system is superior to the English. The rates are generally much lower for short distances at least, owing to the fact that several of the German railways are owned by the state and, therefore, cannot dictate their own terms to the government for helping it out in the express business. A fixed number of packages are carried by these state roads for the parcel post service free of charge. For packages in excess of that number the government has to pay the state roads a small charge.

The private and semi-private railroads also exact a much lower rate from the government than do the English railways. In Germany a parcel weighing eleven pounds may be sent by parcel for 12 cents. Nor is the extreme weight of parcels which may be sent restricted to eleven pounds as in England. Parcels up to fifty kilograms or 110 pounds in weight may be sent for 60 cents. Even trees may be sent for little over 60 cents. Even trees may be sent by parcel post, but such bulky articles are only transported from one station to another on the same railway line.

But there is a difference between the systems of the two countries. In England, distance makes no difference in the charge. In Germany the country is divided into six "zones" and the charges vary according to the distance the parcel is carried. For instance, while the charge is only 60 cents to carry a parcel weighing 110 pounds (the maximum weight) a distance of ten miles, to send the same parcel 151 miles would cost about $5.50.

For the longer distances, however, the rates are not increased in the same ratio on packages that do not exceed eleven pounds. The eleven-pound package, for instance, may be sent within the first zone, which covers a radius of ten miles, for 6 cents. For all distances beyond that the charge is only 12 cents, which is little more than half the English rate.

As in England an immense variety of articles may be sent by parcel post. All the leading hotels employ it to obtain speedy delivery of fresh fish. Butter, cheese, eggs, farm produce and foodstuffs generally, except in wholesale quantities, are usually sent by mail, because the service is cheaper, speedier and more efficient than that provided by any private company.

As in England the government allows compensation for articles damaged or lost in transmission by parcel post, even when they are not especially insured, but the amount that can be claimed is limited to 75 cents a pound.

One distinct advantage which the German system has over the English is that it permits of packages being sent "c.o.d." which is a great boon to shopkeepers and public alike. It is available, too, for the sending of parcels to foreign countries. A parcel may be sent from Berlin to New York by the German parcel post cheaper than it would be transported from New York to Chicago by any of the private express companies operating between these points.

CHARLES OGDENS.

English Parcel Post Wagon.

Because of the high rates charged by the railway companies for carrying government parcels, the postal authorities have organized a wagon service to cover small areas. They are now being replaced by motor wagons.

Artist Whistler's Forgetfulness.

The Dundee Advertiser tells a story illustrating Whistler's forgetfulness and utter lack of business instinct. Being hard pressed for a debt and having finally been informed he would be sued unless a check for the amount was sent by return of post, the artist mentioned the matter to one of his friends who lived near him. Explaining that he had a few pounds in the bank, the exact sum unknown, he requested his friend to stop at the bank on the way to business to ascertain what was required to make his account good for a check of slightly over $90, and to deposit that amount for him as a loan. The friend was quite willing, and in due time stood at the cashier's desk of Whistler's bank asking for the amount of that gentleman's balance, explaining his errand. The cashier was interested; went to the big book of balances, turned over a few pages, wrote down some figures, and in a moment placed them before the astonished friend. Whistler's balance was more than $30,000. The artist was delighted, but found it difficult to remember when he had deposited so much money or where he had got it.

THE OIL INDUSTRY.

PIPE LINE COMPLETED.

Indian Territory Oil Flows to the Gulf.

Over Four Hundred Miles of the Conduit.

Seven Million Dollars in the Enterprise.

The great pipe line from Glenn Pool, Indian Territory, to Sour Lake, Texas, is completed, the last joint of pipe having been screwed into place at a point north of Red River on August 13. The length of the pipe line is 415 miles, and its diameter is eight inches. The work of pipe-laying was started February 13. It required exactly six months to complete it—a feat in pipe-line construction that will go down in history. It is estimated that the cost of the line and all accessories will be $5,000,000, exclusive of the field tankage at the northern end. The Gulf Pipe Line and affiliated companies have over 2,000,000 barrels of oil in steel storage in the Glenn pool, representing an additional investment of over $1,350,000. All told, the Gulf Pipe Line interests will have expended more than $7,000,000 before the expiration of a year from the date that the preliminary details were undertaken last October.

The need for this great pipe line resulted from the fact that the Gulf Coast region of Texas and Louisiana has not developed a new oil pool of importance since the Humble field was opened up in January, 1905. A record-breaking production was obtained in that year, due to the prolific output of the Humble and Jennings wells. Coincident with the decrease in Gulf Coast production there was developed in Indian Territory, at a point about fourteen miles south of Tulsa, in the Creek Nation, a pool of light oil which gave indications of being very rich. Subsequent developments have justified the most sanguine expectations as to this new field. The Glenn pool—so named because the discovery well was drilled on a farm owned by Ida E. Glenn—in less than a year has produced over 15,000,000 barrels of crude petroleum especially desirable for the purposes of refining. More than 700 wells have been completed in this field, many of them having developed a capacity of 1000 to 1500 barrels a day. The proven area has been extended over 9000 acres, and the limits of the pool have not yet been defined. For months past the daily production has exceeded 75,000 barrels, and if facilities could have been provided to handle the full capacity of the wells it might just as easily have been 100,000 to 120,000 barrels a day.

When the production of oil in the Gulf coast region began to fall the companies having large investments in refineries in Southeast Texas were confronted with a serious proposition. Their requirements amounted to 20,000 to 25,000 barrels a day, and stocks were being drawn upon to the extent of 20,000 barrels a day or more. It was inevitable that they should look to the Indian Territory in making plans for their future supply. The excellent quality of the Territory crude for refining purposes, as compared with Gulf coast oil, which is heavy and better adapted to fuel use than for refining, was a further attraction. With an adequate supply of Indian Territory oil the Southeast Texas refiners figured that they would be upon an equal basis with their eastern competitors, who were and are now getting a large part of their supply of crude from the Territory.

Details of the Gulf Pipe Line Company's trunk line are given as follows: Diameter, 8 inches; length in Indian Territory 150 miles, in Texas 265 miles—total 415 miles; pumping stations, six, located, respectively, at the Glenn field; at Chambers near South McAlester; at Lenoir, in Lamar county, Texas; at Big Sandy, in Upshur county, Texas; at Lufkin, in Angelina county, Texas, and at Sour Lake, where connection is made with the Gulf Company's existing pipe-line system, leading to the Gulf refinery and docks at Port Arthur, a distance of thirty-five miles.

The pumps to be used on the line are Gould triplex power, direct connected, four of 5000 barrels capacity to be located at each station excepting Chambers, where there will be three Epping-Carpenter triple-expansion direct-connected pumps, each of 7500 barrels capacity. A working pressure of 600 to 700 pounds to the square inch will be maintained on the line. The station at Watkins is now in operation, and those at Chambers and Big Sandy are practically ready. Lenoir and Lufkin will be in condition to pump oil, according to present plans, by November 1. The management expects to run 8000 to 9000 barrels a day through the line pending the completion of the Lenoir and Lufkin stations. With these in operation the capacity will be increased to 12,000 or 14,000 barrels a day. Two 37,500-barrel steel storage tanks have been erected at each of the pumping stations. Pending the completion and operation of its pipe line the Gulf Company has been shipping 3000 barrels a day of Glenn crude by tank car to its refinery at Port Arthur.

Glenn crude was pumped into the trunk line and started southward from the northern end in the Glenn field on August 15. With the completion of work on certain of the pumping stations this month the oil will be forced through to the storage tanks and Gulf refinery at Port Arthur. The delivery of Glenn crude through this line to the Gulf coast will mark a new epoch in the oil industry. The Gulf Pipe Line is the longest and largest trunk line ever laid by an independent company. By means of it the Gulf Refining Company, operating the largest independent refinery in the United States, will receive a supply of high-grade crude, from which all the products of petroleum will be manufactured and distributed to the markets of the world. The Gulf refinery has a capacity of 15,000 barrels a day running on heavy crude, which means that its capacity on the less refractory oil from the Glenn pool will be considerably greater.

The interests which control both the Gulf Pipe Line and the Gulf refinery—the Mellons of Pittsburgh, Pa.—have their own line of modern tank steamers and barges plying between the refinery at Port Arthur and Atlantic Coast points. Stations for the distribution of the Gulf Refining Company's products have been established at important points on the Atlantic seaboard, including Tampa, Fla.; New Orleans, La.; New York City, Boston and Philadelphia. In addition the company has distributing stations at inland points throughout the South, over forty being located in Texas alone. Shipments are made direct from the Gulf refinery docks to England and continental ports.

The Texas Company of Beaumont has completed its eight-inch pipe line from a point two miles south of Tulsa, I. T., to its station at West Dallas, Tex., a distance of 270 miles. This line will join the existing pipe-line system of the company at Humble when completed. The distance from Tulsa to Humble by way of Dallas and Corsicana—which is the route taken by the Texas Company's line—is 470 miles. There will be nine pumping stations on the new line, distributed at intervals of about fifty miles. Six of these on the line between Tulsa and Dallas are completed. They are located at Tulsa (Clinton farm,) Henryetta, Stuart and Armstrong, I. T., and at Sherman and West Dallas, Tex. At West Dallas the Texas Company has a 270-acre farm, on which it is completing steel storage with a capacity of 450,000 barrels, and a separating plant, or refinery, where Glenn crude will be treated so as to take off the heavy portions, composing an excellent fuel oil for which there is a ready market at Dallas and in the contingent territory. A station will also be located at Corsicana, another about sixty miles south of Corsicana, and the last one on the main line at Bobbin, in Montgomery county.—[Beaumont Correspondence of Manufacturers' Record.

TO FORCE EDUCATION.

A Woman Ruler in India Introduces Compulsory Methods in Her Realm.

Compulsory education is being introduced in oriental fashion by the Begum of Bhopal. In the Mohammedan state over which she rules, the schools which owe their existence to the enlightened energy of herself, her mother and her grandmother, have not met with the support she requires from the nobles and high officials. At the prize distribution of the Alexandra Nobles's school her highness spoke her mind freely on the subject. She condemned the love of ease which is enervating the upper classes and compelling her to go outside in order to find men qualified to carry on the business of the state. She pointed out that for the sake of example she had kept her own son at these schools instead of sending him to one of the colleges outside the state, and that scholarships were numerous. But these inducements had failed. "All my warnings and injunctions have proved futile in this direction, and I have given orders that a part of the income of the students and their parents should be cut off, if the former unreasonably absent themselves from the school, and the money thus obtained may be spent towards the education and the scholarships of the promising students. If even after this the people, and especially the Jaghirdars, do not pay sufficient attention to education, I shall be compelled to adopt the same strict measures that the Emperor of Japan has done for the weal of the people."

Too High, Too High.

Wall street associates of the great "bear," James R. Keene, admit almost unanimously that the financier is seldom caught napping. They declare, however, that Mr. Keene is absent-minded occasionally, and tell this story on him to prove it. Keene and his fellow "bull-baiter," Washington E. Connor, were at the Keene country place outside of New York. It was a beautiful summer evening, and Connor proposed a stroll through the magnificent grounds. Though the guest had left all the cares and worries of the street in the city, apparently the host had not. The two started on the walk, but Connor noticed that Keene was strangely uncommunicative. Suddenly the full moon appeared above the trees, and Connor regarded its splendor in silence for a moment. Then he turned to his companion:

"Isn't the moon beautiful, Keene?" he asked.

"Yep, but it's a little too high, too high," was the preoccupied answer, with a sigh.

SLAUGHTERING AND MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRIES.

The Census of Manufacturers, 1905, per Census Bulletin 83, just issued, gives the following as the status of our slaughtering and meat-packing industry:

Establishments	929
Capital employed	$237,714,080
Wage earners, average number	74,134
Yearly wages	$40,328,972
Materials used yearly	$805,856,983
Value of yearly product	$913,914,624

ILLINOIS, THE LEADING STATE.

Although forty-one States and Territories are in the business, the industry is really monopolized by the following fourteen States, named, as to value of yearly product, in the following order: Illinois, Kansas, New York, Nebraska, Missouri, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Indiana, Ohio, California, Minnesota, New Jersey and Wisconsin.

Illinois, by far the most important State, reported 7.3 per cent. of the establishments, 37.9 per cent. of the capital, 36.4 per cent. of the wage-earners, 38.1 per cent. of the wages paid, and 34.7 per cent. of the yearly product.

CHICAGO, THE LEADING CITY.

In each of six cities the reported yearly product was over $35,000,000.

Chicago ranked first with $269,581,486, followed by Kansas City, Kan., South Omaha, New York ($46,477,324,) St. Joseph ($42,075,116) and East St. Louis ($39,972,245.) South Omaha and Kansas City figures are withheld to avoid disclosing individual operations, the establishments in those two cities being so few in number.

49,000,000 ANIMALS A YEAR.

During the calendar year the slaughtering was:

	Number.	Cost.
Hogs	31,000,000	$230,000,000
Sheep	11,000,000	44,000,000
Beeves	7,000,000	290,000,000
Totals	49,000,000	$562,000,000
In addition—
Other animals, worth		$ 12,000,000
Dressed meat purchases		22,000,000
Other materials, including mill supplies and freight		77,000,000
Total materials used in the year		$806,000,000

The principal products in the year were:

	Value.
Fresh beef	$247,096,724
Smoked products	132,000,000
Refined lard	75,000,000

Increases and decreases since 1900 were:

	Quantity pounds.	Pct. of increase.
Fresh beef	809,000,000	78.5
Salt pork	185,000,000	13.7
Refined lard	150,000,000	37.7
Fresh pork	3,000,000	2.0
Hams, bacon, sides and shoulders	400,000,000	*22.8

*Pct. decrease.

Corned beef, salted and cured beef and neutral lard also decreased in quantity.

An interesting product was 211,137 tons of fertilizer, valued at $4,397,626, an increase over 1900 of 25.3 per cent. in quantity and 33.3 per cent. in value. These figures show that slaughterers and meat packers are now making and selling complete fertilizers.

CALIFORNIA'S SHARE.

Establishments	39
Capital employed	$4,838,573
Wage-earners, average number	1,233
Their yearly wages	$890,658
Miscellaneous expenses, yearly	$465,782
Cost of materials used yearly	$18,618,549
Value of yearly product	$21,795,694

In the five years, 1900 to 1905, capital increased 12.6 per cent.; wage-earners, 35.5 per cent.; wages paid, 63.5 per cent., and value of yearly product, 38.7 per cent.

California has large areas of rich land for the pasturage of stock of all kinds. This condition, convenient transportation facilities to other markets, and the fact that the large packers east of the Rocky Mountains have not secured as strong a foothold upon the Pacific Coast as in other sections of the country have combined to build up the business of the State in meat products.

Dr. Humelbaugh:

This will introduce the bearer, my friend, Mr. Luce, who is in trouble with his teeth. His family dentist tells him his teeth must go, but I, as his friend, send him to you, telling him that five years ago I had practically the same experience when my family physician, Dr. M. R. Stewart (now Health Commissioner of Salt Lake City,) advised my consulting Dr. Hummelbaugh. Nearly all my teeth were either loose or decayed to the gums. Today, after five years' usage they are good as ever, and I defy anyone to distinguish which are false and which natural.

BY EDWARD C. BUTLER.

ITY OF MEXICO, Sept. 20.—George Harry Mitchell of Los Angeles, are officials of the Mitchell Min- Company, report that construction the railroad and the development of mines at La Dicha, Guerrero, are gressing satisfactorily. The com- is building a road from Port rques, just north of Acapulco, to mines. Grading is to be hastened the sixty miles of the line recently Eighteen miles have already graded.

George Mitchell says that the pres- low price of copper is due to man- ation of some of the larger inter- and not to overproduction, as was out by representatives of those rests. The estimated surplus is 50,000,000 pounds, not sufficiently , in his judgment, to cause de- sion in the market. The consump- of copper, furthermore, has shown increase of about 22 per cent. dur- the past year. If the price drops, thinks, a number of mines must , as much low grade ore now be- handled could not then be worked profit. Mr. Mitchell stated that Anaconda mines would cut down production one-half and that the interests would have to reduce uction at least a third, in such an . He, however, looks for im- ement in the market and an ad- of several cents a pound.

Staying in Business

So many stores have attempted to trade on the credulity of the public by claiming to be "Selling Out," "Closing Out," or "Retiring from Business"—that we believe it good policy to let the people know just where we stand. We have little respect for any concern that will attempt to mislead its patrons—or that resorts o misrepresenation to influence trade. We are here to stay. We believe in the "Live and Let Live" policy. Quick sales and small profits enable us to undersell other stores. WHAT'S SAID IN SAN FRANCISCO.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 27.—The political situation is rather strained this week but all agree on one thing and that is that sweet peace has received a knockout blow. The scramble for offices in November will be as strenuous as ever and the three parties will appeal to the voters with the same old zeal. The Union Labor party people have placarded the town with appeals to the toilers to register in order to vote for justice, liberty and fair play. The appeal says:

"Vote to fight the Calhouns with good laws and municipally owned railroads, instead of with assessments and wagons. Vote to give corrupt political bosses San Quentin instead of a palace. Vote to recall boodlers from office. Vote them to prison cell instead of expulsion by the Big Stick and the filling of their offices by men who refuse to have the Geary street railroad run on an eight-hour basis as the charter provides."

Of course Abe Ruef can make a technical defense to this that he is not living in a palace but in a boarding house.

"Doc" Leahy, Former Police Commissioner and impressario, is not perturbed because of the story that the building he leased the city for municipal purposes is unsafe. He receives $25,000 a year rental and if the edifice collapses with loss of life he stands ready to be congratulated by a grateful community. Consternation reigns, however, among some of the officials for in the event of a collapse they would be precipitated into the city prison below and there would be a confusion of identity.

The platform men of the United Railways weary of being continually arrested for trifling offenses such as carrying concealed howitzers and forcefully applying controller bars to obstinate human heads have carried the war into the enemy's country. A few days ago they had a capitalist arrested for refusing to pay his fare and at the City Prison he was charged with disturbing the peac

Four dictionaries with an accompanying bill for $80 innocently sent to the Board of Works has caused some forthright expressions of opinion from Commissioners Casey, Eagan and Aigeltinger. As a result of the publicity given the incident the overburdened taxpayers will not have to settle the bill for all the books as the officials decided that they would keep only one for the office. Messrs. Casey and Aigeltinger decided that they did not need any dictionaries to tell them how to build sewers and repave the streets while Eagan said that if he took one he would pay for it himself.

There is no longer any fear of the bubonic plague reaching the epidemic stage; but as a matter of precaution the health authorities have called for a hundred volunteers to act as sanitary inspectors to see that all back yards are properly cleaned up. Several dairymen have been heavily fined for furnishing impure milk, and altogether the general health conditions of the free people of the city bid fair to be greatly improved. The condition of the unfortunates in the City Prison is as deplorable as ever and Dr. Blue of the United States Marine Hospital Service says that it is one of the most uninhabitable spots that he has ever seen in his experience as a surgeon.

The eternal fitness of things may not appeal to all men, but when it does penetrate the understanding of one individual he shold be praised for acting on it. Former Police Chief "Jerry" Dinan at his own request has been granted sixty days leave of absence without pay. He feels a certain delicacy about serving the people of this city even in the humble capacity as a policeman while there are several indictments for felonies hanging over his head. It remains for a jury to decide shortly whether he will ever serve the city again.

A warm personal friend and admirer of Abe Ruef, who for four years has filled several lucrative positions in the municipality, has resigned from the secretaryship of the Board of Works because he feels he can better himself financially in private employ. He says that he is undecided whether to accept a position as a baseball manager or become famous as a theatrical impressario. His first advent into public life under the Ruef administration was an appointment in the Board of Health to fill the positions of six civil service employés who had been discharged on the score of economy. With such an experience as an all round man he might become a baseball manager as well as an impressario.

"Big Jim" Gallagher, the former Supervisor who distributed corporate gifts to his colleagues in amounts designated by Abe Ruef, has been the star witness this week in the trial of Tirey L. Ford charged with bribery. The big fellow has kindly postponed his trip to Europe in order to help the prosecution. He has denied taking any money for any other than a good purpose such as granting an overhead trolley franchise when a stricken community sorely needed it. On the stand he told of having $35,000 in two safe deposit boxes in this city and he admitted that he took the money for his vote in the Board of Supervisors; but in extenuation he testified that while he took money he did not take rum.

PLUTO.

THE ICE WE MAKE.

BY WALTER J. BALLARD.

According to Census Bulletin 83, the manufacture of ice in the United States is a comparatively new industry, and its growth has been remarkable. In 1870 the industry had hardly made a beginning, but figures just published of the census of manufactures, 1905, tell a very different story. Here they are for both the years named:

	1870.	1905.
Establishments	4	1,320
Capital employed	[illegible]	[illegible]
Wage-earners, average	97	16,101
Yearly wages	[illegible]	$5,549,162
Cost of materials, yearly	$92,163	$6,611,325
Value of yearly product	[illegible]	$22,790,065

The industry has gained a foothold in every State and Territory, except Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana and Wyoming, in which States ice is a natural produce. But even in these States the refrigeration process is used in cold-storage warehouses.

The leading ice manufacturing States, according to the number of establishments are Texas, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Louisiana, New York, California and Missouri. According to quantity of ice produced, however, the leaders are, Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Texas, Missouri, California, Louisiana, Indiana, Illinois and New Jersey.

By chief cities the production ranking is, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Baltimore, and New Orleans. Naturally, ice manufacture is largely an urban industry.

In the entire industry, in 1905, the fuel used cost $4,365,316, and the ammonia $612,128. The quantity of ice made was 7,199,448 tons.

The 1905 increase over 1900 was 67.6 per cent. in quantity and 68.8 per cent. in value. This shows practically no advance in cost of manufacture even though "local ice-barons" send the retail prices up.

RAILROAD NOTES.

It appears that the Boston and Maine holdings recently acquired by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad amount to 120,000 shares, which is considerably less than a majority. This holding prevents the road going into the hands of the New York Central, and at the same time relieves the New York, New Haven and Hartford from responsibility for the management of the Boston and Maine.

Frank Gilroy, chief engineer of the New York Central's compressed air system in Buffalo, has invented a device for tamping up ties with pneumatic tools, which assure a uniform stroke. Experts are of the opinion that such a method will solve the problem of broken rails. Rubber hose carries the compressed air to the tools, which are operated simultaneously on opposite sides to each tie, and pound away at the rate of several hundred strokes each minute.

In the fiscal year ended June 30 the Erie Railroad made liberal increases in its gross and net earnings over those of the preceding fiscal period. The net earnings increased $1,735,000, to a total of $16,221,000. After paying dividends of $2,555,000 on its first and second preferred stocks the company had a balance of $1,706,000 of surplus for the year.

The "Soo" Railroad has authorized an increase of $21,000,000 of its capital stock, only $4,200,000 of which is to be issued this year.

The Harriman lines have placed orders for 125 new locomotives, the first deliveries to be made this fall. It has been decided not to order any more freight cars at the present time, because the prices asked are considered too high.

The annual report of the Reading company shows the largest gross receipts for the last fiscal year in the history of the company. Notwithstanding this, the net earnings decreased $786,847 over the net earnings of the previous year.

Prof. Elwood Mead, who has been elected head of the department of irrigation of the State University, recently refused an offer of $15,000 a year to take up investigation work in Australia. MINES AND MINING—Past Week's News of the Surrounding Ore Districts.

RARE MINERALS, METALLURGY AND CHEMISTRY.

To Correspondents:

This department is not conducted for pay. Its object is to convey reliable information of interest and value to the public, and it is not for the private benefit of any miner, collector, speculator or prospector. Correspondents are particularly cautioned to take careful note of the statements and injunctions contained in the paragraphs below.

(1.) Specimens must be small and bear a tag giving name and address of sender, and the general—not exact—locality from whence the specimen was taken, also the name of it as nearly as the sender knows. Send, also, with the specimen a clearly-written letter briefly describing the find and what the finder wishes done with it. The letter must be properly dated and plainly signed.

(2.) No attention will be paid to anonymous letters or to letters signed merely with initials.

(3.) No examination of samples or specimens will be made in cases where The Times may decide that the specimen and inquiry are not of public interest. This office does not undertake to perform the work of an assay office.

(4.) Inquiries relative to matters of purely personal interests will not be answered.

(5.) When no response to an inquiry made or specimens sent appears in these columns, the inquirer will understand that his inquiry does not come within the purview of this department.

(6.) It is impossible to return specimens, as they must necessarily be destroyed or impaired in the process of analysis.

Address invariably, The Times.

Old Baldy Samples.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 7.—[To the Editor of The Times:] This ore comes from desert side of Baldy. I tested for manganese and lead; got negative results. Please give me qualitative analysis. Sincerely, H. L. L.

ANSWER: The eleven samples submitted by you show that Baldy was in a decidedly feverish condition at one time.

If the specimens really came from the locality stated, prospectors should sit up and take notice.

Two of your samples scratch glass; are not affected by the common acids but are partly soluble in hydrofluoric acid; both specimens are of vitreous luster and are known as silicon dioxide (quartz.)

Another sample (brownish red iron silicate) is partly oxydized and carries pyrite (iron disulphide) in crystals with pseudomorphic values in gold; this is decidedly a valuable concentrating ore.

The crystallized calcite sample carries a low per cent of native copper.

We will now allude to the acicular (needle like,) glassy, feldspathic specimen; mineralogically— it is beautiful and carries crystallized native copper, as also, azurite and malachite.

One specimen submitted is birds-eye porphyry.

The elongated speckled black sample in white decomposed porphyritic matrix carries native copper with traces of cinnabar, a most peculiar combination.

The multi colored calcite sample carries copper values, and the remaining specimens are ores of copper.

Birdseye Porphyry.

SEARCHLIGHT (Nev.), Sept. 5.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Under separate cover I send you some rock. Will you be kind enough to let me know what mineral it contains and the name of the rock?

I found a ledge of it six miles from Searchlight, Yours truly, W. F.

ANSWER: Note the feldspathic crystals disseminated throughout the rock. The sample is porphyritic. It would be well to prospect the ledge for vein matter. Unless the rock carries precious metal it would be of no commercial value.

Massive Garnet.

VICTORVILLE, Sept. 9.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Will you kindly give me an analysis of the specimens I am sending under separate cover?

The ore comes in large bodies associated with lime and schist in the San Bernardino Mountains near here, Greatly oblige, C. G. L.

ANSWER Your sample is Grossular garnet. Approximate analysis: Silica 40, alumina 23, lime 37—percentages as noted.

Greenstone.

SAN PEDRO, Sept. 1.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The sample is from Lespe Cañon. J. A. A.

Cupreous.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 2.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I hand you herewith two samples of rock from near Death Valley and would like to know if they contain any values. Yours and oblige, A. S. W.

ANSWER: No. 1 is made up of four very small specimens of which are quartzitic with limonite (yellow iron oxide,) such ore should be assayed for gold.

Sample 2 (three small specimens) is a good grade copper ore. The red colors are (partly) earthly cuprite (tile ore.)

Altaite and Hematite.

ANAHEIM, Sept. 7.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am sending you some samples of rock found in the Piute Mountains, Kern county.

In sample (1) is the bulk of the gray mass a sulphide?

In washing it in the pan it appears to have a metal heavier than gold and gold washes over it. Are there traces of tellurium or platinum in it?

In sample (2) is this drusy luster and iron coating due to fire action?

The samples are from the same piece of rock, which is general in the Piute region. Thanking you for your kindness and for the desired information, Yours truly, J. B. C.

ANSWER: You are replied to with caution aforethought. Sample (1) consisting of two very small specimens is Altaite (a lead telluride) combined with limonite and (pseudomorphic) pyrite. No platinum is present.

Sample (2) is a low grade iron peroxide. The drusy luster and iron coating is not, necessarily, due to fire action; but, the term "oxide" represents a burnt substance.

Molybdenite.

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 1.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Is this speckled sample from over the Mexican line, Molybdenite or graphite? Yours truly, V. C. E.

Right.

CUSTER (S. D.) Aug. 30.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The specimen sent you is from near Oroville. Some call it albite. I believe it to be spodumene. Am I right? Yours sincerely, D. L.

Doubtful Meerschaum.

SEARCHLIGHT (Nev.) Aug. 26.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Kindly advise me regarding the enclosed sample: (1) What is it? (2) How valuable? (3) Where can a market be had for it? (4) Is there any other known deposit of meerschaum in the United States? (5) What is it used for except in the manufacture of pipes, etc? (6) What is the process of manufacture? Who are the buyers?

Pardon me for asking so many questions but as your "In the Earth" department has always seemed to me a regular well conducted "Information Bureau" I, therefore, take the liberty of asking the above question. L. R. W.

ANSWER: There are people who would be very lonesome if questions were not fired at them continually fore and aft. Answering your questions: (1) Asilicate of magnesia contaminated with iron oxides and other impurities and mineralogically, meerschaum. (2) Not of great commercial value. Probably a market could be found for it in Los Angeles if tests were satisfying as a "filler" in walls, partitions, etc. (4) There are many deposits of meerschaum in the United States; the quality suitable for the manufacture of pipes is located in New Jersey, New Mexico, and elsewhere and worth, say, $2 a pound retail. (5) When first taken from "its native lair" meerschaum is soft and forms a lather like soap. It has been used as Fuller's earth; for washing linen, and the Turks use it as a medicine (probably as good as any other dope.) See further Encyclopedia and "Mineral Resources of the United States." (6) Owing to the lightness in weight, and the porosity of the mineral, meerschaum absorbs the oil obtained as a by-product in smoking. Pipes made from it acquire a brown color. The Germans make pipe bowls by first "soaking the mineral in tallow, then in wax, and finally by polishing with shave grass." Before soaking in wax you can stain the mineral in a solution of ferrous sulphate mixed with a little of the substance known in medicine as "dragon's blood."

Manganese Dioxide.

GLENDORA, Sept. 3.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I send you today a sample of mineral from near the south end of Death Valley in San Bernardino county that I believe to be a maganese silicate. Is this of value in the manufacture of steel?

What is the value of manganese per pound, Yours truly, N. E. L.

ANSWER: Your samples are manganese dioxide combined with silica and iron. When free from phosphorus and other deleterious admixtures it is of value in the manufacture of steel; in chlorination and bleaching plants, and as a deodorizing content, etc.

The metal (manganese) has no regular market value. It ranges from $5 to $100 per pound, depending on the state of consciousness of the seller. Manganese dioxide (over 40 per cent.) is worth from two cents to two bits per pound. Your stuff is worth probably three dollars per ton f.o.b. cars.

Quite a Bunch.

GLOBE (Ariz.) Sept. 1.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The enclosed samples were taken from a deposit located in Globe mining district. I have traced the ledge over three miles. I take it to be alumina and other samples as sapphire. The pink specimen gets me. Will you kindly diagnose and oblige, Very truly yours, C. B.

ANSWER: "Diagnosing" for the mining boys in the hills is a duty ever present with the editor of this department. What you term "alumina" is a low grade kaolin. The glistening, white, broken, concretionary, half-rounded specimen is chalcedony (a variety of quartz) as is, also, the light pink colored, hard fragment. The darker pink specimens are porphyritic contaminated with low per cent manganese carbonate and iron oxides.

Oxide and Sulphide.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 3.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The accompanying sample is from a three foot streak in a wide vein of hematite in the mountains south of Soledad Cañon, Los Angeles county. I would like to know if it contains gold, silver, platinum or tellurium. The main vein carries some gold and silver. I. V. S.

ANSWER: A number of specimens are sent to The Times from the locality by you stated. Your sample is made up of different iron oxides including chrome. The pinchbeck brown observable under the glass is pyrrhotite (magnetic pyrite.)

There is no tellurium in the sample. For gold, silver and platinum any assayer will give you the values asked for from one assay or scorification.

NEVADA.

GOLDFIELD'S ORE OUTPUT.

STEADY SHIPMENTS OF HIGH-GRADE FROM BIG MINES.

All Merger Workings to Be Connected—St. Ives Ready to Begin Shipments—Mohawk Annex Promoters to Be Prosecuted for Alleged Swindling.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Sept. 27.—In the first two weeks of September the Goldfield Consolidated mines sent to market about $250,000 worth of high-grade ore, the shipments footing up to 2218 tons, and coming from the Hayes-Monnette dump and Mohawk-Combination leases and the Combination, Mohawk and Red Top mines. The average weekly production of Consolidated mines was 2246 tons for August and 2940 tons for July, the August decrease having been occasioned by the walkout of miners.

Ultimately, all the mines of the merger will be connected with the Jumbo shaft on the Consolidated Claremont claim, which is bounded on the north by the Red Top Extension, on the east by the Curly George and the Jumbo Extension's Gold Wedge fraction, and on the south and west by the Grizzly Bear and Lucky Boy claims of the Consolidated group. Much of the work now under way is of a purely development nature, and Consolidated cannot hope to reach its top production status for some months. One of the greatest improvements will be the machine shops and 450-horse-power compressor being built near Jumbotown.

FLORENCE LEASES.

Three leases on the Florence shipped 553 tons of ore in the first two weeks of September, an average of 276 tons weekly. They are the Florence L. & M., the Little Florence and the Syndicate. In August the average weekly output of the leases was 505 tons, and in July it was 285 tons. The Mohawk Florence lease was one of the August contributors, but it shipped nothing in July nor in the first two weeks of September. The maiden shipment from the Syndicate lease was made in August, and there seems no doubt but that September will be the banner production month of Florence's history.

In three months the Little Florence lease on the Florence, to expire February 3, paid to the Florence company $231,993.95 in royalties and $177,800 for extraction of ore from outside its boundary lines, a total of $409,793.95. Henceforth the lease will ship at the rate of 100 tons daily, having opened at the 400-foot level a big body of average $300 ore. A recent shipment brought returns of $16,000 per ton.

Adjoining the old Reilly lease, the extension of whose pay shoot it probably has, lies the lease of the Florence Leasing and Mining Company on the Florence. There, at a depth of 385 feet, is exposed a three-foot body of ore that shows free gold, and has been proved for fifty feet. Shipments will henceforth be larger than ever before.

Abutting upon the Florence Leasing and Mining, the Nevadan lease on the Florence, connected with the former on the 378-foot level, has a shaft down 500 feet, and has cut the same ledge, three feet wide, twenty inches being of a shipping grade, twelve inches sampling $71 and six inches averaging $1420 per ton. This is on the 196-foot level, whither an upraise is going from the 395-foot.

The Baby Florence lease on the Florence sidelines the Florence Leasing and Mining. At 285 feet it has run into twelve to fourteen inches of sulphide ore that gave a recent grab sample worth $255.20 per ton. On the 150 level, four feet of oxide ore is good for $134 the ton.

JUMBO EXTENSION.

Jumbo Extension has received from the Mohawk-Jumbo and Higginson leases on its Wedge claim $87,572.07 in royalties. Other shippers on the same claim are the Frances-Mohawk and Mohawk Ledge leases. The average weekly shipments from all Jumbo Extension workings were 407 tons for July, 774 tons for August, and 692 tons weekly for the first two weeks of September.

In August the Mohawk-Jumbo lease sent to market ore of the value of $225,953.77. The 500-foot shaft is dropping for the 600 level, and the present daily production is about 100 tons.

On company account the St. Ives will soon begin regular shipments from the 250-foot level, where the ledge runs $75 per ton. The last ore marketed was from the Codd lease, a lot of eighteen tons, in August.

No high-grade has come from the Sandstorm since the shipping of twenty-one tons in July. The crosscut which the company is driving on the 400-foot level is expected, however, to run into the ore that gave up fortunes in the past. The Lord lease is tunneling for the ledge. A new hoist has been purchased by the Sandstorm Leasing and Mining Company, which is sinking for the extension of the Kendall ledge. The floor of the Atkins lease shaft is all ore at ninety feet, and crosscutting will start at the 100 level.

Low grade ore in quantity is in evidence at the 254-foot level on the Jupiter, between the Waverly and the Kendall, and it is possible that a mill will be built to handle it. The immense flow of water tapped with the ledge will be utilized by the city water company.

PROMOTERS IN TROUBLE.

Stockholders of the Mohawk Annex Mining Company have decided to institute both civil and criminal proceedings against the directors and promoters of the concern, charging them with obtaining money under false pretenses, and claiming $27,000 damages.

Five feet of good-looking ore appears on the 250-foot level in the workings of the Goldfield Red Hills Mining and Leasing Company on the Red Hills.

Rochester and Simmerone are two mines which bid fair to enter the regular shipping list before the end of September. The Todd lease on the Simmerone has penerated a big lead of material, barely under the smelter class now, and improving with every shot, while the company workings on the Rochester have crosscut a mammoth ledge that promises even greater riches than are found in the adjoining Etiwanda.

SEARCHLIGHT STRIKES.

Rich Gold Ore on the Spokane and in Eldorado Canyon—Sale of Claims.

SEARCHLIGHT (Nev.) Sept. 27.—The Searchlight-Spokane Company, one mile north of town, which has recently discovered on the east part of the Spokane claim about a dozen stringers and small veins up to two and one-half feet in thickness, carrying high gold values, has just let a contract to go to water level, estimated at 225 feet. In the preliminary work they already have filled some one hundred sacks with ore, much of which will go $500 to the ton. There is a general south and east strike to the new discoveries.

The tailings of the Blossom ore, now coming from the Searchlight Mining and Milling Company's mill, are to be cyanided by the mill owners.

The Black Hawk Consolidated Company of Eldorado Cañon, whose new ten-stamp mill is rapidly nearing completion, last week made a very rich strike in some prospect work on its Mountain claim. To a depth of twenty feet the new ore varies from six inches to eighteen inches in thickness, and it is shot through and through with specks of gold of the size of pinheads. While assays of almost any amount can be obtained, it is said to average close to $1000. This prospecting work was being done concurrently with the deeper development. The new strike is some 1200 feet northwest of the mill. The water-pipe line from the Venus shaft to the mill has been completed.

The Prudential Mining Company is a new concern, also in the cañon, now engaged in hauling out supplies and equipment preparatory to extensive work. It is backed by Los Angeles business men.

A. C. Calkins of Los Angeles, and some brokers, have joined Charles Vanina of this place, and the party are now en route to their marble prospect, about seventy-five miles northeast of Ely. The deposit is so extensive, and of such a character that the Federal government officials will soon make an examination. Small lots are now being hauled out by wagon, a distance of seventy-five miles, and at a small profit.

The Copper King mine, nine miles northwest of Cima, and owned by the principal stockholders of the Quartette mine of this place, is making very satisfactory progress, as evidenced by a final and large payment having been made on the purchase under bond. The total consideration was $125,000. A depth of 500 feet has been gained, and arrangements lately have been made to sink an additional 500 feet. The leading shipper in that district is the Copper World, owned by Needles smelter people.

The shaft of the Calivada Mining Company, near the St. Louis mine, has sounded its first 100-foot level, following the ledge, of which, from time to time, high values have been secured. From the bottom a twenty-seven-foot crosscut has been run, the latter continuously in ore of low grade, but frequently cut up by stringers carrying high values. A new contract for 200 feet of sinking has been let.

The top of Doherty Mountain, overlooking the town to the north, is to be punctured by a Denver company known as the Searchlight Quintette Gold Mining Company. They have let a contract, and have a well-defined copper-stained outcrop to start on.

The Eddie is to have a vertical working shaft of 500 feet. Work is to commence as soon as the necessary machinery arrives, including a twenty-five-horse-power hoist, which has been ordered.

Herman Wesselhoff confirms the rumor that the shaft he is sinking in the north part of Eldorado Cañon is in high-grade copper ore. He is now down 100 feet and the ore extends from wall to wall.

F. L. Millen has sold to a party of Hollywood capitalists a group of eleven claims at Eldorado Cañon, the consideration being $10,000. It is the Partnership group, and located a quarter of a mile north of "Sandy" Harris mine. The purchasers are E. W. Twist, W. F. Snodgrass, A. E. Rieshel, J. T. French and W. H. Weddington.

"Sandy" Harris has new ore, some fifteen tons of which is high grade, sacked and ready to ship. The ore he is extracting is estimated to average about $200 a ton, while the picked stuff will go better than $2000. His associates are some young men in the employ of the First National Bank of Los Angeles.

MONTGOMERY-SHOSHONE.

Large Reduction Plant in Commission in the Bullfrog District.

RHYOLITE (Nev.) Sept. 27.—Montgomery Shoshone's big mill is in commission. It is one of the largest and most complete plants in the West, constructed by contract by the Traylor Engineering Company of New York, and costing a quarter of a million dollars. The plant combines treatment by amalgamation, concentration and cyanidation. Electricity furnishes the power. One of the most important mechanical features is the enormous pump to drain the mine, whose main shaft is going from the 550 to the 600-foot level.

Montgomery Shoshone is also shipping direct to the smelters a carload of high-grade daily.

The showing at the Denver workings of the Tramp Consolidated continues to improve. The entire breast of the south drift from the bottom of the winze that was sunk from the fourth level is ore that runs in gold and copper. Other laterals on the Tramp are following the same grade of ore.

Most of the parts for the Gold Bar mill have been delivered, and it is expected that the crew of mechanics coming to do the work will have the plant ready for business by the end of this year.

A pumping plant is being installed at the property of the United Mining syndicate, a close corporation, developing ground near the Mayflower.

With the result of tests being made at San Francisco upon a trial shipment of a carload of its ore, will be determined the character of mill to be built by the Homestake, which intends rushing construction with all possible dispatch.

COPPER SLUMP CLOSES MINES.

CHRISTMAS CAMP QUITS WORK FOR THE PRESENT.

Sales of Property in Mohave County. Woman Prospector Strikes Silver Lead—New Life for the Tiger Mine. Nuggets Found at Bottom of a Well.

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Sept. 26.—The shut-down of the Saddle Mountain at Christmas, Pinal county, now is practically complete, only about twenty men being retained to care for the property. It is given out that it is impossible to pay expenses in the operation of the mine and smelter with copper at its present price, considering the wagon haul to Christmas from Winkelman and the fact that the product is in the shape of matte, which has to be shipped to other works for further reduction. That the company does not intend to quit, however, is shown by extensive plans that are being worked out for building a 600-ton smelter on the Gila River, on the line of the Phoenix and Eastern Railroad, to succeed the present incomplete 200-ton plant at the mine. Ore is to be transported to the new works by bucket tramway. The Southern Pacific is about to extend its line up the river from Winkelman to the new smelter site, on the way to a connection with the Gila Valley Railroad at San Carlos. The Saddle Mountain Company has on hand a full narrow-gauge railroad equipment, including rails and rolling stock, for a line to connect the camp with Winkelman, but this move of the main line will render most of the road unnecessary. Heretofore the wagon haul from the railroad has cost $7 a ton and, till lately, the Southern Pacific put up its freight rates on coke $5 a ton more. Last year the Christmas mines produced 2,328,492 pounds of copper bullion, mainly reduced from matte at the Humboldt smelter, near Prescott. Even with its small smelter, its average freight bills on the Phoenix and Eastern road were $13,000 a month.

At Globe there is no indication of curtailment of product at the Old Dominion smelter, which is turning out about 100,000 pounds of copper bullion a day.

At Kelvin, the Kelvin-Calumet Mining Company is about to commence the sinking of a shaft, to explore formations to the depth of at least 1000 feet. The company is making large shipments of high-grade concentrates from its mill. All the mineral holdings of the corporation are to be patented at once.

A chunk of gold and silver matte, weighing about twenty-five pounds and valued at $785, lately was brought to Phoenix from the Rawhide mine. In the Bill Williams Fork district, a mine now rechristened the Northern Light. It is an old property, with ores so free that they were smelted sixty years ago in rude adobe furnaces by Mexicans, who coined false dollars, with some success.

Fifty miles north of Phoenix, the Santa Ana Mining Company is installing a new hoist. The mine has been opened up to the depth of about 200 feet, late assays showing copper values running about 30 per cent. The shaft is in the ore body, which is considerably wider than the opening. With the new equipment, sinking is to be prosecuted to 400 feet of depth. The mine is almost wholly owned in Santa Ana, Cal.

MOHAVE COUNTY.

Mohave county is a section of Arizona which has been worked for mineral wealth for more than forty years, mainly for silver, though it contains today the best producing gold mine in the Southwest. Development of the region has been by fits and starts, at times mining almost being abandoned. Just at the present time, prosperity seems to be drifting down upon the county, for much outside money is being invested in its mines. One sale, that of the Keystone-Sherman group, was for $150,000, practically all cash in hand, paid to James Uncapher and Charles E. Sherman. The purchasers were the Deming Smelting Company. The property, which is at Mineral Park, is one of the old mines of that district and has a record of producing 600 ounces of silver to the ton.

The Utah and Arizona Gold and Copper Company, through W. O. Young of Salt Lake, has bought the John Kemple property of seventy-five claims lying about half way between Chloride and White Hills. The price is $75,000, of which one payment has been made. On the property is a ten-foot ledge said to average $10 to the ton in free gold.

Negotiations are in progress for the purchase of the Tragedy group, twenty-two miles west of Kingman, owned by O. D. M. Gaddis and Dr W. E. Sauls of Kingman. The property has a thirty-foot ledge of gold-silver ore, a ledge that is set obliquely in a hat-shaped butte. It has been estimated that the mine has 500,000 tons of ore in sight.

At Chloride the Tennessee mine, the most important property of the camp, now is idle. Its great dumps have been worked in concentrators for gold and silver, and now are to be concentrated again for the lead and zinc values contained.

THE BRADSHAWS.

Silver ore running two hundred ounces to the ton has been struck by Mrs. Jennie E. Clarke, in a claim owned by her in the vicinity of the once-famous Peck mine, in the northern Bradshaws. Mrs. Clarke, since the death of her husband two years ago, has made a distinct success in the mining business and has become a practical prospector and a miner, with ability to handle drill and pick when necessary.

Thirty years ago the Tiger mine in the Bradshaws was one of the great properties of the Southwest. Now the Tiger camp is to have a new lease of life, through discoveries of rich ore that have been made in properties that had been thought to be worked out. In the Tiger ledge has been found an eight-foot vein of shipping ore, which, however, runs so high in zinc that it is to be concentrated and the base metal separated before the more valuable part can be sent to the smelter. The old mine is being given a new hoist of great capacity and a new air compessor equipment. The twenty-stamp mill is to be started up before the first of October, and is expected to treat from 1600 to 2000 tons of ore a month. In the Gray Eagle mine prospecting by diamond drill has developed the presence of five veins of good ore, parallel to that which has been worked out to the 800-foot level. As far as developed these new veins are from two to four feet in thickness and carry values averaging $40 to the ton.

George T. Ireland of Los Angeles has been elected a director in the McKinley Mining and Development Company, which has mining property near Iron Springs, about ten miles west of Prescott. The company is putting in a new hoist, with the intention of developing the mine to considerable depth.

A SCOTCH VERDICT.

The long-continued litigation between the Dooley-Suttle interests, revolving around the sale of mining property by Suttle, to the Burlington Gold Mining Company, was brought down to a point by a decision of Judge R. E. Sloan of the District Court, lately rendered in Prescott. The magistrate decided that Suttle had been guilty of making false representations when he interested Dooley in the company. Yet, judgment had to be given for the defendant, on the point that more than one year had elapsed between the time that Dooley had been given opportunity to discover the truth concerning the transaction and the date upon which he commenced suit. The interesting decision was announced that discovery of fraud must be considered as dating from the time when the aggrieved party first was given full opportunity to inform himself concerning the facts constituting the "mistake."

NUGGETS IN A WELL.

The oddest sort of placer field has been found at Morristown, the junction point for Hot Springs, on the Santa Fé Railroad, forty miles northwest of Phoenix. A tea cup full of small gold nuggets was picked up at the bottom of a well, at the depth of 250 feet, in coarse river sand, not materially different from the formation through which the whole well had been dug. H. N. Cox, owner of the well, has decided to transform it into a mining shaft and will drift from the bottom in the hope that the deposit of gold is an extensive one. Though the shaft is dry to the bottom, it was expected that a flow of water from the near-by Hassayampa River would be struck at much shallower depth than that atttained. The Hassayampa, which flows through the richest gold-bearing section of Arizona, is noted for placer gold, having been worked by placer miners since 1868.

A ten-stamp mill has been ordered for the Alaska mine, which lies half a mile south of the famous Congress property, on a continuation of the main Congress ore body. Mill runs have given returns of $30 a ton in gold for 200 tons, and 1000 tons of good ore are on the dump. The mine has two shafts, down 400 feet, with 1200 feet of drifting. The permanence of the ore body has been demonstrated on the Congress property which has been explored to the depth of more than 4000 feet.

BOBTAIL BONDED.

The Bobtail mine, near Kelvin, has been bonded in Los Angeles for $65,000, which will mainly go to J. J. Sullivan. The deal was made by E. R. Stafford, who is to have charge of the work of development. He will also develop a group of ten claims lately bonded by him from George Westfall, twelve miles east of Florence. On this latter property has been uncovered a considerable body of carbonate ore that will run 8 per cent. in copper.

Native copper has been found at Ray in the Madeline shaft of the Big Lead Company.

At Dripping Springs, Pinal county, a promising copper mine is being operated by J. Wells Smith of Los Angeles, who has shipped several carloads of pay ore to the smelter.

Vanadium has been found four miles northeast of Kelvin, in five parallel veins. Edmund J. Carmody, a Kelvin banker, has become interested in the find and has secured eastern capital for development work. The metal also has been found near the Hassayampa, southeast of Wickenburg.

At a depth of 120 feet, a crosscut on the American Boy mine, five miles south of Casa Grande, shows a fourteen-foot ledge that samples 15 per cent. copper, as well as some gold and silver.

Twenty men have been laid off at the Black Warrior mine near Globe, constituting about half the working force, the management fearing a still further downward movement of the copper market.

SOUTHERN MINES.

Smelter and Power Plant for Silver Bell—Ajo Mine Has Been Sold.

TUCSON (Ariz.) Sept. 27.—A 350-ton smelter and a power plant larger than the one which supplies light and power in Tucson represent an expenditure of more than $500,000 by the Southern Arizona Smelting Company at Sasco. This town has sprung up on the desert just seven miles to the west of Red Rock on the main line of the Southern Pacific. It has railroad connection through the Southern Arizona road, which runs to Silver Bell.

The people who are erecting the smelter and power plant own three big mines—the Silver Bell at Silver Bell, the Tombstone at Tombstone, and the Congress at Congress.

Their smelter and electric plant will be completed by January 1, and are being erected primarily for the Silver Bell mines. The smelter will accept custom ores, but it will be taxed nearly to its capacity in handling the Silver Bell ores. From the power plant wires will carry the current to Silver Bell, where it will be used in the mines.

The Silver Bell people at the present time are shipping nothing less than 12 per cent. ores. They have gone through 1000 feet of milling ore in the two big properties—the Mammoth and the Union.

At the Mammoth, which is down 800 feet, big pumps are working on the 700-foot level, as there is a great inrush of water. The company employs several hundred miners, and will increase this force on the completion of the concentrator, which is now being erected at the camp.

The Cleveland-Arizona people have resumed operations on an extensive scale at their property in the Silver Bell district.

Ore shipments continue from the Omega mine, in the Helvetia district, and development work is also being carried on. The company still has 1500 tons of high-grade ore on the dump, which will be shipped to the El Paso smelters.

A deal has been completed by which the Rendell Ore Reduction Company, composed of Boston capitalists, secured the famous Ajo mine for $70,000. This mine has not been worked for several years. All of the workings on the property thus far have been of the gopher variety, only the rich surface veins yielding high-grade ore being followed. A conservative estimate is that the mine in the past yielded $300,000 to its original owners. In the early days the ore was shipped to the San Francisco smelters.

The smelter of the Ray Copper Company at Kelvin, in Pinal county, is being completely overhauled, and its capacity increased from 250 tons to 350 tons. It is stated that the capacity may be further increased to 1000 tons by June 1 of next year. The concentrator is located on the line of the Phoenix and Eastern, which taps the Pinal mining districts.

Shipments from Pioche.

Pioche, the famous old-time mining camp of Nevada, is coming into its own again by reason of the construction of the branch line of the Salt Lake road from Caliente. Many of the mines are taking out ore, in anticipation of the completion of the railroad, which is now promised by October 20, while others, including the Lyndon, are making shipments from Panaca, about twelve miles from Pioche, and to which point the line is in regular operation.

MINERS IDLE IN SOUTHWEST.

THOUSAND MEN DISCHARGED AT CANANEA.

Forces at Bisbee and Douglas Reduced and Fires Drawn from Furnaces—General Retrenchment in Copper Camps Due to Fall in the Price of Metal.

BISBEE (Ariz.) Sept. 26.—One thousand men have been discharged at Cananea from the mines of the Greene-Cananea Company, constituting about one-fourth of the total number of employés. Already miners are beginning to arrive, seeking employment here, without success. Hundreds of them are heading for Nevada. It is understood that, till copper prices improve, ore production will be confined to the mines of the Capote basin, within easy distance of the company's smelter at Ronquillo, and that work is to be suspended on the outlying properties at Puertocitos, on the farther side of the mountain range. Dr. Ricketts, general manager for the company, has stated that the output of the smelter probably would be cut down to a carload a day of bullion. The production has been four carloads a day. Yet there seems to be no let-up in execution of the plans of the corporation for larger smelter capacity and for the erection of a modern smelter on a new site. But there can be no doubt that at least half the force of miners is to be turned away for the present and ore production confined to the richer bodies to be found in the older mines of the company.

The bullion production at Cananea for August was more than 5,000,000 pounds, for four new furnaces, the last in commission only a week of the time. Two more reconstructed furnaces are to be complete within a few weeks. It is probable that much of the ore worked in the near future will come from a new strike on the 1050-foot level of the Capote, where an immense deposit has been found of copper pyrites that will average better than 18 per cent. metal.

Another important ore strike in the Cananea Mountains has been made in the Sierra del Cobre mine of the Phelps-Dodge Company, at the depth of only 150 feet, in a tunnel driven into the body about fifty feet. The same ore has been struck in two upper tunnels, showing one of the largest deposits ever known in the Southwest. In the Democrata mine, in the same locality, a fourth-level tunnel has broken into a marvelous cave, from whose walls wonderfully rich malachite ore now is being stoped.

Labor conditions in Bisbee are little changed, though a much smaller production of ore is going down to the Douglas smelters. All boys under 20 years of age have been discharged from the Copper Queen employ, including about fifty used in carrying tools and in car work. Another feature of retrenchment has been the abandonment of all Sunday work, other than that needed to protect and pump the mines. About 300 men, mainly Mexicans, have been discharged at the Copper Queen smelter, where only six of the ten furnaces are being kept warm. Vast quantities of coke for the Copper Queen, from the Phelps-Dodge ovens at Dawson, N. M., are being dumped for storage at El Paso till more stirring times.

Fifty men were dropped at the Calumet and Arizona smelter at Douglas, with the pulling of fires on one of the company's furnaces. It is told that another furnace will be drawn October 1. The smelter has four furnaces, of which three have been kept in operation. It is told that the idle time will be occupied by enlarging each furnace from 300 to 500 tons daily capacity.

The pumps have been drawn from the Saginaw-American property in Bisbee and work has been suspended on the property.

There is much speculation locally concerning the effect of the closing down of mines upon the labor market and its pay. The big companies of this district are bound to maintain their present high schedule of pay only while copper remains above 18 cents. It is probable that several thousand miners will soon be idle in the Southwest. Probably many of them will take up work on the irrigation and railroad projects that now are suffering for lack of hands, but the majority will remain around the camps, waiting for resumption of the extraordinary activity that has marked the year past. Incidentally, since the slump nothing more has been heard of the proposed unionizing of Bisbee and Douglas.

The Empire State property in the Chiricahua Mountains has been bonded by R. W. Clair to a Kansas City company. Late shipments from the mine have averaged about $1500 to the carload. The property has a thirty-foot ledge, with a paystreak twenty feet wide that averages $50 to the ton.

Extensive development work is being done on the Santa Rosa mine, [illegible] of Douglas, a property lately owned by James Kirk, mine superintendent of the Cananea companies, now controlled by the Cabullona Development Company. A drift on the 200-foot level has cut sixty-five feet of solid ore.

CRACKERJACK DISTRICT.

Bonanza Mine Now Ready to Ship [illegible] Native Copper in the King Solomon.

The summer heat having abated and the conditions generally being [illegible] favorable to heavy teaming in the desert region, the hauling of ore from the Crackerjack Bonanza mine, in the Crackerjack district, will commence soon. There are now about [illegible] equivalent to approximately [illegible] carloads, of ore on the dump of the mine, with the accumulation [illegible] increasing. The ore will be [illegible] and hauled to Silver Lake, on the Tonopah and Tidewater Railroad, [illegible] the latter will receive it for transportation to Salt Lake.

The Crackerjack Bonanza Company is doing some effective development work. The first station has been [illegible] in the main shaft at the seventy-[illegible] foot level, and crosscutting is [illegible] progress. This is the first crosscutting that the Bonanza company has done at this depth, and the result will be observed with great interest by the other parties owning claims on Bonanza Mountain.

It is expected to soon have the hoist in place at the shaft, as the road has been completed, and all is in readiness for its installation.

The company has granted two leases on portions of its ground, and negotiations for two more are under way.

The Crackerjack Gold Mining Company, the parent company of the Crackerjack district, has encountered some fine specimens of native copper in a new crosscut in the King Solomon claim. This crosscut is in [illegible]ty feet, and is being pushed ahead by two shifts of miners. At an early [illegible] the force on this property will be increased to three shifts.

New Desert Camp.

Avawatz is to be the name of [illegible] new mining camp one and [illegible] miles from Cave Springs, in the [illegible] of the Avawatz Mountains, San Bernardino county, California. The camp is rapidly growing. Numerous [illegible] and recent mining deals in close proximity to the district are responsible for the activity.

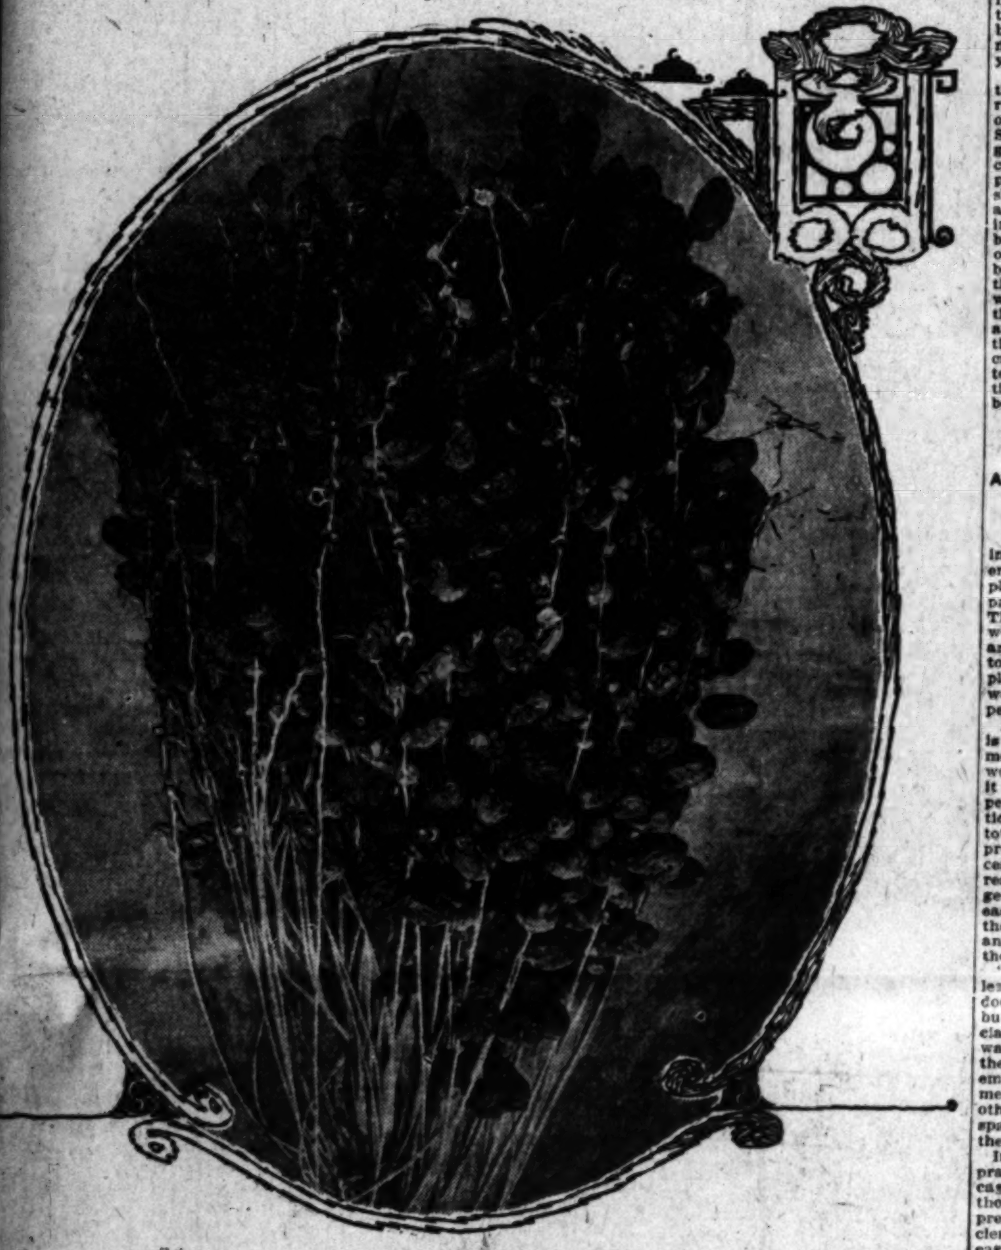
date palm, like the fig tree, the male and female flowers on trees. In a wild state pollina- accomplished by the wind, and are about equally divided as to sex. It is not left to this haphazard method in the cultivated orchards, however, for it would be far too expensive to cultivate and irrigate such a large proportion of male trees. The Arabs, and, before them the Assyrians, learned to pollinate artificially, and commercial planting is about one male tree to a hnudred female trees.

MALE AND FEMALE PALMS.

This proportion is only to be depended on in the old countries where the time of blossoming of the male flowers is well known. Seedling plants often blossom too late to be of any use. It matters less if the blossom comes too early, as the flowers can be preserved for some weeks. So in this country the proportion is one to fifty and often one to twenty-five.



A Bunch of Dates.

The male date palm generally has a strong trunk and more leafy crowns than the female tree, but the sex of the tree can be determined certainly only by the flower. The Arabs cut the male flower clusters from the trees shortly before the flowers are fully open, and with a bit of palm leaf or a string, tie a twig of these into a cluster of female flowers. The pollin readily carries, the fruit grows rapidly, and pressing upon the string or palm fiber breaks it. The trees do not all bloom at the same time, and each flower cluster must be pollinated separately. Sometimes an interval of several weeks elapses between the first blossoming and the last, but the Arabs rarely miss one tree, or even one flower cluster. With bare hands and feet, and with no appliance of rope, they climb the tall trees, passing unhurt between the sharp, rigid thorns that arm the lower leaves. They make a practice of keeping a few bunches of male flowers from the previous year, in case some of the female flowers appear in the spring, as sometimes occurs, before the male flowers are in bloom. Tied up in paper bags and hung in a cool place, they may be kept even two years without losing their vitality.

In the country bordering the Desert of Sahara the date blooms in April, sometimes, in some cases as late as June. About the end of June three fruits will have developed from each flower, and a remarkable phenomenon is seen. If the flowers producing the fruit have been pollinated, two of these three fruits fall, and a single date remains for each flower. If they have not been, all three continue to grow, closely crowding together, and imperfect in size. These dates never properly mature, and are without seeds. The cultivator can readily see at this stage of development what bunches will mature perfect fruit. More fruit is usually borne than can be nourished properly, and it is customary to wait for this stage of development that the cutting away of the excess of fruit may be wholly these imperfect bunches which are valueless. Some trees produce twice as many as the tree can support. Young trees just beginning to bear are left only one or two clusters; old trees eight or ten.

SEEDLING DATES.

Seedling dates have been growing in California and Arizona for many years, and in Mexico even longer, but when so propagated over half of the trees are males, and of those remaining not more than one in ten produces good fruit. When a hundred seeds are planted, 10 per cent. will yield edible dates, and of these not more than four or five trees will be of choice quality.

The date does not produce true to type from seed, for the reason that the pollen may have been from a worthless tree. There are always remarkable variations in the young trees, not one of which will reproduce exactly the parent type. Hence, the only satisfactory method of reproduction is by planting the suckers which spring up around the base of the trunk. These suckers are produced abundantly by young date palms, but when the tree is ten to fifteen years old, they stop growing. Three or four of these suckers are left attached to the parent tree, all the others are cut away. Those which are to be transplanted are left to grow until they are from three to six years old, that is, until thew have begun to develop roots.

In preparing for shipment all the roots are cut off, and the leaves as well, leaving only the bud in the center, protected by the leaf stalks.

It is astonishing how much this mere stump which remains can endure. The statement is made by the Arizona Experiment Station that some offshoots were shipped from the Sahara Desert by camel back to Biskra, ninety-five miles away, and from there to Algiers by rail, nearly four hundred miles, and only wet twice, once when they were started, and again when they were put on the train; then they were sent clear across the ocean to New York, and from there to New Orleans by steamer and from there to Arizona by rail again. There they were unpacked two months after they had been dug up in that oasis of the far off Sahara. About 80 per cent. of these suckers lived.

However, once they are transplanted the young offshoots must have plenty of water; they must be kept constantly wet; if they dry out once they are lost.

SUFFERED FROM MISREPRESENTATIONS.

California has had more than once to suffer in her attempts at fruit propagation through the treachery of Egyptian and Arabian growers, who, desirous of the failure of the Americans, have grossly misrepresented facts to those who sought information. For years George C. Roeding of Fresno was deceived in fig growing, but finally came out gloriously triumphant. In our own locality, the citron culture now a success, through the treachery of the Corsican growers brought failure and eventually death from bitter disappointment to the first propagator.

So with the date palm; many of the first offshoots brought here from Egypt were found to have been falsely named. A few, however, were of fair quality, and the success of these proved the climate and soil of Arizona in the vicinity of Tempe to be suited to their culture. It is a fact that of suckers transplanted in Arizona even after their long journey and dry packing, a larger number lived than the usual proportion expected to grow in their native soil, where they are cut, a remarkable record truly.

In 1898 the United States Department of Agriculture organized the Section of Seed and Plant Introduction, and the attention of this new bureau was turned to the need of securing a large assortment of correctly named offshoots of the date palm from the Algerian Sahara. The University of Arizona and the Arizona Agricultural Experiment Station offered to provide a special date garden, and to set out, irrigate and cultivate them if they could be had. Two visits were made to the Sahara districts, and as a result date shoots were set out, not only in the prepared locality, but in Phoenix, Ariz., in the date gardens at the substations of the California Experiment Station at Pomona and Tulare, and some were sent to private growers in California. Eighty per cent. of these plants lived.

DATE PALM RESISTS ALKALI.

One important fact in connection with the cultivation of the date palm in Arizona and California is that it is enormously resistant to alkali. It has been tried in soil of all degrees of alkalinity, and irrigated with all sorts of water, from good drinking water to that containing 1 per cent. of saline ingredients. No other profitable crop plant can stand as much alkali as the date palm. All ordinary useful plants, such as wheat, corn, alfalfa, peach, orange and plum trees, are killed by an amount of alkali which would have no influence on the date plam. The alkaline water from Lake Elsinore, which at one time proved so disastrous to the orange orchards of Riverside, Cal., contained only 84 to 116 grains per gallon; water used to irrigate the date palms at Algeria contains 250 grains, and really more, if gypsum is counted. Even the Australian saltbush cannot endure as much alkali as the date palm, but the young seedlings cannot withstand as much as the offshoots or old trees.

The valleys of the San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers give promise of being well fitted to the growth of the early-maturing dates; but here no late irrigation can be given, as the new growth thus started is liable to be caught by the early frosts. However, the section lying in the path of the cold winds that blow over San Francisco Bay and find their way through the break in the Coast Range would be unfit for this fruit. It is thought that in these localities fresh dates for table use may yet be produced, rather than those for drying. These could be shipped readily to all the principal Pacific Coast cities.

The date is the most expensive dried fruit in our market, and, especially at the holiday season, the demand is always greater than the supply.

The tree cannot be changed to another variety, as can other fruit trees, for it cannot be grafted or budded; hence it is of the greatest importance to plant the best offshoots at first. Even in times of peace, the regions about the Moroccan Sahara are extremely hazardous for Americans or Europeans, and only Arab or Berber merchants can be sent there. But the Department of Agriculture has been very successful in obtaining the best qualities from those fruitful oases, and from Tunis, Fayoum, in Central Egypt, Persia and Arabia. In addition to this, brains are being used lavishly in fitting each variety to the location where the soil and climate will be best fitted to its growth, and in this new Orient brains and work have never yet failed to win success.

It is a saying among the Arabs that the date palm must have its feet in running water and its head in the fire of the sky. Many of the oases of the Sahara have orchards of fruit trees growing under the half-shade of the crown of slender leaves high up on the palms, and under these, again, are shade-loving vegetables. This remarkable tree may be of greatest service in helping to transform some of our barren and desert land to veritable oases of greenness, cool shade and beauty. Why not, since all modern authorities say that underneath these wastes is plenty of water in which these far-reaching roots could stand, and there is no doubt that most of these regions are hot enough for its crowned head Perhaps we shall have to import the camel again, when that time comes, for to most of us the two belong in the same picture.

GUSSIE PACKARD DU BOIS.

THE SOLDIERING PROBLEM.

A Question Which Every Employer Finds It Necessary to Solve.

The question of "soldiering"—shirking work and idling on the part of employés—is a problem that every employer who carries a pay roll of any proportions has constantly to face. That "soldiering" exists in any plant where a large number of employés are engaged cannot be disputed. How to prevent it, how to stimulate employés to turn out an honest day's work for an honest day's wage is the perplexing point.

As any manufacturer knows, labor is the principal element of cost in almost every variety of commercial work. In some lines of manufacturing it amounts to 50 and 60 and even 80 per cent. of the entire cost of production. In office work the labor is the total cost, while in selling the finished product it amounts to from 3 to 50 per cent. of the article sold. Hence it will readily be seen that the necessity of getting the full quota of work from each employé is of vital importance to the employer, who would have a balance on the right side of the ledger at the end of the year.

"Soldiering" is one of the biggest leaks in the modern plant. Not only does the slow worker waste his time, but he impedes the work of his associates, and should five or six employés waste, say, one-fifth or one-sixth of their time, it becomes necessary to employ an additional laborer, and that means the installation of another machine and additional floor space, light, heat and record work in the office.

In speaking of this demoralizing practice, a prominent employer of Chicago—a man whose pay roll carries thousands of names—recently expressed the opinion that the most efficient remedy for this commercial disease, if it may so be termed, was to offer a reward. Make the employés profit sharers with the employers, thus holding out to them all through the year the hope of a reward for conscientious endeavor and loyal work. His corporation at the close of each year divides the profits with all employés who have been with the company for more than two years. To insure fairness and to make the scheme practical, a weekly record of each employé is kept, and at the end of the year the heads of the house can, at a glance, tell just what each man has done each week. This weekly report system shows just how much work and what character of work is done. The manager of each department sees this report each week, it is then examined by the general manager, and finally reaches the officers of the concern. In this way the house is able to keep close track of all its employés. Should one fall below the standard set by his fellow-employés' reports, he is admonished by his chief. Should he make a poor showing three weeks in succession he is discharged, but he is always warned three times, however, before his services are dispensed with. The knowledge on the part of the employés that their superiors are thoroughly posted as to the standing with the house stimulates the ambitious and painstaking men, and also serves as a prod to the slothful.

Another remedy offered, and said to be efficient, is to keep so much work ahead of your employés that their minds are always bent on getting through their present task and beginning on the next. They have neither time nor inclination to "soldier."

In a plant where a large force of men is at work, one of the simplest and most efficacious methods of preventing waste of time is to keep a record of each man's time and work, and compare these. Like the old "trapping" system in the little log schoolhouse, where lads were graded by the number of times they had worked their way from the foot to the head of their class, workmen may be graded in a factory. If 85 per cent. of the men can do a certain amount of work in a certain time, the other 15 per cent. should, or the employer should get men who could and would willingly do it.

King Edward and the Artist.

When King Edward was at Marienbad, says a Frankfurt paper, he made inquiry as to a silhouette artist whom he had met at the watering place years ago. The man was still there, and, as in former years, still made a living by dexterously cutting profile portraits from sheets of black paper. He was presented on the balcony of the Egerlander Hotel, where the King had taken luncheon with the Grand Duke and Duchess of Oldenburg, the Duke of Teck and several other friends. The King looked on while pictures of the women were being made, and then said, "Now it's my turn," and took his place before the picture man. "Get the hat right," said the King. "Don't forget the cigar. I'll hold it as I did years ago for you; and let the cane show"—all this in that faultless, real German which fascinates. Then, turning toward his smiling friends, he added, "I wonder whether he will flatter me as to figure." The profile picture was true as to figure.

Labor's Open Shop.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, NOW IN THE COLUMN OF OPEN SHOP CITIES.

THE demand of organized labor upon the builders and contractors of Louisville, Ky., whereby the latter would agree to employ only union labor, has been answered by the builders—they have declared open shop in Louisville. Every builder and contractor in the city has agreed to uphold the open shop principle, and although the local unions are out on strike, building is going on without interruption and Louisville has had an unusually busy season. Practically the same state of affairs existed in Louisville as that which harassed the Washington builders until they established the open shop in the Capitol City. The Louisville unions demanded that no non-union men be employed on buildings and asked the employers to sign an agreement to this effect. The employers met, decided the demands of the union were out of the question, and passed resolutions condemning the action of organized labor and pledged themselves to the open shop movement. The union men promptly went out on a strike and today the employers are practically masters of the situation. All the non-union men are employed while about 85 per cent. of the union men are walking the streets. The Louisville builders unhesitatingly declared that the closed shop principle is responsible for the anarchy, riot and bloodshed in San Francisco, Chicago and other cities. They also cited the fact that the increase in wages and the decreased efficiency of workmen had caused a serious decline in building operations in Washington, New York and other cities. One of the severest blows that has been dealt to organized labor in some time is the decision of the Louisville architects, who, at a recent meeting, agreed to advise their clients not to invite any contractor to bid on work who employs men affiliated with the Structural Building Trades Alliance. If the example of the Louisville architects is followed it will have a decidedly beneficial result upon the unsatisfactory conditions existing in a number of the larger cities.

The Louisville builders have organized an association which they believe is destined to play a prominent part in maintaining the open shop principle throughout the country. Each member of the association gives his note for his initiation fee, and the amount of his fee is provided as $2 for each $1 of the average monthly pay roll of the applicant for the twelve months preceding his application. As a matter of fact this note is never banked as long as the member lives up to the rules of the association. Should he decline, however, to submit to any ruling of the board of directors, the note is banked forthwith. Some of the by-laws of the Louisville association are as follows:

"Members of the association are prohibited from figuring on work on which union labor is specified.

"No member of this association shall do any work on which it is required that only union labor be employed. Members must invariably notify the secretary immediately of such a demand, and he in turn must notify the membership.

"No member shall treat with any individual, committee, or officer of any labor organization on any question whatsoever, but that all such business shall be through the properly authorized representatives of the Association of Master Builders."

So far the plan of the Louisville builders has worked excellently, and employers in other cities are carefully watching the new association's progress and taking notes.—[American Industries.

Why Living Cost Increases.

The first and most direct way in which the closed shop affects the public is through its pocketbook in higher prices, says American Industries. The greatest single item in all cost of production is the wage cost, and, of course, a general increase in wages means a general increase in prices, for it is an economic principle that prices tend to equal the cost of production. The first move of a closed-shop union is to make labor scarce by limiting apprentices. In New York, and other closed-shop cities, only one apprentice to every ten journeymen is allowed in many of the trades, while some of the unions allow no apprentices at all, and have closed their books absolutely to new members. The membership fee in others is as high as $500. All this means, of course, that a scarcity of skilled union labor is created by artificial means, and, inasmuch as under the closed shop those who create the scarcity have a monopoly, it develops that there is not enough labor for the needs of industry, although at the same time there may be thousands of workmen in the same trades outside of the monopoly working for far less wages or not working at all, who are kept out of the higher market by the closed shop. As a result, we have the wage cost of production of many things artificially and abnormally increased, but without any general distribution of the benefits by an increase in the purchasing power of the general public.

The cost of building enters into the cost of every article we buy, and thus into its price. Where does the $10 a week clerk benefit, because the bricklayers, who perchance laid brick for the walls of the store where he works, received $5.60 a day for eight hours' work? In good seasons, many building mechanics make from $50 to $75 a week by working overtime, at double pay, and, even including the overtime, they do not work longer hours than men in many other callings. A report of the Board of Public Charities of New York made within the last year showed that rents had increased nearly 200 per cent. in certain sections of that city in six years, and that the problem of rent had become the most serious problem for the board in its work among the poorer classes.

Closed Shop Decreases Work.

The essential difference between a monopoly controlled by a wise captain of industry and a monopoly controlled by a union boss is that the one seeks to get as much as possible and to give as much in return as possible, while the other seeks to get as much as possible and to give as little as possible.

The policy of giving as little as possible in a closed shop where there is no competition among the men takes the form of a decrease in the efficiency of the individual and a lessening of output. The Structural Iron Workers, after years of a closed shop, would drive from eighty to 100 rivets a day. After a year of open shop in New York City they are driving from 300 to 400 rivets per day. The average day's work for a bricklayer under closed-shop conditions is from eight hundred to a thousand brick. Any master builder will tell you that a bricklayer can lay from two thousand to twenty-five hundred brick a day without overwork. A fair day's work of the ironworker, who receives $4.80 a day and did only a third of a day's work, therefore, cost the contractor $14.40, and a fair day's work for a bricklayer, who received $5.60 a day, cost the contractor from $11 to $18. Under such circumstances, the cost of construction must inevitably be much increased, and the cost of rents must increase in the same proportion.

Unions Disrupt a Funeral.

If anything were wanted to turn public sentiment against unionism it should be found in the action of the union hack drivers at the recent funeral of Michael Feeley of Williamsburgh, N. Y. It was a large funeral requiring the services of 120 carriage drivers, who were members of three different unions.

Feeley's career of philanthropy and prominence in the affairs of Williamsburgh had drawn 3000 persons to the Church of St. Vincent de Paul, where a requiem mass was celebrated. The crowd jammed the aisles and flowed out to the sidewalks.

The coffin was borne to the hearse, and the undertaker, George Hamilton, gave a signal for the departure to the cemetery. But, instead of starting, every driver stepped down from his carriage. Hamilton, astounded, demanded to know what was the matter. Representatives of each union then stepped forward and explained.

The driver of the hearse alone was a member of the United Teamsters' Association, the other 119 men belonged to the International Brotherhood of Teamsters and to the Liberty Dawn Association. Members of each refused to yield precedence to the other. Despite Hamilton's pleadings none would budge an inch. The mourners added their pleas unavailingly.

Capt. Francis Creamer and ten men from the Bedford-avenue Police Station went to the scene and argued and begged the drivers to proceed, but the latter were obdurate. Then Creamer read Section 315 of the Penal Code, which makes the obstruction of traffic or interference with a funeral a misdemeanor. He threatened to arrest the drivers.

The men held a hurried conference and then a spokesman said:

"We'll drive because we know Mr. Feeley was a big, good man, but we'll drive separately and no other way. The members of earh union will go together along different routes. That's the best we'll do." The cortege then started for the cemetery along three different routes, the hearse proceeding alone over a separate route.

This violation of the respect to which the dead philanthropist was entitled to as well as the feelings of those who had assembled to pay him honor, was in the name of "unionism."

The Real Scab.

The bane of organized labor and the source of endless contention between employers and the unions is the worthless incompetent, who will not or cannot do his work properly and who appeals to his union to hold him in jobs he is unfit to fill. This type of union man always resents the idea that he should earn his pay or have any regard for the interest of his employer, he treats his employer as an enemy and his business as something to be injured. He is only a "scab" on organized labor and should be treated as such, for he delights in fomenting disturbance and bad feeling between the unions and the employers. He adds insubordination and insolence to incompetence and then expects his union to hold him in the job against the wishes of the man who employs him. The unions do themselves an injustice by assuming the right to enforce unsatisfactory workmen on employers and protect incompetents from discharge. They have no moral or legal right to do this. It is a gross imposition that mars the kindly and mutually helpful relations that should exist between employers and employés, and provokes an opposition to unionism that would not be aroused otherwise. Moreover, such men are a detriment to honest workmen willing to perform their tasks with fairness and diligence.—[Oakland Tribune.

Unions Oppose Machinery.

The strike of union boiler makers on the Soo Line, the Omaha, Great Western, Northern Pacific and Great Northern railroads, was based among other things on the refusal of the demand that the use of certain labor-saving tools, in common use throughout the United States, should be discontinued, and the work be done by members of the union at an advance over the present cost of the work. It would seem to be impossible to put a limit upon the demands that may be made in the name of unionism whenever they think it in their power to compel the acceptance of the same. To oppose the use of machinery is to step backwards to the dark ages. The introduction of machinery into an industry has never thrown any body of workers out of employment except for possibly the briefest period until the industry could readjust itself to the new conditions, when as a rule more persons have been given employment than ever before.

Typographical Union Busts a Strike.

Typographical Union No. 6, of Chicago, has learned how well its members like to live at the expense of the union. On January 1, 1906, 700 men went out of work on strike for eight hours, and up to a month ago 250 of these were still out of work and drawing strike benefits. One man who had paid into the strike fund $1.60 has drawn out $1100 in benefits since the strike started.

Several of the large printing firms refused to accede to the eight-hour demand, hired non-union men and are running as if nothing had happened. The officers of No. 6 have little hope of getting the measure adopted by any of these shops at this late date.

The strike has been the most expensive in the history of the printing trade. It cost the local union nearly $1,500,000, approximately $300 having been paid into the benefit fund by each member.

On this account it was decided to investigate the benefit list. Nearly half of the names on it were dropped at once. Others are being weeded out every day. Many of the older men who had worked for years in one shop were unable to get their jobs back when the rest of the men went back to work, and on account of their age have been unable to find work elsewhere. These men will be provided for by the union. It is the men who either did not look for work or have been known to have rejected jobs who are suffering by the weeding-out process. They have had nineteen months' vacation on pay. The action of the union has practically been to call off the strike because of its expensiveness.

Danderine
GREW MISS LEWIS' HAIR AND WE CAN PROVE IT
The Great Danderine Never Fails to Produce the Desired Results

MISS Lewis' hair was very thin and it was less than two feet in length when she began using Danderine. She says her hair and scalp are now fairly teeming with new life and vigor.

That's the main secret of this great remedy's success as a hair grower. It enlivens, invigorates and fairly electrifies the hair glands and tissues of the scalp, causing unusual and unheard-of activity on the part of these two most important organs, resulting in a strenuous and continuous growth of the hair.

The following is a reproduction of Miss Lewis' last letter:

January 3, 1905.
Dear Doctor Knowlton:—
You know I told you in my first letter that my hair would not reach much below my shoulders, and that all of it together only made one tiny braid.
I am sending you my photograph, which I had taken at Stevens Bros. It tells the whole story better than I can tell it.
Everybody I know is using Danderine, so you see I am doing something to show my appreciation.
Sincerely yours, (Miss) EVA LEWIS.

Danderine makes the scalp healthy and fertile and keeps it so. It is the greatest scalp fertilizer and therefore the greatest hair-producing remedy the world has ever known. It is a natural food and a wholesome medicine for both the hair and scalp. Even a 25c bottle of it will put more genuine life in your hair than a gallon of any other hair tonic ever made. It shows results from the very start.

NOW at all druggists in three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1. per bottle

FREE. To show how quickly Danderine acts we will send a large sample free by return mail to any one who sends this advertisement to the Knowlton Danderine Co., Chicago, with their name and address and 10 cents in silver or stamps to pay postage.

PERSONAL—
MRS. MAS[illegible]
the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (Suite 17.)
by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in everyday life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill-luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry. WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.
(Daily and evenings; Sunday 9 to 3.)

PERSONAL—
PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE,
365½ S. SPRING ST., near Third.
THE CELEBRATED RELIABLE PALMIST AND ASTROLOGER.

A resident of Los Angeles for 24 years, and whose work is known throughout this entire land, and who has made a life study of PALMISTRY AND ASTROLOGY, has convinced hundreds of the best intellects and persons in all walks of life that HIS REMARKABLE READINGS AND PREDICTIONS FOR FUTURE EVENTS IN THEIR LIVES ARE UNPARALLELED.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S readings, which are thorough and scientific, have nothing in common whatever with the fictitious readings of illiterate, unreliable humbug palmists, astrologers, psychics, fortune tellers, and those who, THROUGH TRICK METHODS CLAIM TO TELL YOUR NAME, etc., after you yourself have written the information—who scarcely know one line or mount from the other, and who, by their disgraceful conduct drag these useful sciences into the mire of fortune telling and fraud. PROF. ALTHOUSE is not actuated by any feeling of ill-will toward any reader who may be GENUINE (for he believes all RELIABLE readers should be encouraged;) but he will—in the future, as in the past—denounce humbug work whenever and wherever he can.

A SATISFACTORY AND ABSOLUTELY CORRECT reading can only be had from one who has thoroughly mastered the laws of these wonderful sciences, through years of critical study of planetary influences on the lines of the hand and in the horoscope, combined with large experiences, trained judgment, etc. The palm shows diseases, love, marriage, divorce, deaths, money, investments, changes, talents, travels, etc., etc., and many other things which cannot be mentioned here.

WITH EACH PALM READING THERE IS ALSO AN ASTROLOGICAL READING.

PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of the profession, having read—FROM LIFE—more celebrated people than any other reader. He does not deceive the public in this respect. HIS READINGS, TOO, MUST IN NO WISE BE CLASSED WITH THOSE OF ANY OTHER READER NOW OPERATING IN THIS PART OF THE COUNTRY, AND HIS SKILLED WORK HAS NO COMPARISON WITH THEIRS WHATSOEVER.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK, THE GREAT SINGER, WHOSE HANDS WERE READ AND HOROSCOPE CAST BY PROF. ALTHOUSE, writes and says: "I was greatly surprised to find how many of your warnings were well founded, and having been prepared for the same, I was not taken unawares. YOUR WARNING regarding an oncoming illness also PROVED A FACT, as not more than ten days later I was at home with a severe attack of la grippe. YOUR READING WAS MOST MARVELOUS."

PAPINTA, actress, writes and says: "Everything has turned out just as you predicted when reading my hand and horoscope. I think YOU ARE WONDERFUL, and I cannot express myself of what I think about your WONDERFUL TRUE READINGS."

DR. ALEX. J. M'IVOR-TYNDALL, editor Swastika Magazine, writes and says: "Your work along the lines of Astrology and Palmistry is highly spoken of on all sides, and I feel certain that you are able, through your accurate and scientific knowledge of these sciences of human life and culture, to guide and direct to the best possible advantage the lives of those who apply to you for advice. I wish you every success in your work."

FREDERICK WARDE says: "Your reading of my hands was most satisfactory. Your knowledge and skill in palmistry is REMARKABLE and gave me a much more comprehensive idea of that science than I have hitherto entertained." LOUIS JAMES, actor, says: "I wish to say that your reading was ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY." PAUL GILMORE, actor, says: "I want to express to you my keen appreciation of your reading. It is by far the most scientific I have ever had." JULIET CROSBY, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Prof. Althouse also read Admiral Schley, Senator Clark, ex-Gov. Pardee, Gen. Chaffee, Baron Rothschild, Joaquin Miller, Ysaye, Sousa, Edison, Capt. Hobson, Creatore, Caruso, Huntington, Susan B. Anthony, Nance O'Neil, Lillian Nordica, Constantino, Calve, Julia Marlowe, Modjeska, Adaberto, Sembrich, Gadski, Jefferson, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Anna Held, Grace Van Studdiford, Lillian Russell, [illegible] Desmond, Blanche Hall, and hundreds of others. These names of NOTED people are merely given because they are PUBLIC persons. It indicates the class of people who are read by PROF. ALTHOUSE, together with hundreds of the very best people of Los Angeles—WITH WHOM ALL HIS BUSINESS IS STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL IN EVERY PARTICULAR.

Intelligent, HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED—those capable of appreciating the superior qualities of a fine reader.

ASTROLOGY AND THE HOROSCOPE.
PROF. ALTHOUSE has also given many years of critical study to, and is an experienced practitioner in, the science of MODERN ASTROLOGY, by which he has made some REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The HOROSCOPE IS DECIDEDLY A GUIDE IN LIFE, showing remarkable things when properly cast for YOU INDIVIDUALLY, from the position of the planets at YOUR BIRTH. It indicates the condition of health, all kinds of diseases, the constitution, how best strengthened, when weak; tells all about love—whom to marry and when, describing the marriage partner, shows death, divorce; tells about children, speculation, the best time to invest or to push affairs, and when to hold on to what has been gained; your talents, what best adapted for; your environment; when and where to travel; what to seek and what to avoid; when one is to be in danger of limbs, accidents, deaths, losses, troubles; also of your good periods coming—giving dates of these events for the future; IN FACT, TELLS EVERYTHING ABOUT ONE'S SELF WORTH KNOWING, being in truth one of the best investments the world offers. YOUR HOROSCOPE is also a key to the character of OTHERS, and in this respect can be of the utmost use to you.

SCIENTIFIC PREDICTIONS ON ALL QUESTIONS OF LIFE, for the present and future events up to the close of life—made by these sciences—with most complete primary and secondary directions (arcs, etc.)—through the trained judgment of PROF. ALTHOUSE—will stagger the senses. BEWARE, HOWEVER, OF UNRELIABLE READERS.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S wonderful proficiency in hand reading and casting of horoscopes has brought him a large and successful practice. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances.

Readings by mail; send for circular, etc. Daily and evenings, Sunday 10 to 2.

MRS. MASSON
the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (Suite 17.)
by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in everyday life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill-luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE,
303½ S. SPRING ST., near Third.
THE CELEBRATED RELIABLE PALMIST AND ASTROLOGER.

A resident of Los Angeles for 21 years, and whose work is known throughout this entire land, and who has made a life study of PALMISTRY AND ASTROLOGY, has convinced hundreds of the best intellects and persons in all walks of life that HIS REMARKABLE READINGS AND PREDICTIONS FOR FUTURE EVENTS IN THEIR LIVES ARE UNPARALLELED.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S readings, which are thorough and scientific, have nothing in common whatever with the fictitious readings of illiterate, unreliable humbug palmists, astrologers, psychics, fortune tellers, and those who, THROUGH TRICK METHODS CLAIM TO TELL YOUR NAME, etc., etc., after you yourself have written the information—who scarcely know one line or mount from the other, and who, by their disgraceful readings drag these useful sciences into the mire of fortune telling and fraud. PROF. ALTHOUSE is not actuated by any feeling of ill-will toward any reader who may be GENUINE (for he believes all RELIABLE readers should be encouraged;) but he will—in the future, as in the past—denounce humbug work whenever and wherever he can.

A SATISFACTORY AND ABSOLUTELY CORRECT reading can only be had from one who has thoroughly mastered the laws of these wonderful sciences, through years of critical study of planetary influences on the lines of the hand and in the horoscope, combined with large experiences, trained judgment, etc. The palm shows diseases, love, marriage, divorce, deaths, money, investments, changes, talents, travels, etc., etc., and many other things which cannot be mentioned here.

WITH EACH PALM READING THERE IS ALSO AN ASTROLOGICAL READING.

PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of the profession, having read—FROM LIFE—more celebrated people than any other reader. He does not deceive the public in this respect. HIS READINGS, TOO, MUST IN NO WISE BE CLASSED WITH THOSE OF ANY OTHER READER NOW OPERATING IN THIS PART OF THE COUNTRY, AND HIS SKILLED WORK HAS NO COMPARISON WITH THEIRS WHATSOEVER.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK, THE GREAT SINGER, WHOSE HANDS WERE READ AND HOROSCOPE CAST BY PROF. ALTHOUSE, writes and says: "I was greatly surprised to find how many of your warnings were well founded, and having been prepared for the same, I was not taken unawares. YOUR WARNING regarding an oncoming illness also PROVED A FACT, as not more than ten days later I was at home with a severe attack of la grippe. YOUR READING WAS MOST MARVELOUS."

PAPINTA, actress, writes and says: "Everything has turned out just as you predicted when reading my hand and horoscope. I think YOU ARE WONDERFUL, and I cannot express myself of what I think about your WONDERFUL, TRUE READINGS."

DR. ALEX. J. M'IVOR-TYNDALL, editor Swastika Magazine, writes and says: "Your work along the lines of Astrology and Palmistry is highly spoken of on all sides, and I feel certain that you are able, through your accurate and scientific knowledge of these sciences of human life and culture, to guide and direct to the best possible advantage the lives of those who apply to you for advice. I wish you every success in your work."

FREDERICK WARDE says: "Your reading of my hand was most satisfactory. Your knowledge and skill in palmistry is REMARKABLE and gave me a much more comprehensive idea of that science than I have hitherto entertained." LOUIS JAMES, actor, says: "I wish to say that your reading was ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY." PAUL GILMORE, actor, says: "I want to extend to you my keen appreciation of your reading. It is by far the most scientific I have ever had." JULIET CROSBY, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Prof. Althouse also read Admiral Schley, Senator Clark, ex-Gov. Pardee, Gen. Chaffee, Baron Rothschild, Joaquin Miller, Ysaye, Sousa, Edison, Capt. Hobson, Creatore, Caruso, Huntington, Susan B. Anthony, Nance O'Neil, Lillian Nordica, Constantine, Calve, Julia Marlowe, Modjeska, Adaberto, Sembrich, Gadski, Jefferson, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Anna Held, Grace Van Studdiford, Lillian Russell, Wm. Desmond, Blanche Hall, and hundreds of others. These names of NOTED people are merely given because they are PUBLIC persons. It indicates the class of people who are read by PROF. ALTHOUSE, together with hundreds of the very best people of Los Angeles—WITH WHOM ALL HIS BUSINESS IS STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL IN EVERY PARTICULAR.

Intelligent, HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED—those capable of appreciating the superior qualities of a fine reader.

ASTROLOGY AND THE HOROSCOPE.

PROF. ALTHOUSE has also given many years of critical study to, and is an experienced practitioner in, the science of MODERN ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The HOROSCOPE IS DECIDEDLY A GUIDE IN LIFE, showing remarkable things when properly cast for YOU INDIVIDUALLY, from the position of the planets at YOUR BIRTH. It indicates the condition of health, all kinds of diseases, the constitution, how best strengthened, when weak; tells all about love—whom to marry and when, describing the marriage partner, shows death, divorce; tells about children, speculation, the best time to invest or to push affairs, and when to hold on to what has been gained; your talents, what best adapted for; your environment; when and where to travel; what to seek and what to avoid; when ... be in danger of limbs, accidents, ... losses, troubles; also of your good ... coming—giving dates of these events ... future; IN FACT, TELLS EVERYTHING ABOUT ONE'S SELF WORTH KNOWING, being in truth one of the best investments in the world offers. YOUR HOROSCOPE is also a key to the character of OTHERS, and in this respect can be of the utmost use to you.

SCIENTIFIC PREDICTIONS ON ALL QUESTIONS OF LIFE, for the present and future events up to the close of life—charted by these sciences—with most complete primary and secondary directions (arcs, etc.)—through the trained judgment of PROF. ALTHOUSE—will stagger the senses. BEWARE, HOWEVER, OF UNRELIABLE READERS.

BUSINESS CHANCES—
Miscellaneous.

WE HAVE INCORPORATED ONE OF THE best mining properties in Searchlight, Nev., located right in Searchlight, and the property is completely surrounded by good paying mines, and is well known by most all mining men.

We have issued 400,000 shares of treasury stock for the purpose of developing the mine, and the private stock is pooled and cannot be sold.

We want one or more parties to take up enough of this treasury stock to install machinery, and we will let the party or parties that will take up a sufficient amount of the stock for the purpose above outlined in on the ground floor at a greatly reduced rate. There is no doubt but that, after the machinery is installed and we set to taking out the ore we have, the stock will go away above par.

This is not a prospect, as there has been $12,000 expended on development work, but as a big flow of water was struck it is necessary to put in heavy pumping machinery.

We do not wish to sell any more stock than is absolutely necessary for the purpose outlined, and we guarantee that all money received through the sale of stock shall be used for buying machinery and working the mine. There is not an officer of the company allowed to draw a salary, and our incorporating papers read that all money received for stock shall be used for the purpose of buying machinery and development work.

A wise business man can readily see that, from the foregoing assertions (which we guarantee to be true,) the party or parties that take up this stock will be the sole owners of most of the stock issued by the company and will reap the full benefit of the advance in the price of stock after machinery has been installed.

If any party, or parties will show us that they are interested in this proposition we will assist them in making the most thorough and rigid investigation of the property, and, further, guarantee to substantiate all the foregoing statements.

Many a good opportunity to make money has been lost by the fact that some people are too prone to condemn all legitimate propositions without investigating the merits to their own satisfaction.

Another point. You are not dealing with a promoting company, but are dealing with the original owners of the property themselves. Address L, box 28, TIMES OFFICE. 29

300-acre subdivision, 4 miles from the bay at SAN DIEGO, and within 7 miles of San Diego Courthouse. Recently subdivided into villa tracts. A large amount of work has been done. 2 miles of streets graded. Mountain water piped to land, and ready for use. Some homes built and telephone extended. A main county road from SAN DIEGO runs through the tract. New depot built. 7-cent fare. This beautiful site is mostly level mesa with an altitude of 450 feet, and is above frost line. There is no richer soil anywhere and it adjoins one of the handsomest close-in suburbs of SAN DIEGO. The views are magnificent, and as a health and home subdivision it has no superior in the WORLD. It is one of the very few level tracts that SAN DIEGO possesses as can be readily seen from the U. S. topographical chart.

This property can be sold in small tracts and produce $150,000 to $200,000, and will then be selling way below real value.

Price for the whole 360 acres, $150 an acre, or $54,000. Half cash, balance time. 5 per cent. off for all cash. It is offered to settle up partnership interests through age and sickness.

I HAVE BEEN ENGAGED IN A MANUfacturing business here in Los Angeles for the past six years and have accumulated about a $8000 stock and capital. Competition has put my business in such a shape that where I was clearing from $400 to $600 a month I am now but clearing about $200. I am a good salesman, manufacturer and buyer, and feel capable of doing better with the amount of capital invested. I would like to hear from anybody who has a good business proposition or anybody who would volunteer information whereby I might better myself with the amount of capital and ability stated. Any information would be highly appreciated and well paid for. No fakes or dishonest get-rich-quick schemes will be considered for a moment. As I will no doubt have several answers to this ad, a definite explanation only of your idea or chance for investment will receive attention. Address K, box 100, TIMES OFFICE.

And hundreds of others too numerous to mention. Before buying or selling any stock come to the Southwest Miners' Stock Exchange and see the real prices.

Edward MacDermott has been established in and done business in the same place for over three years, and is the best posted broker in local stocks in Los Angeles.

Edward MacDermott can make you money in stocks. Try him. The best buy on the market is Mohawk Herald Co., at 29 Palms; a rich strike was made this week on the adjoining property, the same character of ore which the Mohawk Herald Co. has. Dr. W. L. Brown has the ore on exhibit and will show any one.

The Mohawk Herald has this same ore traced for nearly 4000 feet. I want some man who has ten or twenty thousand dollars to take a block of this stock to enable the company to put up a larger mill, and hoist of large capacity. We have unlimited quantities of rich ore in sight. We want to take it out and mill it.

Prof. J. W. Williamson, Watauga Hotel, Los Angeles, Mining Expert of national reputation, has examined this property. See him and hear what he has to say, and then go and examine the property yourselves. Only 160 miles from Los Angeles. We will sell you the stock subject to your examination. You have been looking for a good mining stock. Here it is. A square deal for your money.

EDWARD MACDERMOTT, President.
Southwest Miners' Stock Exchange,
29 112½-114 and 114A South Broadway.

FOR SALE—

COPPER COPPER COPPER

We urge your investigation.

We are not talking 1000 miles away. We have a PROVEN, PRODUCING, INCREASING COPPER MINE, all experimental conditions passed 29 tunnels and shafts that penetrate the permanent ORE BODIES.

NO SULPHIDE COPPER MINES FAIL. Ask us to inform you of the WONDERFUL HISTORY of the WORLD'S COPPER MINES.

RIO TINTO MINE IN SPAIN, HAS BEEN WORKED CONTINUOUSLY For 1500 years, and is still the fourth largest producer in the world.

N. B. I said FIFTEEN HUNDRED YEARS. NOW I want to tell you another FACT. We have been working our mines for six years, putting in fine machinery, building roads, telephone lines; permanent buildings, acquiring POWER rights for TEN MILES on the river, HAVE secured Coal Lands, Limestone beds, and own, without ever having borrowed, 50 CLAIMS IN ONE OF THE BEST MINERALIZED COPPER SECTIONS OF THIS COUNTRY. THE CALUMET & ARIZONA came into our district 5 years after we began to operate, and this summer the ROTHSCHILDS also located on adjoining property, complimenting us on our holdings, and verifying the Statement THAT ours is ONE OF THE GREAT COMING MINES OF THIS COUNTRY.

We are offering a limited number of shares for sale at the Par Value of $1 per share. It is the purpose of the Company to erect a SMELTER at once. I acted as Auditor for the Company this year. Visited the Mines, Saw the Ore bodies, visited Mines that were producing COPPER, were operating their own smelters, and I SAW NOTHING TO EXCELL OUR MINES. I URGE YOU TO GET AN INTEREST. DO NOT PUT IT OFF. YOU WILL COME TO ME some day and say, "Gilhousen, why did you not Press this matter upon my ATTENTION? I had idle money that was not in prospect of being used in an income proposition, and if I had known all the FACTS regarding your mines, I certainly would have purchased stock."

YOU CANNOT AFFORD TO NEGLECT INVESTIGATION.

Call at our office and see the finest SAMPLES OF Copper GLANCE Ore shown in the City of Los Angeles. Blue Prints, Maps, Work Reports and information at C. E. GILHOUSEN & CO., 2908 Central ave.

GOLD—SILVER—COPPER.

Arizona has demonstrated to the mining world that she has almost inexhaustible supplies of gold, silver and copper.

The Zona Mining Company, Maricopa county, Ariz., owns 180 acres of rich mineral bearing ground. The property has an immense ledge 60 feet wide and 4500 feet in extent, bearing gold and silver; a ledge 800 feet in extent of free milling ore, going $50 a ton on the surface.

The company has over three hundred and fifty feet of shafts and cross-cuts, and are putting down a new shaft on a 2-foot copper ledge. The company has already struck pay ore. They have plenty of wood and water and excellent transportation facilities, new machinery will be erected immediately and the mine placed on a dividend paying basis as soon as possible. Stock in this company can be purchased at ten cents a share. There is only a small allotment at this price. If you want to make money get in on this. Get in right away before the price is raised. Buy now. Get for yourself some of the gold that is coming out of Arizona's coffers. Buy all you can carry of the Zona stock while it is selling at ten cents. It will be higher soon.

WHIPPLE MOUNTAIN GOLD AND COPPER MINING CO.

Mr. J. C. DeSpain, the contractor for the property of the Whipple Mountain Gold and Copper Mining Company, San Bernardino county, California, has just come to Los Angeles, bringing with him samples of the ore which we are now taking out of the shaft at the 100-foot level; this ore assays $118 gold and $200 in copper. Baverstock & Staples, Assayers.

The president and several directors will leave this week for the property to make arrangements for installing hoist, cars and track, and other necessary machinery, as well as buildings for housing the men.

Mr. DeSpain says that we have some of the richest ore that has ever been found in the district. We have not struck the main ledge, and the contractor expects when we do we shall have even richer ore.

We should like stockholders to call and see the ore, or any one who might be interested.

FOR SALE—FOR SALE—FOR SALE—

ONE THOUSAND (1000) SHARES RICE RANCH OIL COMPANY STOCK.

CHEAP! CHEAP!! CHEAP!!!

AT A BARGAIN! AT A BARGAIN!!

It is CHEAP and at a BARGAIN.

THE PRICE at which I will offer to sell you tomorrow morning this 1000 shares of RICE RANCH OIL CO. STOCK, PROVIDED the INFORMATION is TRUE which I have received within the last forty days from the officers and directors of the Rice Ranch Oil Co.; and I assume that the reports and statements which have come to me lately about the condition of the Rice Ranch Oil Co. are true. I would have no way to establish the truth or falsity of same except in a court procedure.

THE PRICE at which I can now sell you this one thousand (1000) shares of Rice Ranch Oil Co. stock will discount a monthly dividend of three (3) per cent. on $1 par on one thousand shares, namely, thirty ($30.00) dollars per month for three and one-half years; yes, for even four years. That is, taking the high price which Rice Ranch stock sold for a few months ago, namely, $2.10 per share, and the price you can get on the market at the present time for it, if YOU FORCE A SALE, it will discount the three per cent. per month over FOUR YEARS.

The Rice Ranch Oil Co. did not declare a dividend for September. I do not know why. I have been unable to learn when the company will again pay a dividend, or how much it will pay, or how long it will pay one if it resumes. A dear old gentleman, and many times a stockholder in the Rice Ranch Oil Co., told me last week that it might be many months before the company would pay a dividend, and I think he ought to know, for he has been very close to the company for a long time.

There are and have been in this company some of the smartest and shrewdest business men and politicians of our city. Some of the directors of this company were heavy holders of the stock of the company when it was cheap, but when the price of the stock advanced to a good and attractive figure they concluded to "unload" most of their burden, but still remain on the directors' board, for the good they may do the company now and for the future.

The party who owns this 1000 shares of Rice Ranch Oil stock, which I am now offering for sale, lately owned another 1000 shares of this same kind of stock; both came to him since August 19 last, at a cost of about $2.04 per share; if this thousand is sold on present market the owner will lose about $800 or $900 on 2000 shares. This is only a little circumstance that has happened in only a few days over one month, on 2000 shares. What has happened in the last five or six months, as to 150,000 shares? Who is responsible for the present market price of Rice Ranch Oil Co. stock?

Last week I heard of some one offering a lady who owns inside property in this city, as part consideration for said property, 15,000 shares of Rice Ranch Oil Co. stock at $2 per share. If I am correctly informed the lady lives in an outside town.

FACTS CONCERNING JEROME VERDE COPPER MINE.

Located at Jerome, Arizona.
Incorporated under the laws of Arizona.
Consists of 28 patented claims.
About 500 acres in area.
Six claims adjoin the United Verde.
Stock is non-assessable.
Has a shaft 560 feet deep.
Drifts and tunnels 2000 feet.

The first ore discovered in the district was on the Jerome Verde.

About $250,000 worth of ore now in sight.

16 assays of ore from different levels have been made; average value of ore $37.40 per ton.

Nearly $50,000 worth of ore taken out in development work alone.

Diamond core drills have proven rich ore at a great depth.

Millions in ore close at hand.

Over $100,000 spent in development.

Makes a better showing than the United Verde at the same stage of development.

Four prominent mining engineers believe it will rival the United Verde.

Many of the leading mining and business men of Jerome indorse this property as first in the district, outside of the United Verde.

A never-failing spring of water on the property.

New, modern machinery being built for us by Fairbanks, Morse & Co., and will be installed very soon.

Haggott-Girand Co. of Prescott, Ariz., are the mine managers and engineers of Jerome Verde, and are the most reliable mining engineers of Arizona.

Price of stock is now 50 cents a share.

Stock in the adjoining mine (United Verde) is not for sale, stockholders having refused $400 a share.

Ex-Senator W. A. Clark tried to buy the Jerome Verde mine and offered more than twice as much for it as he paid for the great United Verde. Four years ago he refused $60,000,000 for his interest in the United Verde. He has recently said that he would not take $90,000,000 for his stock.

$1000 invested in the United Verde 10 years ago now worth $72,000.

An opportunity just as good is offered you today.

BUY JEROME VERDE AT 50 CENTS A SHARE. It will be worth many times more than this in a year. It will grow into a fortune in a few years. Send for prospectus.

MINING—

THE REVIVAL
OF THE COMSTOCK LODE.

The news, both from San Francisco and New York, confirms the opinion that we are on the eve of a great revival on the Comstock Lode, Nevada.

It is well known that some of these shares are already listed on the New York Stock Exchange, and that men of influence in the East have recently bought control of some of these properties. It is now given out that Clarence MacKey, son of John W. MacKey, the late Bonanza King, and who is now president of the Postal Telegraph, Commercial and Pacific Cable and other such huge enterprises, has taken hold of the Yellow Jacket mine, on the Comstock; and that announcement caused Yellow Jacket to advance yesterday from $1.55 to $2.40.

For days past all other Comstock shares have shown increasing strength, while the Goldfields and others have been easing off in price.

I am director of a Comstock company, whose stock (unlike most in that section) is NON-ASSESSABLE, and we desire to communicate with persons who are willing to consider the purchase of our stock, or who desire to undertake the sale of same among their friends or clients. Address L, box 170, TIMES OFFICE. 29

WANTED—
WILL PAY 20 PER CENT. FOR QUICK LOAN OF $5000 on a $50,000 mining property. There is between 200 and 300 tons of ore averaging $20 in bins in mill. 1000 tons more blocked out ready to be stoped for mill. Property equipped with a modern 20-ton mill, almost ready for operating. Mill equipped with electricity for power costing only 1c per K.W. hour. Mill will be in operation inside of 30 days, and all its earnings will be paid to party making loan until loan is paid. This is a GILT EDGE LOAN as there is at least $30,000 worth of FREE MILLING ORE back of loan, and a modern 20-ton mill to work it with. Company owns six valuable claims. If party making loan prefers stock interest to interest on loan, will give stock. NO RISK in this as the ore is available to pay with. This is a bona fide proposition and will bear investigation. Call on J. E. KREPPS, 429 H. W. Hellman Bldg. 29

A knowledge of Spanish is valuable to every citizen of Southern California. Merchants have Spanish-speaking patrons, many men deal with Mexican laborers, and hundreds of men find attractive openings in Mexico.

The courses offered in Spanish by the Young Men's Christian Association meet this need. Prof. Ricardo Uribe, who has charge of the classes, is a highly educated Mexican gentleman and an unusually successful teacher. His method of teaching makes language study both attractive and simple, and his students make rapid progress.

THE LOS ANGELES
MUSICAL INSTRUMENT MFG. CO. (Inc.)
As this Company has offices, salesrooms and a fully equipped and up-to-date manufacturing and repair plant at 124½ N. Spring st., it is unnecessary to send work of this nature East with the consequent delay and increased expense.
We have all departments—STRING, BRASS, REEDS, ETC.—and all work entrusted to us receives the prompt and careful attention of the experts in charge of each branch of the business. Besides ordinary repairs, we rebuild parts of every description—in fact there is no piece of work too small, too large, too easy or too difficult that we cannot handle more efficiently and at a less cost than is possible by sending the order to Chicago or elsewhere.
If you have an old instrument at house, bring it in and we will put it in as good condition as when new.
One of the features of our business is SELLING, BUYING and EXCHANGING, and we always carry a NEW STOCK of INSTRUMENTS and ACCESSORIES of the most approved makes and designs.
Our charges are always reasonable.

FACT AND COMMENT.

EARLY last spring the editor of this department was in Center City, the county seat of Merrick county, Nebraska. He visited a banker to inquire about the probable value of a certain quarter-section in the county. The banker was also a stock man of much experience. His views were like this: "The valley of the lower Platte is nearly all good land. Part of the county you refer to is particularly desirable for farming purposes. As I remember, this particular quarter-section is suited mostly for stock raising. About half of it is meadow and grazing land and the rest of it suitable for grain production. But remember, in this valley the land is very variable and I would advise you to inspect carefully every portion of the farm in question and satisfy yourself of the exact quality of the soil in every five acres. If you are not a judge of farming lands yourself, I will give you references to persons near by the farm who are, and for a moderate fee will spend a day and tell you just what you are getting."

—o—

Nothing Peculiar in This.

When this experienced man of business referred to the variable character of the soil in the lower Platte Valley, he was speaking of no unusual circumstances. If he had said that farming land in every State in the Union and, indeed, in every country in the world is spotted, some good, some indifferent and some actually worthless, he would have been still speaking the exact truth. All who know anything about farming land in any State in the Union know how difficult it is to find a whole section of land all of uniform quality. Indeed, it is almost impossible to find a quarter-section of land thus unvarying in its excellence. There are quarter-sections and even sections in the richest prairie lands in the West that will stand this test, but they are not numerous.

—o—

California Lands Very Spotted.

This variable characteristic of the soils for farming purposes is nowhere more noticeable than all through the State of California. The early settlers had a way of describing it by using the Spanish word "pinto." Those who have been engaged in any kind of agricultural pursuits all over the State know very well how rarely one finds a quarter-section of land all of uniform quality, unless he goes onto the desert, where there are many miles of uniform worthlessness for any farming purpose. In the valleys, cut as they are by numerous streams, and broken by rolling hills and cut by mountain ranges, a map or even a United States survey will scarcely enlighten one as to the exact quality of each five or ten acre patch in any piece of land. Any given quarter-section may have one, two or three forty-acres of more or less uniform character, but you rarely find four contiguous forties all of the same quality. In some instances poor land will predominate and in others the good will outweigh the bad, but in very rare cases will they all be found the same. One field will be heavy soil with a great deal of clay in its composition. The next one may be the lightest kind of sand. Part of the property may run up along the hillsides where the soil is gravelly, varying to that full of pebbles or even stones running from the size of a hen's egg to those as large as a bushel measure. In some instances a piece of land will be entirely free from alkali and the next ten acres adjoining a given ten may be full of these deleterious substances. One may go even less than half a mile from the field of excellent sandy loam, to one where the alkali is so strong that it would eat through the redwood fence posts in about one year.

Farming Lands Very Active.

At the present time there is unusual activity in the purchase of farming lands. Most of this is for investment, but there is a little spice of speculation in it. The activity covers pretty nearly all of Southern California, leaps over the Tehachepi range and spreads all over the great San Joaquin Valley. The investments are mostly in small tracts, varying from a single acre to scarcely ever more than fifty acres. Most of the purchasers, perhaps, take about five acres, a great many ten, and some up to twenty. These lands are being purchased for the establishment of homes to grow small fruits, to plant deciduous orchards, vineyards, grow alfalfa, and in less numerous instances for the production of citrus fruits. Each one of these pursuits requires different soil. Some of them are utterly impracticable without abundance of water. No matter how heavy-bodied or rich the soil is, how damp it is, or any other consideration, alfalfa cannot be successfully produced without abundance of water to flood the ground at least twice a year in order to drown out the gophers. For the cultivation of citrus fruits one needs a comparatively light soil, of warm texture, with an exposure to the southern and eastern sun and an abundance of water.

—o—

Some People Without Experience.

Many of those buying lands in the sections here referred to at the present time are eastern people with little or no knowledge of the necessary conditions for the successful carrying out of the enterprises in their minds. They will be shown soil admirably adapted to the production of citrus fruit which they will turn down as worthless. Some of these upland soils, exceedingly light, full of small pebbles, and seeming to eastern eyes unsuited for any agricultural purpose, if there is only a sufficient supply of water, are really ideal for the production of oranges and lemons. The Italian vineyardists who have come into Southern California within the last ten years have demonstrated to us that light sandy soils along the slopes of the hills in the region where Los Angeles, Riverside and San Bernardino counties join are admirable for the production of wine grapes. The old-time Californians and the new arrivals for fifty years have held these mesas in contempt for any agricultural purposes. They are proving to be admirably adapted to the production of wine grapes. Ten years ago none of us would have touched them at $5 an acre. Today none of them are to be had for less than $20 an acre, and little of them at that price. Some of the most despised tracts could not be bought today, with their excellent stand of vines, for less than $250 an acre. The Italians bought them for $5.

Look Out for Alkali.

Those who are investing in these small tracts of land at the present time, particularly those buying up through the San Joaquin Valley, should be very careful to ascertain the exact nature of the soil into which they are putting their money. Perhaps the thing to guard most against is the purchase of soils heavily impregnated with alkali. At certain seasons of the year it is almost impossible to the inexperienced eye to detect the presence of this deleterious substance. Even where the ground is white as hoar frost with it, many eastern people, little accustomed to this kind of soil, do not know what a detriment the alkali is to the soil. Not all alkali soils are to be condemned, nor for all purposes. Cabbage, beets for feed purposes, and other crops do admirably upon soil that is quite considerably impregnated with alkali. Moreover, a few crops of these vegetables, with thorough cultivation, will work a large part of the alkali out of the soil and leave it in admirable shape for other uses. The soil is usually strong where there is even a considerable amount of this alkali. But there are some soils so obsessed by this substance that not in years could it be worked out and scarcely anything can be produced successfully upon it. Alkali is not the only thing to guard against. There are streaks of very light sandy soil running here and there through nearly all portions of California. Ten or fifteen years ago the Tulare Lake was an immense body of water spreading widely over a great district of country. The intervening years of slight rainfall and the diversion of the streams above for irrigation purposes caused this body of water to shrink into a smaller and still smaller area until three years ago the whole lake was nearly reduced to dry land. The heavy snows of last winter in the mountains produced such abundance of water in the streams that the lake filled up, inundating wide areas, which, for several years, had been producing large crops of grain and alfalfa. A dry year or two would cause this body of water to contract again, or three or four winters of rain and snow like the last one would cause the sink to fill up and overwhelm many fertile farms of the present day.

—o—

Look Before You Leap.

The proper thing for those investing in these lands anywhere in Southern California is to inspect personally the exact piece of property into which they are intending to put their money. It should be gone over carefully, its characteristics investigated and every proper inquiry made as to the nature of the soil, the source of water supply and other matters on which the value of the property depends. At the present time in many instances inexperienced women are buying these lands on speculation. They are shown the maps here in Los Angeles, a couple of hundred miles away from the land, and on the representation of the agent alone, they often make their investments. There are no doubt millions of acres of excellent lands in the region described. There is no doubt that there will be an enhancement of values in these good lands in the time to come. Nor is there any more doubt that where investments are properly made and the lands properly cultivated, there is profit to justify the investment from the crops produced. The investor who has no experience, knows nothing about soils, their qualities and uses, should not even trust to his own judgment. The proper thing for the inexperienced to do is to employ some person of experience and discretion and it will well pay to spend a moderate fee to secure the services of such person before investments in the land are made.

—o—

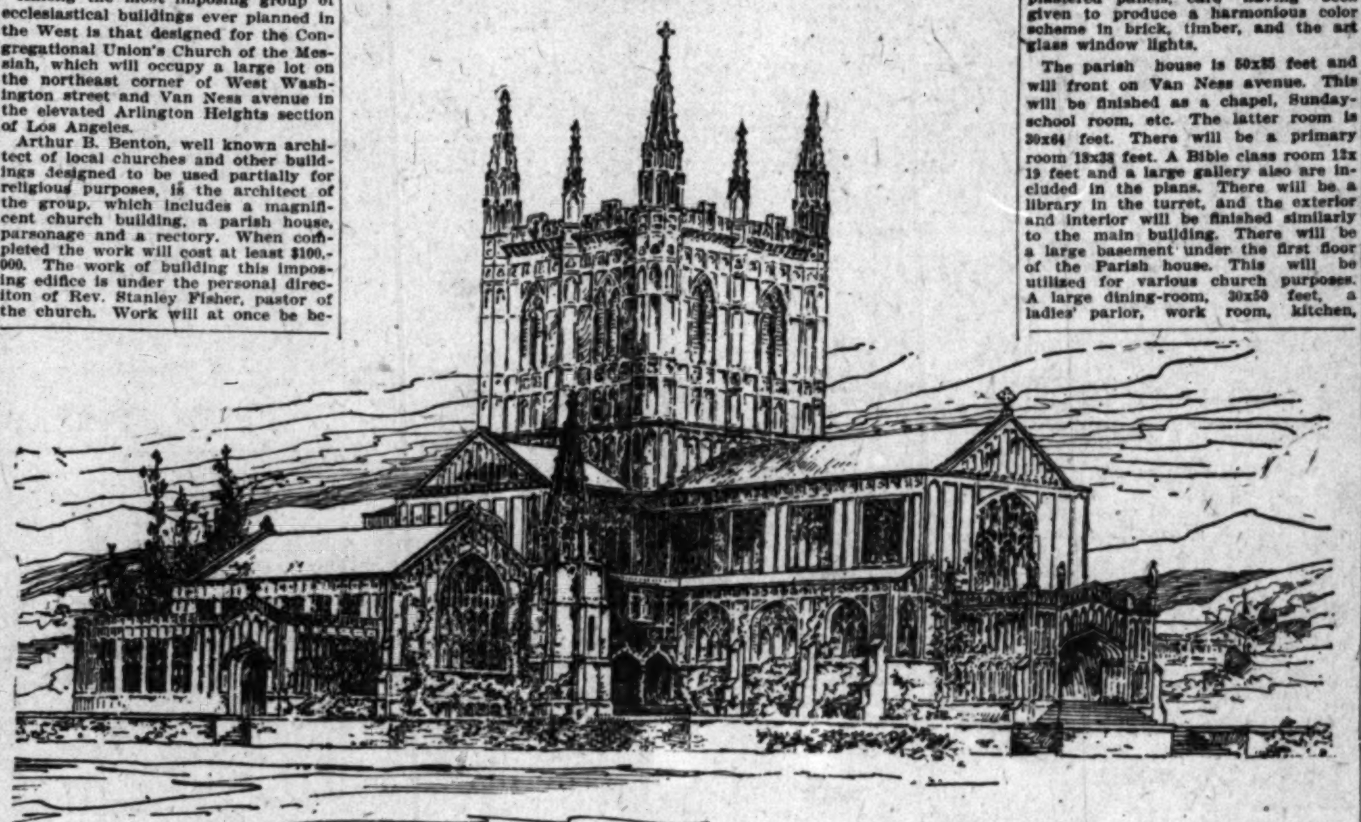
The Agent's Reputation.

Of course there is one safeguard not quite so expensive as the one outlined here. There are many real estate agents in the city of Los Angeles whose word may be safely taken as to anything they are selling. They are men of good sense, honest and conscientious, who for the sake of their commission would not willingly mislead an investor. If the buyer is luckly enough to fall into the hands of an agent of this character he is perfectly safe. But real estate agents are a good deal like real estate. They differ very much in their characteristics. The agencies are often as "pinto" as the lands. An investor, by careful and somewhat diligent inquiry, who is a stranger in the community, can generally ascertain the reputation of the agent with whom he is doing business.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF THE MESSIAH WILL BE IMPOSING PILE.

Among the most imposing group of ecclesiastical buildings ever planned in the West is that designed for the Congregational Union's Church of the Messiah, which will occupy a large lot on the northeast corner of West Washington street and Van Ness avenue in the elevated Arlington Heights section of Los Angeles.

Arthur B. Benton, well known architect of local churches and other buildings designed to be used partially for religious purposes, is the architect of the group, which includes a magnificent church building, a parish house, parsonage and a rectory. When completed the work will cost at least $100,000. The work of building this imposing edifice is under the personal direction of Rev. Stanley Fisher, pastor of the church. Work will at once be begun on the parish house, which is in itself a large building.



Architect Benton's design for Church of The Messiah, northeast corner of Washington street and Van Ness avenue.

The main church building is illustrated on this page. The design is in the English perpendicular Gothic style of architecture. The tower, which rises high above the street, bears a strong resemblance to that of the famous one of Canterbury Cathedral, and the entire structure reminds one very strongly of those grand old churches for which England is famous. The main building will face south on Washington street. It is 75x130 feet in dimensions. This consists of aisles, naves, transepts and a chancel, with the tower rising above the crossing. The height of the naves and transept will be forty feet. The tower is 112 feet high and forty feet square. In the latter there will be a large chamber, which later will contain a full chime of bells. The construction will be of brick and heavy timbering, with brick filling for both exterior and interior walls. The interior finish will be of open timber work in the roof, hardwood floors, and plastered panels, care having been given to produce a harmonious color scheme in brick, timber, and the art glass window lights.

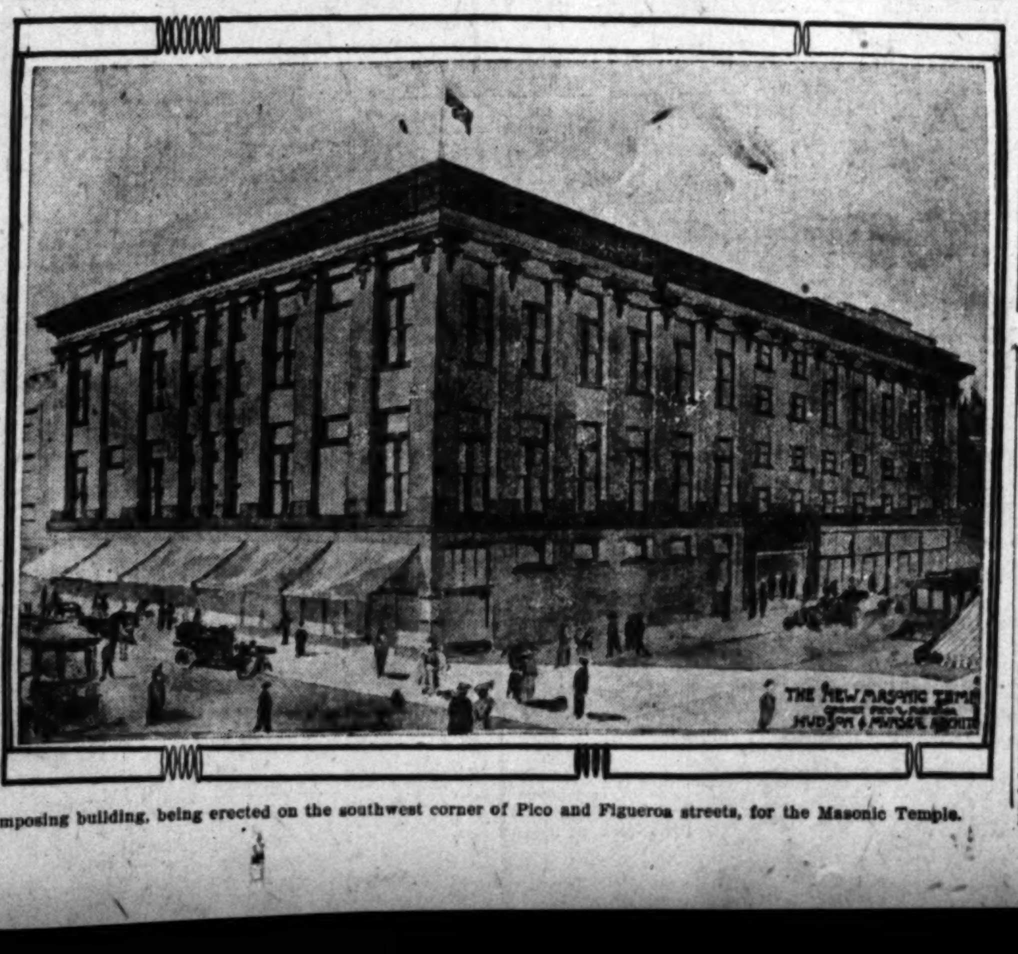
The parish house is 50x85 feet and will front on Van Ness avenue. This will be finished as a chapel, Sunday-school room, etc. The latter room is 30x64 feet. There will be a primary room 18x33 feet. A Bible class room 13x19 feet and a large gallery also are included in the plans. There will be a library in the turret, and the exterior and interior will be finished similarly to the main building. There will be a large basement under the first floor of the Parish house. This will be utilized for various church purposes. A large dining-room, 30x50 feet, a ladies' parlor, work room, kitchen, pantry, and toilet and bicycle rooms are also provided for. This basement floor will only be four feet below the street level and will have abundant light and ventilation. There will be a choir room and two cloisters, connecting with the main building. The entire lot is 150x160 feet, with the longest frontage on Van Ness avenue.

TWO HANDSOME HOMES BOUGHT.

West Twenty-second Street Property Proves Attractive—One Newcomer from Arizona.

W. L. Craig of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Company, reports the following sales: Alice S. Clapp has sold to Mrs. D. A. Haught a lot 42x135 feet on the south side of West Twenty-second street between Normandie avenue and Congress street, improved with a modern eight-room furnished house, known as No. 1842 West Twenty-second street; Consideration $5800. Mrs. Haught has recently moved here from Arizona and bought the property for a home.

Alfred B. De Long has sold to Josephine Stermer, lot 42x135 feet improved with a modern eight-room house known as No. 1851 West Twenty-second street; consideration $5000. Charles F. Patterson & Co. represented the buyer. Mrs. Stermer has bought the property for a home.



Imposing building, being erected on the southwest corner of Pico and Figueroa streets, for the Masonic Temple.

"IN HOC SIGNO VINCES."

MASONIC TEMPLE GREAT BUILDING.

OCCUPIES CORNER AT PICO AND FIGUEROA STREETS.

Five Stories High, With Storerooms on the Ground Floor—Quarters for Blue Lodges, Commandery and Eastern Stars—Plenty of Banquet Halls.

Work has been progressing satisfactorily on the New Masonic Temple, southwest corner of Pico and Figueroa streets. The excavation has been completed and portions of the foundation and steel work are now in place. An illustration of the new home of the Masonic order in Los Angeles appears on this page. It is practically a five-story building in height, but as the lodge rooms are twenty-two feet in height, there are only three main floors. Each floor has a mezzanine floor, affording space for offices, etc.

There will be five storerooms on the ground floor on the Figueroa-street frontage and four on the Pico-street side. The main entrance of the building also will be on Pico street, and a smaller entrance to the Eastern Star quarters also is on this side of the building. The main entrance and vestibule will be finished with tile floor, marble stairs and walls. Access to all the upper floors is given by an electric elevator.

There will be two blue-lodge rooms on the first floor, with a banquet room between. The lodge rooms will be 40x60 feet, and the banquet hall 20x60 feet. On the west end of the second floor are the Eastern Star headquarters, consisting of a banquet room, parlor, etc. On the second floor mezzanine are ten secretaries' offices, a Masonic library and directors' rooms.

The third floor will contain the asylum for the commandery, a chapter room and a blue-lodge room. On the third floor mezzanine are the lockers of the commandery and the organ loft. The next story will contain a large banquet hall.

The basement will be divided into three sections. The Figueroa-street frontage will be occupied by the cellars of the storerooms. The central portion is to be used for the machinery of the building, heating plant, etc. The west end of the basement will be finished as a drill hall, and also as another banquet hall. F. O. Engstrum & Co. has the general contract for the building. Hudson & Munsell are the architects.

SANTA FE BUYING LAND.

Large Tract at San Bernardino Purchased by Railway—One Man Holds Out Against Offers.

Some excitement prevails in San Bernardino over the purchase by the Santa Fé Railroad of a large tract of land on the south side of Fourth street, from Mt. Vernon avenue to the west bank of Lytle Creek, with the exception of four acres, owned by J. Hocking. The latter has been offered $1250 for his four acres of land, but has refused, holding out for $4000. It is stated that should no settlement be reached between Hocking and the Santa Fé, condemnation proceedings will be begun at once to dispossess Hocking of his property.

The land purchased last week by the railroad was owned by R. A. Bruckman and Milo Brooks. No satisfaction can be obtained from railroad officials concerning the purpose of the purchase, and all sorts of rumors are in circulation as a result.

TRANSACTIONS AT POMONA.

AGENTS REPORT HEALTHY DEMAND FOR RANCH PROPERTY.

Large Total by One Firm—Two-Hundred-Acre Alfalfa Farm—Thirty-nine Thousand for Orange Grove. Small Places and Residence Property Also Change Hands.

Loucks, Curry & Rogers of Pomona report a healthy demand for ranch property in that vicinity. During the past few days their sales and exchanges have aggregated $137,100. Dr. E. D. Stoddard of Los Angeles sold to Archibald Moore of Long Beach a 200-acre alfalfa ranch, with stock and improvements, south of Pomona, for a consideration of $50,000.

Mouser, Curry & Garrison have sold to L. Y. Cooper of Long Beach a thirty-five-acre orange grove, in Pomona, for a consideration of $39,000.

Andrew Jamieson has sold to Curry & Rogers six and a half acres of oranges and walnuts, part of the Golden Terrace ranch; consideration $3500.

B. J. Mouser has sold to Mrs. Annie Dooley a villa residence in the High School tract; consideration $4000.

D. R. Crawford sold to Dr. E. D. Stoddard a twenty-acre orange grove on Holt avenue; consideration $25,000.

Dr. Grant sold to George F. Fish the "Bide a Wee" ranch, consisting of ten acres in oranges, for $11,600. This is the second grove sold to Mr. Fish recently by this agency.

A. Mann has sold to C. F. Wood a residence on East Forty-first street, Los Angeles; consideration $4000.

MINING MAN BUYS HOME.

Manhattan Place Dwelling Sold to Frank Dick for Seventeen Thousand and Five Hundred.

Frank Dick, with many mining interests in Arizona, Nevada and Mexico, has purchased from Althouse Bros. the two-story eleven-room stone and frame residence at No. 1546 Manhattan Place, which is just being completed. The house is finished in quarter-sawed white oak, mahogany and birch, and will contain two bathrooms, hardwood floors throughout, a number of large mantels. The lot is 67x135 feet. The reported consideration is $17,500.

THOUSAND DOLLARS AN ACRE.

Ellis Sells San Dimas Ranch for Thirty Thousand—Purchased for Eight Thousand Twelve Years Ago.

Thirty thousand dollars was the price paid by E. A. and E. F. Skinner of Los Angeles for the highly improved W. D. Ellis ranch at San Dimas. The property consists of thirty acres of high-class land, improved with a handsome home, and set to full bearing orange trees.

In 1895 Mr. Ellis purchased the property from Col. D. R. Knull for $8000. Since that time he has harvested more than $48,000 worth of fruit from the ranch, and has invested $5000 in building his dwelling house. The price of $30,000, or $1000 an acre, is considered a conservative valuation of the property. Mr. Ellis may move either to Long Beach or Highland Park.

TRADES NEBRASKA FARM.

Flat Building and Vacant Lot on East Side Acquired for Quarter Section at Silver Creek.

G. W. Burton, through the agency of James Menzies, has exchanged with J. M. Gilliskie, a well-improved quarter section farm at Silver Creek, Merrick county, Nebraska, for a two-flat building on Breed street, this city. The building occupies a lot 50x150 feet, about 200 feet north of Brooklyn avenue. A vacant lot 45x130 feet, on Fifty-first street, west of Central avenue, also was given with the flat building. The trade value was placed at $6000.

The Nebraska property came to the grantor in this deal, last February, as part payment for a twenty-acre orange grove at Glendora, which was brought by C. E. Converse, who has built on the Glendora ranch and settled there with his family. Mr. Converse is an attorney, and besides practicing his profession, he has taken part in organizing a new bank at Glendora.

BORDEN HOME EXCHANGED.

Beautiful Alhambra Show Place, Valued at Fifty-two Thousand, Traded for Mortimer Home.

Last week announcement was made of the exchange of the famous Gail Borden home at Alhambra, by Mrs. Gail Borden for the handsome fourteen-room house of Frank Mortimer at No. 2000 Miramar avenue, this city. It was a flat exchange of the two properties, a valuation of $52,000 being placed on each house. The deal was made between the two owners, without any agents being interested in the transaction. This is the third transaction in handsome residence property within the last few weeks at Alhambra.

The Gail Borden home is a well known building to all familiar with the vicinity of Alhambra. It is built in the old Mission style of architecture and occupies a lot having a frontage of 300 feet on First street, with a depth of 300 feet, extending through to Garfield avenue.

The Mortimer home, on Miramar avenue, also is built in Mission style. This house is three stories high. It is surrounded with large grounds attractively set to shrubbery and plants.

IN RANCHITO DISTRICT.

Frank L. Frary of Pasadena reports the exchange of the Paddock ranch in the Ranchito district to H. H. and Clement C. Case, at a valuation of $20,000. Pasadena property valued at $5000 is taken as part payment for the ranch, the remainder is said to have been a cash transaction.

BONNIE BRAE FLATS SOLD.

W. B. Merwin & Co. has sold to a local investor for Myron T. Holcombe, the two-story four-flat frame building at No. 614 South Bonnie Brae street for a consideration of $16,000. The property is rented for a fair sum per month and pays well on the investment.

Here is a fine house, located just a block from the car line, in a fine growing neighborhood; in fact, within a block of Arlington and Washington streets.

Absolutely in perfect condition; less than six months' use has left no mars; you could search throughout West Adams Heights in vain to find a greater bargain in every respect. This property can be bought on term—in fact, for $500 or more down and easy monthly payments.

$5450 $5450 $5450

Today we offer you for the first time, and if you appreciate values, it will be the last, a large 9-room residence on Kenwood ave., near Adams street. The owner has just wired us from the East to sell this property at once at a sacrifice. ACT.

This house is modern in every respect, has hardwood floors, built-in buffet, cellar with furnace, and many other desirable features. It is now vacant, but has been renting at $60 per month. We would advise quick action on this bargain, for at $5450 it is way under its true value.

You can profit by this owner's misfortune in having to leave Los Angeles. One of our clients is obliged to move to San Francisco, and has instructed us to sell his property for $7000—several thousand dollars less than its true value—in order to make a quick turn on his investment.

The house has 8 large rooms and is situated on Magnolia avenue, near 10th st., on a lot having an east frontage, 50x145 to an alley; the lot is well improved, having a fine lawn, flowers, etc., with auto barn in the rear. The house has hardwood floors and charming interior finish and a fine cellar with furnace.

It's our honest opinion that there isn't another bargain like this in the city.

ON MANHATTAN PLACE.

$9000 $9000 $9000
$9000 $9000 $9000

Located on exclusive Manhattan Place, this beautiful residence has the advantage of one of the most aristocratic neighborhoods in the city. The appointments throughout the house are of the highest quality with specially designed elaborate lighting fixtures and beautiful art glass in several places. The floors are of highly polished quarter-sawed white oak.

Approaching the house over a fine cement driveway, the handsome entrance of oak and bevel plate glass makes an extremely pretty picture. Inside one finds a living-room rather out of the ordinary in finish, containing a mantel finished in old gold, extending clear to the beamed ceiling. The walls are finely paneled. The den also contains a large old-gold mantel with mirror and here again the walls are paneled in silk and leather; the finish of this room is in mahogany.

The charming dining-room has among its unique fixtures a built-in buffet, specially designed and combining several original ideas; woodwork finished in mahogany, leather paneled walls; beamed ceiling and plate rail. There is a kitchen buffet in style that is as complete as could be desired. There are 5 big bedchambers, light and well ventilated, finished in ivory with built-in cedar wardrobes and closets.

If you are looking for something way above the average at an extremely low figure, you should see this house at once.

Every one acknowledges that Western ave. is one of the most desirable localities in the city, and this house is situated in one of the most exclusive neighborhoods on this fine street. The house is remarkably well adapted to its surroundings and is acknowledged by every one who has seen it to be one of the most artistic residences on the avenue. For instance, there is a big, broad veranda, a 7-foot cobblestone chimney and plate glass windows on the front of the house.

Inside the finish is in entire harmony with the impressions gained from the outside; the floors are of quarter-sawed polished oak throughout the nine rooms, while polished oak and art plate glass are used extensively in the finish. The lighting fixtures are unusually rich in design for a house selling at this price, and there is a private interior telephone between first and second floors. The living-room has a mantel extending to the beamed ceiling, finished in old gold, while the woodwork in this room, as well as the hall, is antique oak; the luxurious den is finished in mahogany, with paneled silk and leather walls and an old-gold mantel with mirror.

In the dining-room, where the walls are richly paneled with leather and silk tapestry and the woodwork in mahogany, there is a beautiful large built-in buffet, with 4 bevel plate mirrors and art metal doors. The kitchen is buffet in style, having generous shelves and numerous bins and drawers. On the second floor are 5 large bedrooms, finished in ivory enamel, and there are plenty of closets, besides a specially built-in wardrobe, which contains hat and apparel apartments. The bathroom has the most modern plumbing, nickeled where exposed, and a convenient medicine closet.

We have rarely had an opportunity of offering such a really magnificent home as this for $16,500. It is a beautiful house, containing 10 very large rooms, an attic and sun parlor. There is a concrete foundation under the entire house and a concrete cellar 12x16, in which is installed a 36-inch modern furnace. The lot is located near the corner of Hobart Blvd., and Washington st., really one of the most desirable sections of the city.

The entire lower floor is finished in oak, while the bedchambers on the second floor are in rock maple; 67 windows make the house a perfect palace of sunshine. There are two charming bathrooms on the second floor with up-to-date plumbing, nickeled where exposed, while the servant's quarters on the first floor have separate bath and lavatory and clothes chute. There is a cement porch 12x36 feet with cement steps; the garage has a concrete foundation.

FOR SALE—

I have just completed two magnificent homes of 8 and 9 rooms each—4213 and 4217 South Grand—on 50-foot east front lots. There is absolutely nothing to compare with them on the market for the price.

A few exclamations of visitors who have called.

"It's a perfect dream."
"There never was a more complete library."
"It's a gem."
"The most perfect arrangement I have ever seen."
"There are lights enough for five houses."
"How can you sell it for the price?"
"It's just complete."

The latter remark expresses it all. Come and look them over and give me your opinion AND HEAR THE BEAUTIFUL ELECTRICAL MUSIC BOX THAT GOES WITH THEM.

The time of small payments down is fast drawing to a close. Take advantage of the privilege before it is too late. For a few days I will take $500 cash, balance monthly.

When our plan enables you to secure a home for yourself and pay for it by using YOUR RENT MONEY.

Do you realize that you are simply wasting money, when you pay rent?

We all have had a taste of it and fully appreciate the fact that there is no real joy or pleasure in living in a rented house.

We make it possible for every one to own their own home, and just as easy to pay for it, as to pay rent.

You naturally want to know how.

Simply this.

We will sell you one of our new, modern COTTAGES or BUNGALOWS,

Have 200 men now working for us.
We build the very best class of houses.

We do all of our own work, draw all plans and specifications, etc.

No contract work let by us.

Each house is given our personal attention, and under the supervision of our superintendent.

No second-class work put out by us.

We save you money on the material, which we buy by wholesale.

Lumber by the cargo.
You get the benefit in the price of your house, of this save in price of material.

Five years ago you could buy lots in the Castle Victor Hall tract, which extends from [illegible] to Jefferson and Brighton to Western avenue, for from $600 to $1200, now they range from $[illegible] to $2500. Two years later Hopper [illegible] put on their tract west of Western avenue, between Jefferson and Flint; about the same time M. E. Later Tyler & Co. put on their two tracts, both west of Arlington at prices from $300 to $900, these lots are now selling from $900 to $1200.

All these tracts are beautifully improved with homes, being nearly solidly built up to [illegible] Avenue and Jefferson, where the Victor G. I will sell you 17 of the finest located lots in beautiful Huntington Park; 8 facing west, and 9 facing east. Two corners 57x150, 7 inside lots 57x150 and 8 inside lots 50x150 to a 15-foot alley, making a frontage of 484 feet on two streets, and 215 on another. This property is now improved with a full two-story strictly modern 8-roomed house, built on a solid concrete foundation 12 inches thick up to floor joists. Has concrete basement, and steam heat in all rooms and bath, artistically laid out grounds, well set lawn, worlds of fruit, shade, and flowers, good barn, electric lights, telephones, piped for gas. Finest water in the world, exceptionally fine soil. Everything grows here like magic, (no mud in wet season) as the soil is of a sandy loam. These lots are all piped with 2-inch pipe, and 3-inch openings for subirrigation. This is an exceptionally fine place for someone to build houses to rent, or sell on the installment plan as there is a great demand for houses there right now. From the fact this property is only one block from the new $22,000 school house, or this property would make a fine lemon ranch or truck garden, from the fact it is so well watered. If you are looking for something good see this at once. The price is right. Prof. GEO. A. GARLOW, owner, room 426 Citizens' National Bank.

WILSHIRE BOULEVARD DISTRICT.

ATTENTION, HOME BUILDERS.
I offer some fine east front lots on Brenson ave., and some south fronts on Eighth st., near Morton Place, all of these lots are on the highest ground in this district, with a grand view of the mountains. Prices for south fronts $1180, east fronts $1250 to $1900. These are all 50-ft. lots. Restrictions $3050 to $3500. Terms one-third cash, balance 1 and 2 years at 6 per cent.

Why pay $2000 for a lot where your neighbor can build a bungalow or cheap cottage, when I can sell you a lot cheaper in a swell neighborhood, with the Eighth-st. car line an assured fact, bringing your home within 20 minutes' ride of the business center. Let me take you out to see these lots and see for yourself that I am saying the truth.

FREE WATER MEANS INDEPENDENCE.
AN ACRE HOME.
Water is wealth in this country. With good soil and plenty of water you can raise everything that grows. With an acre of Belle Vernon land and all the free water you can use, the soil will make the payments and more. Hundreds are locating there now because of its manifold advantages. Besides fine land and free water Belle Vernon is only 20 minutes from 6th and Main. It is reached by the two fastest electric lines in Greater Los Angeles. The Long Beach Boulevard passes through it. High school, graded school, stores, churches and banks are close at hand. Telephones, electric lights and other city comforts are available. The tendency is to build solid from Los Angeles to the sea. Values are always going upward. They never can go back. When you buy at Belle Vernon you are buying into an investment that must pay big dividends besides providing a comfortable home. We have sold more acre lots in Belle Vernon this month than any ten tracts in Southern California combined. Don't you think there must be a good reason for it? Large capitalists are buying all the land they can secure in that neighborhood because the city is growing that way. The price is only

FOR SALE—
MAGNIFICENT COUNTRY ESTATE.

This estate contains 4200 of nature's most beautiful acres. There are approximately 3200 acres in tillable land, and 1000 acres of hills and glens estimated to contain 50,000 cords of oak wood. Five living streams and twelve perennial springs distributed over the property make this the best naturally watered ranch in the State.

The scenery is only compared to the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts. It is here that nature in the grandeur of her mountain scenery, numerous waterfalls hidden in shady nooks together with verdant fields, has combined her efforts in making this her masterpiece.

Nor is beauty alone to be considered. As an income producer it stands alone. Hundreds of cattle or horses can graze in the abundant pasture, and thousands of tons of either grain or hay can yearly be produced. The estate is all fenced and cross-fenced, with full complement of equipment in new and modern machinery together with requisite amount of live stock.

There are over twenty buildings in first-class condition, consisting of large home place, stock barns, grain warehouses, blacksmith shop, etc.

This property is located within a few hours' ride of Los Angeles, and only twelve miles from thriving town and railroad over a delightful mountain and lakeside road.

To investigate is to appreciate this fine estate. Will accept Los Angeles income at cash valuation for part.

Price $125,000.
Address HH, box 128, TIMES OFFICE.

FOR SALE—
Country Property.

FOR SALE—
EIGHTY-ACRE FARM, SITUATED TWENTY-TWO MILES SOUTH OF LOS ANGELES AND ONE MILE FROM SOUTHERN PACIFIC STEAM RAILROAD AND ONE AND ONE-HALF MILES FROM THE SANTA ANA ELECTRIC RAILROAD.

There is an eleven-room, modern house, in good condition, one good barn, large and well built and other small buildings, such as corn cribs and chicken houses, all good buildings.

There are forty acres of alfalfa, from which the income has amounted to $500 per cutting so far this season, and there will be seven cuttings, of alfalfa, during the season. Now from the vacant ground that is not in alfalfa, there has been taken a crop of early potatoes, and there is now a second crop of potatoes growing, from which will be obtained double the income of the first crop of potatoes, which yielded net $700. There is a water system on this property, which yields 200 miners' inches of water and is distributed over the entire property through underground cement ditches. This plant consists of 28 H.P. gasoline engine, new and first-class and No. 6 Centrifugal pump, and the well is 530 feet deep and 12 inches in diameter. The supply of water is inexhaustible. This property is located in a district that will rapidly enhance in value over the present price for various reasons. It is comparatively speaking, in a new district that is just being developed.

The price of the eighty acres is $400 per acre. The price of this land will increase in value to $500 an acre in a year from now and should be the price at present time, but there is a positive increase in value there that we can count upon of $100 an acre, in the coming year, and will increase in value rapidly thereafter, in proportion to the comparative increases in that vicinity, which we can expect will increase in a very few years to something of what now is considered the cash values of land in the more anciently located and cultivated properties, which are only a few miles from here, namely Fullerton and Anaheim districts, which for income producing properties and for beauty in the improvements, trees, and other products cannot have a comparison in any other locality. The nature of the soil on this land is a sandy loam which is a very rich sediment.

The water is artesian water.

Property is located about eight and a half miles from the ocean and the climatic conditions cannot be excelled.

For an investment for positive returns there is nothing any better in Southern California than this and it is really a splendid investment and a careful investigation is invited.

SAN DIEGO.

300-acre subdivision, 4 miles from the bay at SAN DIEGO, and within 7 miles of SAN DIEGO Courthouse. Recently subdivided into villa tracts. A large amount of work has been done. 2 miles of streets graded. Mountain water piped to land, and ready for use. Some homes built and telephone extended. A main county road from SAN DIEGO runs through the tract. New depot built. 7-cent fare. This beautiful site is mostly level mesa with an altitude of 450 feet, and is above frost line. There is no richer soil anywhere and it adjoins one of the handsomest close-in suburbs of SAN DIEGO. The views are magnificent, and as a health and home subdivision it has no superior in the WORLD. It is one of the very few level tracts that SAN DIEGO possesses—as can be readily seen from the U. S. topographical chart.

This property can be sold in small tracts and produce $150,000 to $200,000, and will then be selling way below real value.

Price for the whole 300 acres, $150 an acre, or $54,000. Half cash, balance time, 5 per cent. off for all cash. It is offered to settle up partnership interests through age and sickness.

ALHAMBRA.

FOR SALE—ALHAMBRA.
As the attraction of the investor and homeseeker and especially the man of means. We have a number of good lots and homes, which can be made as beautiful as any place in this great southern part of the State.
It will pay any one desirous of a good home to investigate.
We have about 4 acres on the bank of the arroyo, with a frontage on the car line of 470 feet. It has an abundance of shrubbery of every description; a number of large cypress and everything to make it a beautiful spot. It also has a modern 7 room house which in itself is a beauty. Has a large front room and dining-room with beamed ceilings, hard wood floors; kitchen and one lady room downstairs; three bedrooms and bath upstairs; has a veranda on two sides the whole length of the house. This place can be made a productive place as well as a home, as there is plenty of ground for cultivation, suitable for berries, potatoes, fruit and chicken industries; plenty of small fruit on the place now. You may think that the price of this sounds extravagant, but when you have seen the place, you will say that it is cheap at $18,000.
Another one of a little over 3 acres, which is also on the bank of the arroyo, and already improved, and the finest kind of trees that could ever be thought of, together with oranges and every kind of fruit. It is only a short block from the car line, and only a five-minute walk from the business center of Alhambra. It has gas and electricity and a modern 7 room house that could not be produced for less than $6000. This place is not thrown on the market to be picked up in and shape you may think, because it is well worth the money, and the owners are well satisfied with the location and could never get a more beautiful spot any place, and we wish to invite an actual home seeker to come and see it. It is no trouble for us to show it. The price of this property is $14,000; one-half cash; it is within a stone's throw of a piece of acreage which sold in the last two weeks, without a house, but on its merits, for close to $20,000.
Another one with 1¾ acres, which is in every respect on an equal with the above, and has oranges, lemons, peaches, pears, walnuts, loquats, shade trees, shrubbery of every description, and with a little care could be made a beauty of Southern California. It also has a 6 room house with bath, etc. Price of this is $10,000.
2½ acres within a block of the Masonic Home and Pacific Electric car, in East San Gabriel; this is a property that a living could be made from for any size family provided that they will take the trouble to set the ground show what it can do. It has a modern 5 room house, bath, etc., timed and clean as a pin. This place can be bought for $4000, which is pretty near like finding it.
10 acres in East San Gabriel not far from the Covina electric line, being 4 acres in peaches, and balance suitable to raise melons, berries and small fruit; good 5-room house, barn, shrubbery, etc., 10 shares of water stock, pumping 100 inches of water. The owner has taken over $1500 of actual money out of this place this season, and will show his books to prove this statement. Price of this property is exceedingly low, any one looking for a ranch should come at once; price $6300; $3500 cash, balance 7 per cent.
HOUSES.
5 room bungalow, first class style, close in on the best street in Alhambra, two rooms could be made upstairs with very little expense; lot is 52½x150 feet, facing east, street work in, great bargain at $2800.
7 room modern house, hard wood floors, east front, lot 70x150 ft., close to the car line and High School; price $4000; $2000 cash.
4 room cottage, bath, etc., only $1600.

FOR SALE—DO YOU WANT TO BUY AN orange grove? If so, it will pay you to see me, especially if you have looked around, as I can certainly show you something that will look good to you. I will not sell run-down groves, as my personal experience has shown me that you can pay for a good grove from the crops (3 to 4 years,) while it will take you that long to get one crop from the ordinary run-down grove. I devote my entire time to "selling" orange groves and have had 15 years' experience in all branches of the business. I have bargains from $2000 to $110,000. Have a few good properties for exchange. CALHOUN'S VICTORY.

"PETERED OUT" IS CAR STRIKE.

UNION BOSSES LOSE EVERY POINT IN CONTEST.

Summing Up of the Losses—San Francisco Wage-earners Six Hundred Thousand Dollars Out of Pocket—United Railroads Loses a Million—Organized Labor Hit.

[From the Argonaut, Sept. 21.]

Some two weeks ago, it will be remembered, it was remarked in these columns that the street-car strike, discredited, whipped out, beaten at every point, was staggering about in desperate search of a place to fall. Events have justified this statement; the fall has come, though hardly in the form anticipated. The policy of the labor unionists does not permit them to admit that their cause is lost; at the same time they have yielded in the sense of having abandoned any purpose to carry on the fight actively or to enforce the boycott which they have maintained during the past four months and more. The explanation given by the strike managers is worth attention. In a statement to the public, say the strike managers, the union carmen "were forced on a strike for living wages and decent hours." The strike thus inaugurated "met with a spontaneous and hearty support of the union men and women in particular, a support without parallel in the history of the country." Why a strike thus prompted and supported beyond precedent has failed to accomplish its purpose, the committee does not say; neither does it make any reference to the fact that the strike was pronounced illegal under the principles and rules of organized labor as declared by representatives of the laborites themselves in formal assemblage.

Proceeding, the committee declares that it realizes the enormous inconvenience and loss resulting from "the stubborn, unyielding attitude of the traction magnate" and knows that he is not dealing frankly with the public in statements that he is prepared to give adequate street-railway transportation. Upon the pretense of putting the claims of the street-car company to the test, the committee first withdraws the boycott against the street-car service and then advises unionists to ride on the cars for the purpose of showing that the service is inadequate. The logic is distinctly lame, but it must serve to cover a backdown which is practically complete, though not nominally so. For while unionists are permitted and even advised to ride on the cars, the pretense of a strike will be continued. Union men are not to be permitted to apply for work in connection with the car service, nor will the assessment placed against members of other unions to support the cost of the strike be rescinded. Union carmen are to continue idle and unionists generally will be required to provide funds for their support.

All this is extraordinary and anomalous, and it would be quite incomprehensible excepting for the special circumstances of the case. The Strike Committee is not now fighting over the question of wages and hours; on that score it readily enough admits complete defeat. The continued contention is over the matter of recognition of the Carmen's Union. The United Railroads has declared that it will not recognise the union under any circumstances. The unionists see that the enforcement of this dictum will go far toward destroying the prestige of organized labor in San Farncisco. The leaders with whom unionism is a profitable trade are determined, therefore, to fight the case to the last ditch. They have thrown off every point in the original contention; they are more than willing, as illustrated in the case of Geary street, to take up the work of the street-car service again upon the terms and conditions against which they struck in May. What they want now, no matter in what form it may come or at what cost, is recognition of the Carmen's Union.

So far as the Argonaut can see, there is not the slightest prospect that the United Railroads will make concession at this point. Mr. Calhoun has said over and over again that he will not recognise the union under any circumstances. He will not discriminate against members of the union, but he will deal with all who apply for work in the street-car service as individuals, and he will hold the service of the company open to non-union as well as to union men. In other words, the service of the United Railways will be on the open-shop basis. This position is in absolute accord with respectable and conservative opinion in San Francisco. Mr. Calhoun has won a high measure of public favor by asserting and maintaining it; and he could not now alter his policy to the extent of compromising with unionism without such sacrifice of public good will as a man of his demonstrated spirit is not likely to make.

Counting from May 5, when it began, until the 12th inst., when the boycott was removed, the car strike has covered a period of 131 days. It has on the part of the carmen been a desperate battle, and they have not hesitate to go to the extremes of violence and criminality. In the course of the trouble strikers have killed one policeman and one non-union workman. They have wounded two policemen, nine street-car passengers and 210 non-union carmen. In the several encounters the railroad employés have killed three rioters, wounded one policeman and twenty-nine citizens. A vast amount of damage has been done in the smashing of windows and mutilation of cars. The cost of the strike to the railroad company is at least $1,000,000, and the cost to strikers in loss of wages is about $600,000. Organized labor in general, it is estimated, has been hit to the tune of $700,000. The cost to the public in inconvenience, interruption of business and a thousand unnamable forms is beyond computation. On the day before the strike the United Railroads had 1700 carmen in its service; it now has a total of 1450 carmen, of whom 245 are strikers, who have abandoned unionism to go back to the service of the company as independent workmen.

HER ADVISOR.

COUNTESS' LOVE FOR HER MAID.

MME. ANNA GOULD GOVERNED BY DOMESTIC.

Parisian Friends Declare She Is Guided Frequently by Girl Named Alene, Even in Affairs of the Heart—New Lights Thrown on Private Life of Heiress.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 22.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] What seemed to give the friends of Mme. Anna Gould final confirmation of the report that she was about to marry the Prince De Sagan is that they learned Mme. Gould went with De Sagan one day to call on her former, maid, Alene.

For this devoted woman, Mme. Gould has had the greatest affection. Since before her marriage to Count Boni de Castellane, Alene has been her confidante and adviser. It is said that the maid distrusted the Count and advised her mistress to safeguard her wealth by having a separate property clause in her marriage contract. This, if true, saved millions from the fate of the other money squandered by her titled husband.

It is related that Count Boni learned that the control of the purse-strings by his wife was the doing of Alene, and that he always detested her, and that he once dismissed her on the charge of having stolen a diamond ring.

This ring, the story goes, was found by a valet in the Count's pocket. The fellow servant carried it to Alene, who took it to her mistress, denouncing the plot before the Count's face.

The Countess Anna thereupon insisted that she must not leave her service, and so carried the day.

Count Boni often told his wife that she relied too much on Alene's taste in matters of dress and he himself undertook to teach her what to wear. It is said that he frequently dressed her for balls, even to the extent of putting rouge on her cheeks and pencilling her eyebrows with his own hand.

On one such occasion, when he had dressed the Countess, he insisted on her wearing a triple row of pearls. The Countess thought this magnificent ornament made her look overdressed, and she turned to Alene with a question in her eyes. Alene shrugged her shoulders and made a face. The Countess tore off the necklace, breaking the string and spilling the jewels on the floor. Disdaining to pick them up, she swept them out of the room in a pan.

It was such scenes as this which gave significance to the report that Alene was consulted as to whether the Prince De Sagan could make Anna Gould a happy wife.

AMERICAN GIRL CAPTURES DUKE.

MISS ANNE BREESE WILL BECOME BRITISH DUCHESS.

Her Coming Marriage to Lord Alistair Innes-Kerr Is Now Interesting London Society—Duchess of Roxburghe, Formerly Miss May Goelet, Is Matchmaker.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 22.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Since the marriage of Lady Mary Hamilton, the wealthiest girl in England, to the Marquis of Graham, no wedding has so intensely interested society as that of Miss Anne Breese to Lord Alistair Innes-Kerr.

The happy day is fixed for October 10, the ceremony to be performed in fashionable St. George's Chapel, Hanover Square.

The bride is the younger daughter of the late W. L. Breese of New York; the bridegroom the Duke of Roxburghe's brother and heir presumptive to the Dukedom.

Lord Alistair is by no means wealthy, and his is absolutely a love match, which has been fostered by the young Duchess of Roxburghe, who was Miss May Goelet of New York. She made every opportunity for Lord Alistair to press his courtship at Stratford House during the season, had him staying there and often invited Miss Breese there and sang Lord Alistair's praises to her. Miss Breese is not wealthy either and the young couple will have to live quietly, but it is said the Duchess of Roxburghe will give them a small but completely furnished house in Mayfair. Her girl friends adore Miss Breese, who is highly cultured, a brilliant conversationalist and classically beautiful. One of her dearest intimates is Princess Patricia of Connaught, who has sent her a handsome bridal gift, and she will attend the wedding with her parents.

Miss Breese, Miss Jennie Reid and Miss Nelly Post have been the three inseparables. The American Ambassador's daughter, Miss Post, Lady Evilyn Innes-Kerr, the bridegroom's sister, and Miss Brouda Wodehouse will be among the bridesmaids.

Miss Jene Reid, with Miss Breese, designed the wedding gown and made rough sketches of it. The dress is of point d'Alencon lace. The train is cut into the skirt, the plaits flowing from the waist line into yards of fullness, sweeping behind. The skirt is crossed diagonally by a band of seed pearl trimming, fourteen inches deep. The bodice has a square collar of pearls and bands of pearl trimming across the back. Miss Reid also designed the bridesmaids' dresses, but, at her request, their "composition" will be a profound secret until their effect dazzles an admiring multitude.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—The return of the Roosevelts to a spick and span White House, on Wednesday, set in motion a wave of expectancy that will reach every circle of society at the nation's capital, from the distinguished foreigner who, with his wife, may expect to be entertained at the President's table, to the humble market man who always aspires to the White House patronage. It may be interesting to note, en passant, that there are no "purveyors to the king" in Washington, and woe betide the tradesman who uses the fact that he supplies this or that to the White House, as a means of securing trade. No man may boast of being the President's butcher, baker or candlestick-maker, lest he lose orders from the executive mansion. There is, however, an "F"-street shoe dealer, who, standing in the front of his store when the haut-monde is in town, "sizes up" every new customer, and when one approaches whom he wishes to impress, calls out loudly: "Have you sent that package of shoes to the White House?"

The prospect that there will be both a debutante and a bride in the highest official circle, makes the pleasure of anticipation especially keen among the younger set. The wedding of Miss Root, which will take place early in November, or as soon as possible after the return of the bride and her family from Mexico, whither they went this week, will be the most brilliant affair of the kind since the marriage of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, formerly Miss Helen Hay, and Mrs. James W. Wadsworth, nee Miss Alice Hay, both of whom were led to the altar during their father's regime as Secretary of State. The intimate relation necessarily existing between the premier of the Cabinet and members of the diplomatic corps makes it officially de rigueur for the latter to attend all formal functions in the State Secretary's family, clad in their most elaborate robes of office. The bridegroom in this case, Lieut. U. S. Grant, will be attended by fellow officers, who like himself, will wear the full dress uniform of the United States army. More gold lace and brass buttons will be in evidence in the audience, worn by the army contemporaries of his father, Gen. Fred Grant, and of his grandfather, Gen. U. S. Grant.

The date for Miss Ethel Roosevelt's formal presentation to society is as yet undetermined, but rumor, more or less official, declares that she will be introduced at a ball to be given in the East room, and that the affair will be even more brilliant that the occasion which marked the "coming out" of her elder sister. As the début of Miss Alice was the crowning event of the family's first season in the White House, so the formal bow of the second Miss Roosevelt is expected to excel all other entertainments of the Roosevelts last winter as the "First Family in the Land."

Miss Ethel will go into society much less a stranger than her sister was at the time of her début, for during the six years of her father's administration she has frequently been "among those present" on formal occasions at the White House, and has gone out quite a little during school vacations. At all times she has given evidence of more poise than Mrs. Longworth possessed in her girlhood days, but whether she will stand the test of years in the limelight as well as her sister, is a question the answering of which will interest the society of two continents and our insular possessions. In the meantime, being equally free from the duties of the schoolroom and formal obligations to society, Miss Ethel is having all sorts of good times, going to and from the White House in the same democratic way her father and mother have come and gone. Unless she has entirely outgrown the habits of her school-girlhood, she will be seen sometimes en costume for the long tramp she enjoys as thoroughly as do others of her name. Sometimes she goes on a shopping tour with her mother and the latter's secretary, Miss Hagner, but more often is seen driving in as chic a trap as can be found in the country. She is an excellent whip and a graceful rider and much more fond of sport with her horse than she is of golf or tennis.

Washington society is taking keen personal interest in the forthcoming marriage of Miss Dorothy Quincy Roosevelt, daughter of Mrs. Hilbourne Roosevelt, to Langdon Geer, and many of its members will witness the ceremony, which will take place on October 5 in the Church of the Incarnation, New York City. Rev. William Montague Geer, an uncle of the groom, will officiate. The bride-to-be is one of the six Roosevelt cousins "presented" the same season as the President's daughter, Mrs. Longworth, and is said to be his favorite among them. The marriage has been hurried somewhat, as Mr. Geer is obliged to go abroad on business. The couple will sail immediately after their marriage and spend the next few months in Europe and the British Isles, but will make their future home in New York City.

Few changes in the diplomatic corps have caused more regret to society in general than the recall of Capt. F. E. C. Ryan, naval attaché to the British Embassy, who, with Mrs. Ryan and their two children left for England Thursday. The passing of Capt. Ryan from the official circle here means that he will be promoted to the rank of rear-admiral in the royal navy as soon as he reaches London, so regret at his going is commingled with joy over his nearing the goal of his ambition. Mrs. Ryan became as popular as a hostess as she was as a guest. She is a fine horsewoman and frequently entertained riding parties between seasons.

One of the most inetresting experiences of Capt. and Mrs. Ryan in this country, was afforded them during a recent tour of the Northwest, when as guests of Senator and Mrs. Carter of Montana, they spent a week in the wilderness among the Indians. They saw the American in his native lair, and witnessed dances abounding in aboriginal glory.

Capt. Ryan will be succeeded as naval attaché to the embassy here by Capt. Horace Hood, who is expecetd to arrive in Washington about the time Ambassador and Mrs. Bryce return from their summer vacation, spent at Intervale, N. H.

Washington society is not at all confident that Mr. Wu Fang will be returned here as the Chinese Minister. Indeed, it is inclined to think he will not, though it is realized he would like to come back, if only to prove that he is not so officially dead as he was thought to be at the time he was recalled for his failure to secure the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act. Liang Ten Yun, a Yale graduate, was selected to succeed the outgoing Minister, Sir Chentung Liang Cheng, but has instead been appointed assistant secretary of the Chinese Board of Foreign Affairs. This leaves the post in Washington still vacant and the Chinese Legation here in the hands of Mr. Chow Tszchi, first secretary of chargé d'affaires. Mr. Wu was very popular during the early part of his stay in this country, chiefly because he was a diplomatic novelty. He was something of a toast, but hardly a diplomat. His English was good, his manner brisk and unconventional, his curiosity boundless, and his industry inexhaustible. But what loyal Americans can least forget when considering the possibility of his again representing China in this country, is the attempt he made to have the Celestials boycott American goods in return for our failure to welcome with open arms as many scions of the most conservative race in the world, as wished to come to this land of the free and home of the brave.

While in the South Secretary and Mrs. Root and Miss Root will be entertained by Gen. Luis Terrazas, the largest land owner in the world, and father-in-law of the present Mexican Ambassador to Washington. The home to which Gen. Terrazas will take his guests is perhaps the finest farmhouse in the world, and next to the palace of the President, is the most elegantly finished and furnished home in Mexico. It is in the province of Chihuahua, in the center of a territory of which he is the sole proprietor, and which is apporximately the size of the combined States of Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island. The marble, with which it is lavishly embellished, was brought from Italy, and when put in place, was carved by European artisans. It cost more than $2,000,000 in Mexican money. The house is reached only after an eight-hour trip by rail through the Terrazas estate. Ambassador and Mme. Creel will be there, and will later themselves entertain the guests, for the Ambassador has been inaugurated Governor of Chihuahua since his return to Mexico a few weeks ago. The dream of the Ambassador and his father-in-law is to teach their countrymen modern methods of agriculture and the cattle trade, and to eventually have in Mexico a series of small farms under cultivation by individual owners.

Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Smith, Miss Smith, J. R. Helmke, and Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Anderson of Los Angeles; Messrs. S. M. Wilds and C. E. Seares of Riverside; H. W. Lindsay of Pasadena, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Cole, Julius Calman, Mrs. James L. Sullivan, Miss Sullivan, and Messrs. A. B. and M. B. Crocker of San Francisco, F. A. Crowe, Mrs. D. Crowe, H. E. Crowe and Miss A. Crowe of Long Beach, and the Misses Ahern of Sacramento, are the Californians visiting Washington this week.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Warner, Miss Leona Warner of Fort Morgan, Colo.; H. H. Carroll of Seattle, H. L. Bleecker of Spokane, and Senator and Mrs. Dixon of Butte, are also here.

SIX THOUSAND AT BIG DANCE.

SHRINERS EXPECT GREAT JAM AT NEW TEMPLE BALL.

Fine New Building at Jefferson and Royal Streets Nears Completion; Committees Inspect Structure to Be Opened Next Month—Fun Coming With Unregenerates.

Like farmers after a rain, local Shriners are "jubilant." Aside from having received certain communications from Illustrious Potentate Motley Flint, in secret ink, detailing dire things to happen to a bunch of unregenerates in the near future, they also have been informed that the great Shrine auditorium building at Jefferson and Royal street is about completed.

The grand ball next month is the great event.

The Building Committee and others inspected the vast structure yesterday, and it is pronounced the "greatest whatever." The electric lighting system is now complete and yesterday the lights were turned on for the officers and committeemen. A myriad of twinkling lights, away up in the great steel arches that support the roof, massed upon chandeliers of unusual design, light up the amphitheater brilliantly, while the rich oriental stage, the most unique ever constructed, is illumined by hundreds of hidden globes of every shade.

The opera chairs are in place on the lower floor, surrounding the auditorium, as well as in the balcony. The rich furnishings are all on hand and will be installed within a week. The main floor is being put down and when completed will be the finest and largest dancing floor in the West. It is of selected white maple, laid upon a deep base of solid concrete.

Thursday evening, October 24, is set for the formal opening of the new temple. That evening, perhaps not less than three thousand couples of the elite of Los Angeles and surrounding cities will gather to take part in the grand invitation ball of Al Malaikah Temple. It is the intention of the Shriners to eclipse any similar effort in Los Angeles, if not in America.

The Catalina Island Band, augmented by about twenty local musicians of high repute, under the direction of Prof. E. C. Kammermeyer, will furnish the music. Formal notices were sent to each member of the two thousand enrolled in Al Malaikah, a week ago. Each member is permitted to nominate two gentlemen for invitation. The nominations will close Monday. The list of patronesses will be announced later.

Blood in the Parsons Eye.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 28.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Kindly allow me to state, most emphatically, that in no way am I concerned in the Venice-Ocean Park mix-up; that I am not the Parsons named in the rumpus there, also, that I am a peaceful man and wish to continue so; but the mistaken-identity situation is becoming so serious and I am waylaid so often for an explanation, that unless a change soon occurs, there will be an old-fashioned Arizona mix-up, which will mark an epoch in such proceedings.

McBURNEY'S VITAL TONIC

Don't let that Worn-out Weary Feeling grow Into a case of Serious Sickness.

Don't wait until you are so run down that you are on the verge of a physical or mental collapse before you do something.

You need a tonic now.

This isn't an excuse for drinking—alcohol is a stimulant, not a tonic.

It is a rational reason why you should use McBurney's Vital Tonic.

It makes you feel well and look well by purifying the blood, strengthening the nerves, regulating the bowels, invigorating the sluggish kidneys and torpid liver, and bracing you up all over—this is the work of a tonic.

Anything which stimulates temporarily is dangerous.

Every shock is followed by a reaction.

Stimulants depend on shock for their effect.

The action of McBurney's Vital Tonic upon tired, worn-out nerves is little short of marvelous. It relieves brain-fag, stops distressing headaches, and builds up the entire system, so that you feel well, look well, and find yourself equal to all life's duties.

That unutterably weary feeling, which makes it impossible to move or perform the lightest duty with profit or pleasure, will surely disappear if McBurney's Vital Tonic is used.

Do not confound Vital Tonic with preparations which depend upon drug-disguised alcohol for immediate effect, and which create a habit which is nothing more nor less than alcoholism. McBurney Vital Tonic will build up the system naturally—it cannot create a "habit."

Sold by all druggists. Price per bottle, $2.00. If your druggist will not sell you McBurney's Vital Tonic, I will send it to you prepaid on receipt of price, or ring up Home Phone B1610.

NEW RAILROAD'S OFFICES.

Tonopah and Tidewater Will Open Up in Los Angeles First of the Month—Notes.

The Tonopah and Tidewater Railroad expects to become an important factor in the commercial and transportation circles of Los Angeles, and on October 1 will open offices in the Pacific Electric building in rooms Nos. 388 to 395. Offices will also be opened in Goldfield, where F. M. Jenifer, now agent in this city of the Oceanic Steamship Company, will be the railway agent.

The new agent to take the place of Mr. Jenifer for the Oceanic Steamship Company in Los Angeles is A. M. Culver, who is well known in railway circles, East and West. The appointment takes effect October 1.

The death is announced in a telegram to all the employés of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western by W. H. Truesdale of Samuel Sloan at his home in Garrison, N. Y., who was connected with the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western for almost fifty years. At the time of his death he was chairman of the road's board of managers.

WANT MORE SEWERS.

Boyle Heights Anxious for Council to Provide Needed Work in New Sections.

Property owners in Boyle Heights anxiously await the decision of the city authorities as to the amount of money which will be allotted to their district for lateral sewers. It is claimed that, to meet the needs, would require practically all money available for sewer extension.

There seems to be little possibility of the full amount asked for being apportioned. Just which section of Boyle Heights will have to wait for the sewers is a puzzling question. It is estimated that more than $150,000 would be required for a satisfactory system of lateral sewers, not to take into consideration needed main extensions. The matter has been passed ot the Council.

Many of the newer subdivisions of Boyle Heights are urgently in need of better sewer facilities. Several are practically assured of a complete system. The Ninth Ward Improvement Association is trying to solve the problem.

HITS AT RAILROADS.

Assemblyman from Fresno Deplores Their Influence in Politics and Offers Suggestions.

Many members of the City Club listened to a discussion of that ever-pertinent topic, "Civic Righteousness," after the weekly luncheon yesterday. The principal speaker was Assemblyman A. M. Drew of Fresno.

Mr. Drew, in speaking of corrupt conditions, referred particularly to the domination of railroads in politics in California. He then spoke of methods of protecting the public against dishonest officials, advocating, first, publicity, when there is a lapse from the path of rectitude, and, second, removal of the temptation.

"The second method is the most effectual," he added, "as practically demonstrated at two of our public institutions—San Quentin and Folsom. From an economic standpoint, we find that it is better to remove the temptation from the individual than to remove the individual from the temptation."

Mr. Drew said that there should be a further increase in the scope of civil service, as applied to State, county and municipal officials and employés, with the purpose of cutting off the power of the political bosses.

This address was followed by two short talks by W. J. Hunsaker and Frank G. Tyrrell. Mr. Hunsaker said he is in hearty accord with the idea of extending the field of civil service, and Mr. Tyrrell protested against the spirit of commercialism which seeks individual gain at the cost of conscience and morality.

TOBACCO TROUBLES LIGHT.

D. F. Hibbard, secretary and general manager of the Pacific Cigar and Tobacco Company, explained yesterday how the stores of that company come to be in charge of the Wholesalers' Board of Trade. "Forty per cent. of the capital stock is owned by me, the other 60 per cent. by H. Hayden Sands of New York, president of the concern," said Mr. Hibbard. "We have been operating a large factory and also several stores. Mr. Sands was unable to come out here owing to illness, so we agreed to a division, he taking the stores and I the factory. He has placed his stores in the hands of the Wholesalers' Board of Trade in order to have the business closed out. I hold the factory, which has less than $3000 indebtedness against it. I am now preparing to reopen the factory and shall do so immediately."

A Competence Is Within Your Reach

We have gotten up a little booklet addressed to people who want an investment for their savings that will yield them a competence. We will send it to you if you will ask for it. It tells you that the little investment that will yield you a competence, which you have dreamed about, is within your reach; that the rich man no longer has a monopoly of the independent income-producing investments; that at last an investment has been found in a country where bananas, oranges, lemons, cocoanuts, pineapples, dates, limes and a profusion of fruits grow in abundance; where there is free transportation by water to market; where there is an abundance of free water for irrigating purposes; where there is cheap labor at 30 cents a day; where there is rich alluvium soil, and where, best of all, you can buy an acre of land planted to bananas that will yield you an income almost from the very start, and you can pay for it on easy terms if you wish.

You can buy five acres if you like (no more than 10 to any one person) and have an investment that will yield you an independent income indefinitely.

Your land is planted to bananas when you buy it, and your trees are growing while you pay for the land. When you finish your payments you get a deed to your property. If you do not care to, or cannot live on it, we will care for your grove and market your fruit, making a small charge for maintenance. You get the profits.

There is nothing like this in the world except in near the big seaport of Tampico, where we have just bought a magnificent plantation of 630 acres, with one and one-half miles of clear water frontage on the beautiful Tamesi River, navigable for a distance of 135 miles.

It tells you of the exact amount of profit yielded by a one, two, three, four, five and ten-acre grove of bananas. It tells you how bananas are cultivated and everything else you want to know about this investment.

The best acres are going fast and the price is shortly to be advanced. Investigate our proposition and you will want an acre or more of this land. Investigate it quickly and you will pay less—much less—and be much surer of the acres you want than later on. Call or write for the book, using the coupon below.

VITALIZ
GIANT BELT

VITALIZ is the latest electric belt. It does not have to be charged whenever to be worn, and has the greatest power of any electric belt ever made. It can cure anything that electricity can cure and is easy to wear—no bother, no vinegar. Just wear it around the body and it throws a strong, steady invigorating current through the body. VITALIZ is charged ready for use when you get it, and it can do anything that an electric belt of any kind ever did, and better, too—BECAUSE—VITALIZ has greater voltage than all other appliances. VITALIZ cures where other electric belts fail, as VITALIZ has many times the power of the other belts. Electricity cures by giving strength and nourishment to the body. It removes the cause of disease or weakness by supplying the power that the organs of the body lack. It builds up and strengthens weak men and women. Where medicines FAIL, electricity supplies the powers that are wanting. Few medicines made to strengthen VITALITY, really do so; they contain only excitants—DOPE—and people think that they are good, but the day comes when they will pay dearly for their mistake. Electricity is a natural remedy—it supplies strength just as your food supplies strength when the organs work right. Electricity causes these organs to work right. It is not harmful—it is no medicine—can contain no poisonous excitants. It is life food. A food that the body needs more than all others, for without electricity the body dies. No one has ever been able to separate life from electricity.

BETTER BRIDGE LIGHTS.

Boyle Heights Residents Urge Additional Lamps on Structures at First and Seventh Streets.

Better lights for the First-street bridge are agitated by Boyle Heights people. The matter has been taken up by the Ninth Ward Improvement Association. It is claimed that, after nightfall, the bridge is far from safe owing to the fact that the lights are so dim that a collision is likely to occur at any time.

The city authorities probably will be asked to provide at least one good arc lamp, so hung that it will cast a strong light in the middle of the roadway. Those who have investigated believe this will be satisfactory.

Improved lighting of the Seventh-street bridge also is demanded. Though this bridge does not carry the amount of travel that the First-street viaduct does, yet it is a busy thoroughfare. It is claimed that at least two arc lamps are needed at once.

NO TRACE OF HER BOY.

No trace has yet been found of Walter Kennedy, the fourteen-year-old boy who is strangely missing from his home at No. 318 East Tenth street. The search was coutinued yesterday by his widowed mother, Mrs. D. Kennedy, and by the police and interested friends of the family. The boy left home Thursday morning, presumably to attend the Sacred Heart Convent in East Los Angeles. He did not reach there. His mother fears he was injured or taken suddenly ill.

FIRST STREET PAVING.

Sewer mains on East First street are being lowered preparatory to the paving of the street. A large crew is engaged in the work. For a block west of Boyle avenue the street is torn up and pipes are being laid rapidly. The St. Louis-street main is being lowered where it passes under First street and new pipe is being put in place to avoid danger of a break after the asphalt surface has been laid. The actual paving work will be taken up within the next few weeks and it is hoped to have it completed before the winter rains set in.

UNIONITE GAS WON'T LIGHT.

Walking Delegates Foiled in New Trouble Plot.

Gas Companies Nip Scheme to Shackle Employees.

Fail to Profit by Rivalry Between Companies.

Taking advantage of the unusual demand for expert gasfitters and meter-fitters, occasioned by the advent of a new gas company, walking delegater of the Central Labor Council are conducting a gum-shoe campaign for the purpose of organizing a gasworkers' union in Los Angeles.

Working under cover of secrecy, these trouble makers have been visiting the workmen at their homes and plying their old trade of bluster and buncombe to coerce the real workers into paying tribute to the red ranters who hold all the offices in the Central Labor Council.

Some of the workmen were overawed and intimidated by the bluster of the walking delegates; these gave a partial consent to join—provided their employers would not object. Emboldened by this passive attitude of the workers, the walking delegates attempted last week to extend their coercive tactics to the companies.

On Friday, Champ S. Vance, manager of operation of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company, received the following communication from the Central Labor Council:

Mr. Champ Vance:

Dear Sir: The Executive Board of the Central Labor Council, comprising every labor body in the city, have selected Mr. H. Warner, the bearer, to act as a medium to arrange, if possible, a meeting between yourself or any representative designated by the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company and a committee of three from the above body.

Trusting you will permit him an audience, we are

Respectfully,

EXECUTIVE BOARD CENTRAL LABOR BODY.

W. A. ENGLE, Secretary.

NO PLACE THERE.

This letter didn't win the rough-necked Mr. Warner an audience, but it caused the management of the gas company to make a quiet investigation to discover how much discontent the agitators had been able to foment among the employés.

The ranters had made progress for a time among the gasmakers at the company's works. But just as the roughnecks were preparing to organize the union, the company had unwittingly broken up their scheme by telling the men that after October 1 they will have a schedule cutting two hours off their day's work. This, too, without the necessity for a strike or the payment of tribute to human leeches who live off the labor of weak but honest men.

There will be no gasmakers' union at the present time, and the agitators have turned their attention to the meter-men and trouble men. These are in demand just now; the new company is making alluring offers to many of the employés of the old, and the men have taken this to mean that they can dictate their wages and hours of work.

TOO MUCH INDUCEMENT.

From the outside it appears that some of the department heads of the City Gas Company have been building up trouble for themselves by promising men who come over from the old company "union hours and union wages."

A. W. Ross, manager of construction of the City Gas Company, said yesterday that his company will take no part in organizing unions among gasworkers. He said that the Council of Labor has not yet made any demands for the "closed shop."

"About the only men we employ at present are laborers in the ditches," said Mr. Ross. "I do not think any attempt is made to organize these into a union; I have not heard of such. In employing men we shall recognize no union, and shall deal with the men direct, not with unions or business agents."

Apparently the management of the company is not aware of the kind of inducements some of the foremen are reported to be offering to get recruits. In union circles the boast is made openly that the gasworkers here will be organized before the new year; and they add that the advent of a new company is making this possible. The agitators say they are organizing the men of the City Gas Company right under the noses of the bosses, and they don't know what is going on."

OUT FOR THEMSELVES.

The walking delegates do not expect to better the condition of the workmen employed by the gas companies. The sentiment for industrial freedom is paramount in Los Angeles, and the agitators see a hard winter before them unless they can secure more dupes to pay tribute to the Labor Council.

In San Francisco and in eastern cities under the domination of the "reds," the gasmakers' unions have proved to be among the worst of the organized gangs of boycotters and bomb-throwers. So far, Los Angeles has been singularly clear of them.

MAY BE COUNTERFEITER.

Arrested at Naud Junction With Spurious Gold Pieces in Pocket. Stamp Perfect.

[illegible]ard Carpenter, a cabinet maker employed by the Marshall & Stearns Company, was arrested Friday night at the Naud Junction pavilion on a charge of passing counterfeit money. The complaint was made by Robert Goldenburg, a newsboy, who, after following the man for some time, pointed him out to a patrolman. Yesterday Carpenter was turned over to the Federal authorities and he will be examined before Commissioner Van Dyke today.

The coins found in Carpenter's possession when he was searched at the Police Station were of perfect stamp. They were slightly worn, as though they had been in circulation for a long time, but were found to be filled with a lead composition.

Carpenter mingled with the fight crowd in front of the pavilion and was approached by young Goldenburg, who was "scalping" prize-fight tickets. He approached Carpenter and offered a $3 ticket for $2.50. Carpenter accepted the offer and tendered a $10 gold piece. As Goldenburg was about to take the coin it fell on a cobblestone. Instead of the true ring, the coin gave forth a sound like tin.

Goldenburg, without letting Carpenter know that he suspected him, offered [illegible] gold piece in change and said he would find his brother and get the remaining $1.50. Carpenter objected, but finally said that Goldenburg might have the change.

Goldenburg then followed the man until he met an officer, and a complaint was made. At the Police Station two more counterfeit $5 gold pieces were found in the prisoner's pockets.

A search of Carpenter's home did not throw any light on the case, and his wife seemed to know nothing about the matter.

Recently Carpenter returned from a trip to St. Louis. The Secret Service officers have been repeatedly notified of the presence of counterfeiters in the Missouri metropolis, and it is thought that they may have made some arrangement whereby spurious coins made in the East are sent West to be disposed of.

HUSBAND SLAYS, SHE REPROVES.

CALLS HIM "HORRID THING" FOR KILLING PARAMOUR.

Protests Her Love for the Man Whose Life Has Been Taken. Double Tragedy on the Naco Road Which Has the Appearance of Murder and Suicide.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

BISBEE (Ariz.) Sept. 27.—"You horrid thing! You knew I loved him," was the way in which Mrs. John Parks reproached her husband for the murder of her paramour, Claude Howell, at Cananea yesterday. Howell had been in Cananea for a couple of weeks, coming from Maitland, O., apparently well supplied with money. He registered at the Union, one of the camp's best hotels, as C. Langston. Last Monday he was joined by the woman, whom he introduced as his wife, who, he explained, had come from Bisbee. Yesterday the husband appeared on the scene, having tracked his wife from Ohio with apparent ease. He even knew the name under which she traveled.

Howell ran for his life when confronted by the husband, at the door of the apartment occupied by the guilty couple, only to be chased down in the street and killed by a bullet through the head from an automatic pistol, purchased by Parks especially for his task of vengeance. The woman appeared on the scene from another direction just after the shooting, and was one of the first to view Howell's body. Looking up, she saw her husband, whom she had thought - fe in Ohio.

She displayed little emotion over the tragedy, and seems to feel little resentment against her husband. Both have been locked up, separately, and are being held by the Mexican authorities for trial. Howell was about 24 years old, Parks is 45, and the woman 35. It is told that the men had been close associates as members of the order of Knights of Pythias.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

Last Sunday, E. F. Bennett and his wife, Ollie, disappeared from Bisbee. They had last been seen at the Half-Way House, on the road to Naco. Yesterday their bodies were found near the Naco road, on the plain near the Warren ranch. The woman had been shot in the right breast, apparently by the man, who then had thrust the muzzle of his pistol into his own mouth and shot himself through the head. Beside his body was found a new revolver of large caliber, with five exploded cartridge shells. Bennett, a saloon employé, was known to have had much trouble with his wife, who was better known by the name of Ollie Green.

SEEKS DEATH AND NOTORIETY.

Still another new pistol, with the sales tag yet upon it, was used last night in the suicide of S. S. Yeager, who chose for the deed one of the most public places on the main thoroughfare of the city. He stopped under the eyes of several persons, placed the pistol to his head and fired. It is believed that he was insane, and that he sought to gain notoriety after death, failing of notice during life. In his pocket was found a letter addressed "To whom it may concern," in which was told his intention to kill himself, it being added that a history of his life had been mailed by him to the Smart Set Magazine in New York for publication. The man had been in Bisbee for several weeks, with poker playing as his only visible means of support.

BISBEE NOTES.

At the Denn mine, below Bisbee, last Tuesday, Manuel Magachino, a surface employé, fell twenty-five feet, to the stones of a creek bed, and was so badly injured that he died within a few hours.

Hoffman, the only survivor of the Grindell expedition, is now in the hospital in Bisbee, whence he has asked that denial be made of the report that he is the Adolph Hoffman so much wanted for the theft of a horse and buggy from a local stable, and who now is believed to have added murder to the lesser crime. Adolph Hoffman was seen a few days ago at a road-house near Fort Huachuca, in company with a German, who exhibited considerable money, and who paid for much liquor that was consumed. A few days later the buggy was found overturned in a mountain cañon, the seat drenched with blood. Sheriff White is working on the case with energy.

Ollie Peacock, lately a Bisbee restaurant man, is in deep trouble at Cananea, where, according to complaint made, he established a counterfeiting plant, which produced close imitations of the "boletas" of the Greene Consolidated Company, store orders that commonly pass as cash from hand to hand. It is told that he had issued these orders to the amount of $60,000 before the fraud was demonstrated and the series affected canceled by the Greene company. The company itself redeemed about $1000 of the false paper before discovery was made.

The Orpheum Theater in Bisbee has been attached for a debt of $1700, due to the bankrupt firm of Duey & Overlock, and the house now is being operated for the benefit of the creditors.

MEXICO WANTS HIM.

LEGAL FIGHT AT PHOENIX.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Sept. 27.—Before Court Commissioner Johnstone, the past week in Phoenix, a bitter legal fight has been in progress, affecting the liberty of Gustave G. Lelevier and his son, Yves G. Lelevier. Extradition is being sought by the Mexican government, on a charge that, in September, 1906, they stole a $10 draft from the postoffice at Naco, and later, a second draft for $10.50, both having been inclosed in registered letters addressed "Montgomery Ward & Co., Chicago."

The son had been an employé in the Mexican postal service. The father laterly has conducted a small newspaper at Douglas, where he has taken up the cause of the revolutionary band, in opposition to the present government of Mexico. He is not a Mexican, but a Frenchman by birth, and now claims to be a citizen of the United States.

He has stated his belief that the only reason he is wanted in Mexico is that he may be punished for alleged revolutionary opinions, on the basis of the articles published by him in Douglas, and that the prosecution is merely the development of the Sarabia case, wherein the defendant was kidnaped across the line, later to be released by the government of Sonora on demand of Gov. Kibbey. Lelevier's editorial criticism on this abduction is said to have been a sizzling one.

The prosecution in Phoenix has been conducted by United States Attorney Alexander, the defense by Dist.-Atty. Bullard of Maricopa county. The latter's main contention was, as only $21.50 was involved, extradition could not be had, for the treaty between Mexico and the United States provides that the amount at issue must be at least $25, which, he claimed, should be counted as American money. The prosecution made the point that, as the robbery was committed in Mexico, the amount involved in Mexican currency mus be considered as $41. Court Commissioner Johnstone has dismissed the defendants, and has ruled that the amount at issue must be considered in United Staes currency. The younger man has been rearrested on a new warrant, that will bring him for examination before a United States Court Commissioner in Tucson, though his counsel secured a new writ of habeas corpus in Paoenix today.

SEEM VERY BAD BOYS.

Charged With Stealing Bathing Suits at Santa Monica and With Robbing a Los Angeles Home.

Charged with burglary, John Neethan and Archie McGinnis, both 15 years of age, were arrested at Santa Monica yesterday, and will be brought to Los Angeles for examination in the Juvenile Court. They are accused of having stolen bathing suits.

When the arrest was reported to the Los Angeles police, it was found that the boys were wanted here on the charge of having stolen jewelry from the home of Perry Whitney on West Sixth street.

The robbery of the Whitney home occurred on September 26. Two watches, diamond studs, opera glasses, money and a revolver were taken, but all the property was recovered.

STEEL WORKER HURT.

George Robinson, a steel worker employed by the Llewellyn Iron Company, was seriously injured yesterday morning. While working on a new building at Sixth and South Main streets, he fell from the seventh to the sixth floor. At the Receiving Hospital it was found that he had sustained a fracture of the left elbow, and possibly dangerous internal injuries. He lives at No. 51 Monterey street.

WATCHMAN'S PLIGHT.

S. H. Cooper, night watchman for the American Olive Oil Company, suffered a mental collapse at his home, No. 422 West Forty-first street, yesterday, and, pending the arrival of the patrol wagon, four men were required to hold him. Cooper had been the day watchman for some time, but recently was given night duty. He found it impossible to sleep in the daytime and collapsed.

FOOT RACE AT GOLDFIELD.

B. R. Day, the Irish runner, who has just reached America from a tour through Australia, has been matched to race W. D. Walker, a Goldfield sprinter. Day and his manager, Rufe Naylor, have been staying at Long Beach for the last few days, and left last night for Goldfield, where Walker's side wager of $500 has already been posted. The race is to be for 100 yards, and probably will take place in two weeks' time.

Soccer Game Today.

The Thistle Soccer football club will play a practice game at Fiesta Park this afternoon, kick-off to take place at 2 o'clock. J. McArthur, who officiated as president of the club last year, has been elected to that office this year. There will be two teams in the club, team A under the captaincy of McDougal, and team B in charge of Baird.

ANNUAL FALL OPENING.

Possibly the largest, richest display of millinery ever seen in this city was exhibited this week at Mme. Havill's Suburban Millinery Store, 2304 South Hoover street.

To the invitations sent out thousands of ladies responded, and for two days the store was thronged with patrons and friends, not only from the city and suburbs, but even the beaches sending numbers of admiring customers.

The store, which fronts on South Union avenue and Hoover street, presented a remarkable spectacle of tasteful decorations, offset with a wealth of beautifully-trimmed hats, velvets, ribbons, lace and ornaments of wondrous variety. Plumoses, palms, ferns and potted plants were used in profusion, and yet so arranged that the ensemble presented an artistic and lovely picture.

Mme. Elise Havill, attired in a pretty gown of white lace, with rose silk, assisted by her trimmer, Miss Briggs, in a gown trimmed in black lace, did the honors at the opening, welcoming all the callers with her usual charming courtesy, taking them in turn to the Japanese garden, arranged in the center of the store, where they were served Japanese tea, wafers and punch. The Japanese garden, a most effective representation of a bit of old Japan, with its bamboo tables, chairs, lanterns and umbrellas, was presided over by sweet-faced Helen Karama, en costume.

To recount the different styles and shapes of hats and bonnets displayed, would be almost an impossibility, but a brief mention will interest feminine readers—such as a dainty hat in white and violet, with a large white wing covering the entire hat, only broken in its effect by a large hand-painted china pin. A lovely purple velvet hat, of the latest drooping, shope, with short front and dipping long at back, with white ostrich feather and adorned with orchids round the crown. This created considerable favorable comment. One with real lace, pearls, and large white ostrich plume, price $55, was also much admired. Another which seemed a special feature, was a Bell shape, in pink, with a bird of Paradise.

In one of the windows, attractively arranged with ferns, palms and a basket of flowers, was a unique display of French picture-hats in pink, blue and lavender, and, was indeed a splendid work of art in window trimming. A window in brown autumn tints, and another window featured with black and yellow effects (displaying a large picture hat in black with an immense crown of yellow roses and a yellow plume,) proved a versatility in millinery window display.

Throughout the store case after case presented something new. Here a new blue shade with silver band and plumes to correspond; there, a pink felt, rolfed slightly to one side, over which fell a large plume and aigrette—and so on, everywhere something to admire. Expressions of delight were heard on every side by fashion's assiduous disciples.

At the Hoover-street entrance is a large case of fancy ornaments, Rhine stones predominating. One case contained the new shades of brown, rich in color and pleasing to the eye. Another case of special notice held an assortment of black effects, one, a splendid black hat with large plume, aigrette and fancy jet and black velvet was said to be $50. A great variety of black hats, street hats in every conceivable style, shape and color were seen and an abundance of plumes ribbons and velvets in every color as well as quite a variety of untrimmed shapes.

Take it all in all Mme. Havill has a splendid and large assortment of medium and high-class hats ever seen in this city.

DEVELOPMENT.

GREAT THINGS ARE PROMISED.

PLANS GALORE FOR IMPROVEMENT OF SAN DIEGO.

Building Permits Show Large Total—Lumber Company Building Planing Mill, and Will Bring More Log Rafts—Canal and Railway Project.

The building permits issued at San Diego for twenty-seven days in September total $162,250, as against $147,-055 for the corresponding days in 1906. The total to date for this year is $1,-573,000, against $2,287,225 for the corresponding time last year.

One of the important announcements of the last week is that of the Benson Lumber Company to bring seven huge log rafts here from the Columbia River next year. This year the company brought three rafts. During the winter and spring the company plans to expend $350,000 in improvements, including the building of a box and a sash and door factory. It has bought three sets of raft chains at a cost of $45,000.

Work will be begun within a few days upon the mill for the Globe Grain and Milling Company to be built on California street between Ash and Beech streets in the southern town. It will cost about $150,000.

The contract has been let by the South San Diego Investment Company for the construction of 6000 feet of canal, from the bay of San Diego inland through property being developed by the company. The canal will be 110 feet wide at the top and eighty feet at the bottom. When it is completed the company will operate a line of boats between the city and South San Diego. Three miles of railroad also are planned, the Supervisors having been asked for the franchise. The improvements contemplated call for an expenditure of $30,000.

A $10,000 apartment house is to be erected on Eighth street between Ash and Beech streets on a lot which has been purchased for $5500. Four $2000 cottages will be built on Twenty-sixth street between L and M streets, in Lincoln Park. Work has been begun on the automobile factory being erected by the Hunt Bros. and C. L. Brimhall at National and Twenty-fourth streets, National City. Archibald Hart has bought from the Homeland Improvement Company sixty lots in Ramona Heights; consideration $7000. Nelson Snyder announces the construction of a $50,000 laundry building on I street between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets. T. E. Murphy will build a $3500 cottage at Gatewood street and University avenue. M. Hall will build three $2000 cottages at Bird Rock City-By-the-Sea. W. H. Evans has sold to Dr. Phillips an eight-room cottage on Second street between Pennsylvania and Robinson streets; consideration, $4500.

Will Jereslaw, guardian of Sallie and Marion Kuhn, has applied to the Superior Court for permission to sell $12,-000 worth of United States bonds, the money to be used for the erection of a structure on Third street between C and D streets. The statement is made that the building will rent for $250 to $300 a month.

The Carroll residence at Fifth and Robinson streets has been sold to Emily S. Steinback for a consideration of $7500. W. O. Bowen has sold to Rufus Bingett a seven-room cottage on Second street between Quince and Redwood streets; consideration, $4500. W. H. Evans has bought from A. Nutt a lot on Fourth street between Walnut and Brookes streets, upon which he will build a $1000 house. The consideration was $2500. Frank P. Reed has bought from W. O. Bowen a lot near the Country Clubhouse, on the Park boulevard; consideration, $6500.

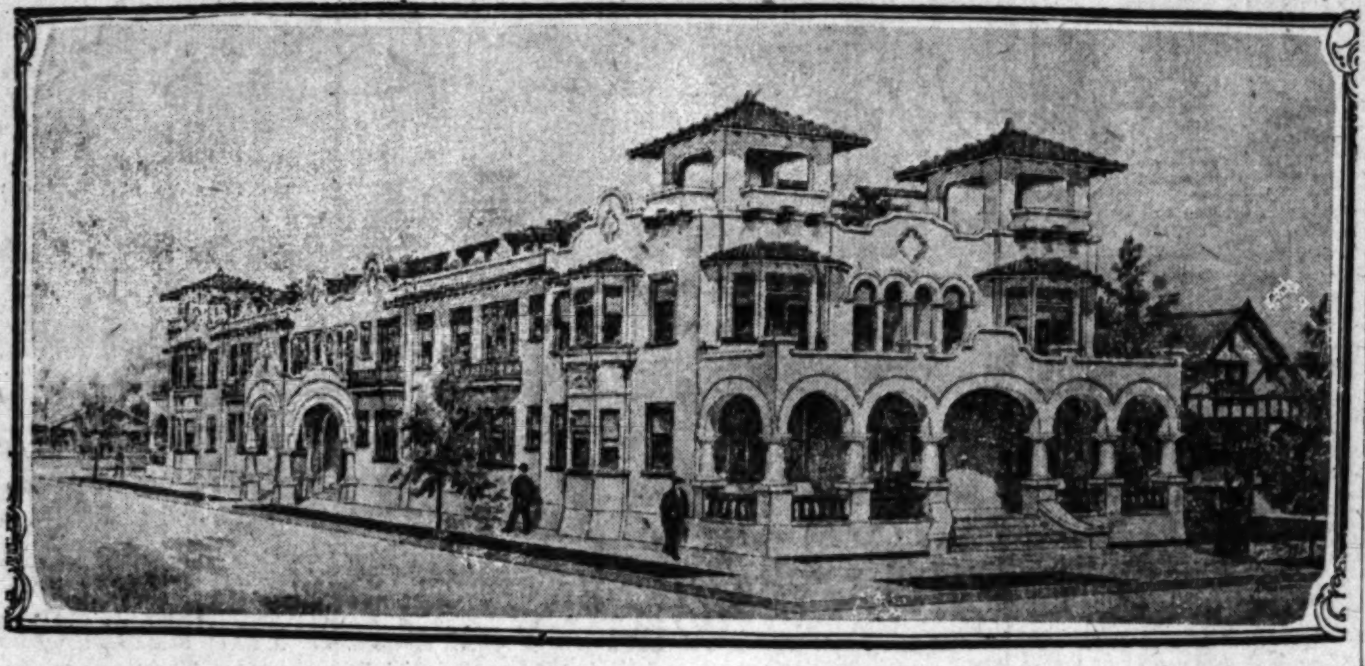
APARTMENTS FAR SOUTH.

Modern Building at Malcomson, Flower and Grand—Extending District.

Plans have been prepared for F. H. Redpath for the construction of a large apartment building, which will occupy a lot facing on Malcomson street and extending through from Flower street to Grand avenue, fully two hundred feet. This is a new venture on the part of Mr. Redpath in building an apartment-house so far south, and seemingly outside the range of such structures, but the builder has abundant faith in the continued prosperity of Los Angeles, and is certain that the building will be a paying proposition. There will be seventy-five rooms in the building, divided into two and three-room suites, each equipped with a private bath, and built-in buffet kitchen. The apartments will be furnished with patent beds, built-in writing desks and book cases. Every modern convenience will be installed. The name of "Eschschaisia Apartments" has been selected by the builder. This is the technical Latin term for the yellow California poppy. When completed the building will represent an investment of between $40,000 and $50,000. The architect is James M. Corrie.

THREE EXCHANGES.

R. E. Ibbetson & Co. report the following exchanges: N. J. Fulks, six-room cottage at No. 1583 Arlington avenue, for C. L. White's nine-and-one-half-acre walnut and orange grove at Rivera, valuation $6500; Mrs. Cora B. Grimston, seven-room house at No. 3923 Pasadena avenue, for 160 acres in San Diego county, valuation $6500; Peter Peterson's seven-room cottage at No. 2322 Maple avenue, for Mrs. Madaline Wither's twenty-acre deciduous fruit ranch at Ontario, valuation $4500.



Apartment house planned for Malcomson street, between Grand av enue and Flower street.

HOME BUILDING.

RAPID GROWTH OF SOUTHWEST.

OCCIDENTAL BOULEVARD SECTION BEING BUILT UP.

Progress of Street Work, and Erection of New Buildings Mark Spread of City—Grading Temple Street—Agents Report Much Activity in Tracts.

The northwest section of the city is showing signs of rapid growth and development. Street work, sewers, and new houses are being completed almost every day, and tell of the rapid settlement of the district. The section is elevated to a certain extent, and is high above any dampness caused by the winter rains. There are many handsome residences already erected, especially in the Occidental boulevard neighborhood, and around Sunset Park.

All the street work, grading, graveling, sidewalking and in some cases laying the sewer, has been finished on Vendome, Dillon, Council and Robinson streets. There are three new houses just being completed on these streets and two more are being staked out and foundations are being dug. Five new houses are either completed or nearing completion on adjoining streets. The street work on Henderson, Coronado, Rampart, Fanning and Council streets, all passing through this tract, has been completed.

Commonwealth, Virgil and Third streets have been built up rapidly also. There are eleven new dwellings, ranging in size from eight to eleven rooms, and costing from $5000 to $7500 on these streets. All these new buildings are sold, bringing from $6000 to $12,000 each, and the purchasers are living in the houses.

On Occidental boulevard several handsome homes have been built, and several more are under way at present. This is one of the handsomest boulevards in Los Angeles. It is 120 feet wide.

Andrews boulevard is another magnificent street. It is 140 feet wide, with a seventy-foot roadway. This is being paved with crushed rock, and will later be oiled in the Santa Monica manner. There is a ten-foot sidewalk, with a twenty-foot parkway between. As each house is set back fifty feet from the property line, there is a space of 240 feet between each row of houses. Several magnificent structures occupy handsome sites on this boulevard. Other building sites have been purchased, and the buyers are now having plans prepared by local architects, and all expect to begin work on new homes within a few months. The lots are all 100 feet front and vary from 215 to 220 feet in depth.

Improvements in the way of paving several streets in the northwest are being planned. The petitions are said to have been approved by the Board of Public Works for paving First street from Vermont avenue to Rampart street. Rampart will be paved from First to Sixth street, and Sixth will be completed on into town to Figueroa street, joining the section already improved with the asphalt. This work will make a new approach to the city from Hollywood and the Tehunga Valley. Heretofore the road was deep with mud during the winter months. Temple street will be improved from Burtz west to Occidental boulevard. A narrow cut, through which the trolley car passes, will be widened and the street will be graded and paved.

JUGGLING WITH CORNER.

Property at Twelfth and Grand Exchanged for Land at Beaumont. Changes Hands Many Times.

The northwest corner of Twelfth street and Grand avenue has been sold again, and this time seems to have passed permanently out of the hands of Alexander Keating, who has exchanged the property for a part of the Highland ranch at Beaumont, concisting of 3000 acres. The valuation placed by Keating on the corner is $68,000. In return for the city property the latter receives a cash payment of about $7000, the ranch, and also takes a mortgage of something like $20,000 on the Grand-avenue corner.

The corner is 98x165 feet in size. It has been owned and sold by Keating no less than four times within a year, each time at an advance. No longer ago than the first of the month, W. B. Merwin & Co., reported the sale of the corner to Keating by a local syndicate, the price being placed at $54,000. It developed later that Keating was only completing an option he had had on the property for several months. About five months ago Keating sold the corner to H. G. Cotton & Co., for $50,000. He had purchased the corner, prior to that deal, for a reported consideration of $45,000.

Martin & Barker are preparing plans for a two-story, eight-room frame residence to be built on the corner of Twenty-first street and Seventh avenue, for T. J. Bolton. It will have hardwood floors, plate and art-glass windows, pine trim, beam ceilings and hot-air furnace. A large billiard hall will be located in the basement.

It will have hardwood floors, pine trim, first-class plumbing, etc. The same architect has also prepared plans for a six-room bungalow, to be constructed at San Bernardino for M. L. Lothrop.

Julius W. Krause has drawn plans and has received estimates for the construction of a two and one-half-story frame residence in English half-timbered style, to be erected on South Grand avenue, near Fortieth street, for Mrs. Henrietta Feldschau. The front porch will be of rock-faced Redondo brick. The first floor will be subdivided into living and dining-rooms, reception and stair halls, music-room, library and kitchen. The finish will be in slashed grain pine, with oak and maple for floors. The living and dining-rooms and halls will have paneled wainscoting. There will be five large bedrooms on the second story, also several bathrooms. The attic will be finished for entertainment purposes. The plans submitted by Marsh & Russel for a new City Hall building at Redondo have been accepted by the officials of that city. The plans call for a structure that will cost about $30,000. It will be of brick construction, and will be especially arranged to meet the needs of the different public offices.

Plans for the proposed flouring mill to be erected on California street, near Ash street, San Diego, for the Globe Grain and Milling Company, have been completed and bids for the construction of the building will be called for immediately. The mill will have a capacity of 250 barrels per day.

TOPICS OF THE STAGE.

The average high-priced show of the syndicate is the best receipt in the world to stir up appreciation of domestic talent.

This is called to mind by Lewis Stone's anniversary performance of Sydney Carton, which will be due tomorrow night. Just a year ago Stone astonished the town with his real and pathetic interpretation of the role, and was then hailed as an actor of the first order. Since that time he has maintained and increased his reputation in more than forty-five parts, diverging as the poles diverge, and affording an excruciating opportunity for an exhibit either of brains or stupidity.

A great actor, now dead, was held up to fame upon one point, by an incautious eulogizer, because he had created eighteen famous roles in twenty years—or figures approximately to that amount. If that were a true cast for celebrity, Stone, having done two-score roles in one year, and less, should overtop the world for greatness.

Now one of two things will happen to Stone; he will either fall into a fatal rut, and commit slow artistic suicide, or he will become altogether too important for a stock company. He is too intelligent to remain stationary. Some big producing manager will drop into the Theater Blackwood some day, and biff—it will be all over with the leading man; he will have ascended to the dramatic heaven before any of his followers are aware of the change.

Now, for instance, Stone is the most delightful possibility as the Mayor, in "The Man of the Hour." Frederick Perry is a good actor, as leading men go, but beside Stone he is a very small figure. I venture to say that Stone in the role—and it is a rather impossible one, as you'll agree if you've seen the play—would very nearly steal the piece from any cast. And from the people who exploited it during the week past there wouldn't be a moment's question of first honors.

The critics of the town, who are supposed to earn salaries by a modicum of fault-finding in the regular dish of literary appreciation, have waited in vain to find flaws in Stone. Likewise, they have waited vainly for some let-down in his convincing energy, or for a flagging of his remarkable earnestness.

Which is not saying that Stone hasn't been mis-cast. There have been assignments in which he was almost of less consequence than the human noise, roaring in the entrances at $5 per week.

Somebody said the other day: "Wonder why Dick Ferris ever let Stone slip out of his fingers, anyway?"

That's an easy one. Stone, with all his finesse and rare insight into genuine "character," isn't half as valuable to Dick and his pictorial melodramas as some bigger but less subtle actor, who can make more sound, do a statue under the calcium and pose like a god of any period from early Greece to decadent Rome.

I think Stone must have been just awful in some things with Dick. He admits—sotto voce—that he once played Scarpia to the beautiful Tosca of Mrs. Ferris. Scarpia! Imagine it! The dramatic angels must have wept, and Stone himself doesn't say whether he was deported on a rail or served with a peaceably-worded twenty-four-hour notice.

Stone is the best actor of the present-day period, who has ever played in stock in Los Angeles. He gives you an impression of absolute reality. He doesn't seem acting; he seems living; but——

"The actor who surrenders himself to his emotions is a 'Ham,'" said Stone calmly, as he wiped the superfluous rouge from his face, preparatory to his entrance at the Thursday matinée; "acting is mechanics, and one might almost say that the best actor is the best-regulated machine. Now, I'm not saying that he must have a marble heart and a reinforced concrete constitution; he may know emotions, but he mustn't dally with them while at work, for he is a builder, an architect, creating something with his automatic nerve cells and muscles, while the thinking part of him stands calmly in the rear, looking on."

And that brings one right up to stage presence of mind. Stone says, and rightly, that the actor should always be holding himself in reserve,—looking for the unexpected. The man or woman who dives into a part until entirely submerged has little chance to come to the surface gracefully in an accident or a slip in lines.

In the dark scene of Jessie Busley's "In The Bishop's Carriage," her comrade enters the room noiselessly. But one night, at the Mason Operahouse here, he caught his toe in a chair and knocked it over with a crash that might have been heard even as far as the street. Some fellow in the front row screwed up his mouth for a laugh, but the first sibilant snigger hadn't formed ere Miss Busley, throwing herself into an attitude of alarm, whispered sharply and melodramatically:

"Hush. When you come into a room pick up your feet."

The man drew himself together, and touched his cap in a silent salute. Nobody laughed. It was taken as a part of the play.

The incident illustrates Stone's theory.

Stone is far more at home in a business suit than in a toga. Broadway is firmer under his feet than the Appian Way. Bill Desmond, on the contrary, must have been incarnated in a previous existence, or several of them, perhaps, as a Roman noble, or a spectacular, jeweled prince of the mysterious East. The less clothing Bill wears the better he appears, while wi... Stone—you couldn't say that the reverse is true, for that would mean that Stone in a buffalo robe will be Apollo—the garb of the hour makes him a glass of fashion.

The right sort of play hasn't been written for Stone yet. He is wasting his talents portraying thoroughly good men. A dash of iniquity alone would make him a hero.

After all, the righteous man of the stage, fully and perpetually righteous, is a very tiresome character.

The only real man is the man who struggles, sometimes with forces without and sometimes with conflicting elements within, to create a career and live according to his ideals. That's where the author of "The Undertow" just missed his chance. Although his wonderful reporter had a weakness for drink, he was morally sound even to the melodramatic standpoint. There was no clash of passion or evil desire with instincts of morality, no dramatic fight for greatness.

When Stone gets that sort of present-day role it will reveal talents his ardent admirers little suspect. In fact, his strange Sydney Carton, a compound of waywardness and greatness, is the nearest approach to such a creation.

Meantime, Stone lives comfortably and calmly, acting at night, and by day exercising his fine horse or "tinkering" with his fancy poultry, of which he has a fine collection in the spacious back yard of his Jefferson-street home.

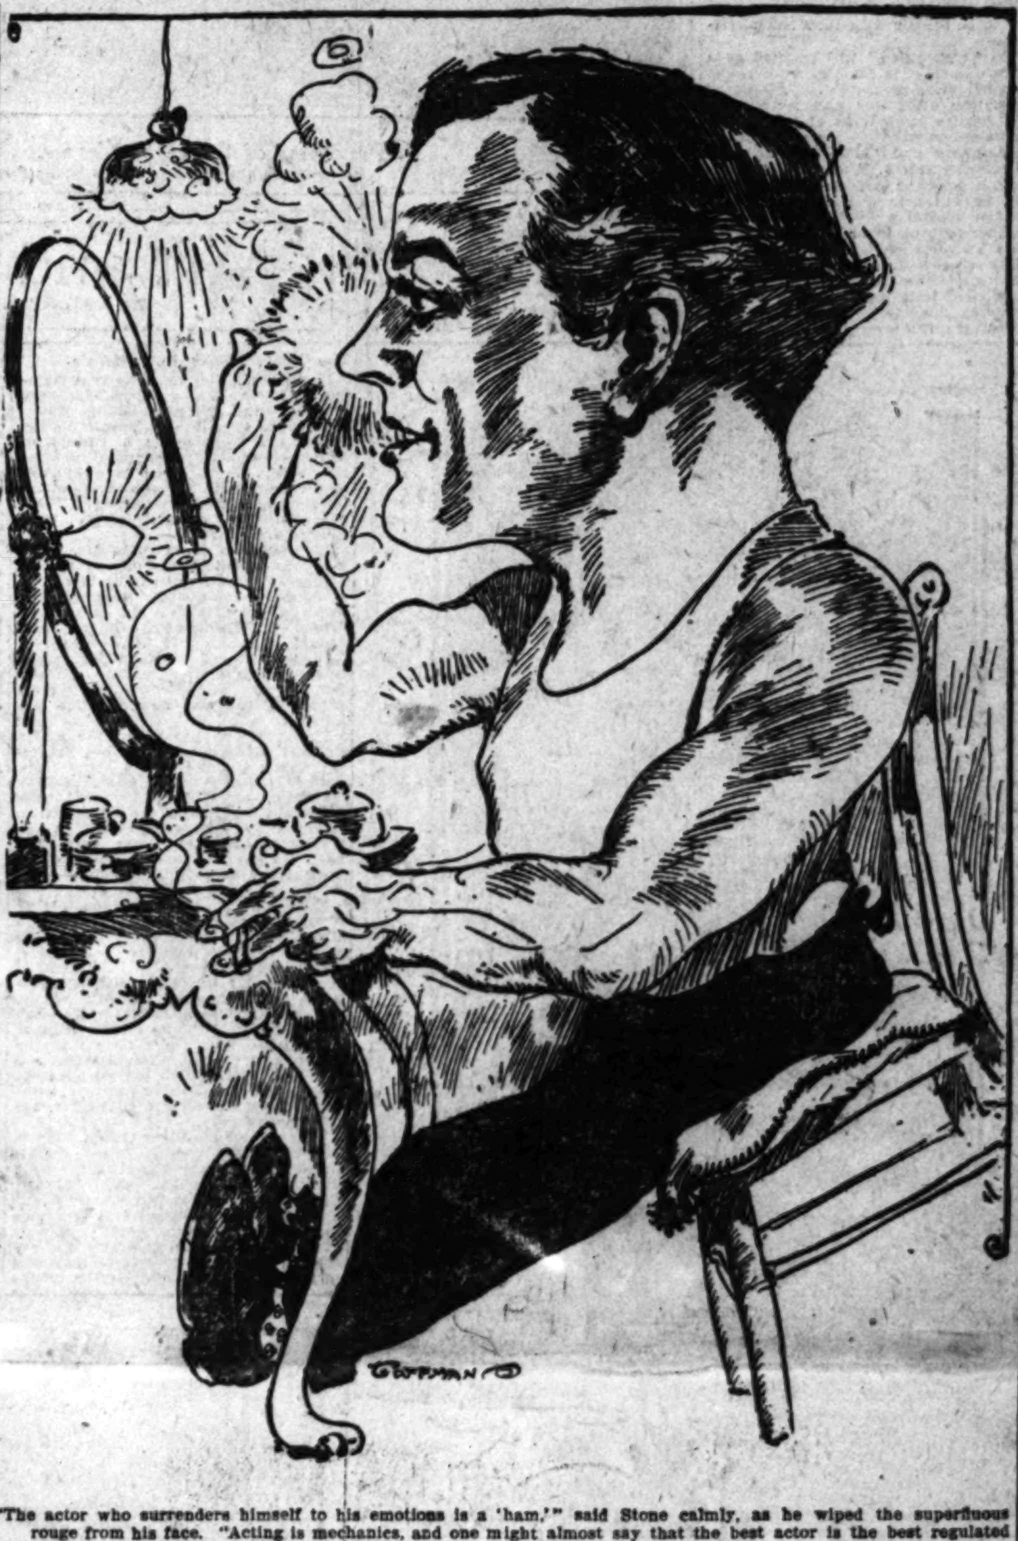
The best part of Stone and his work is yet to come.

During her last year's visit to Los Angeles, Olga Nethersole became very much interested in the juvenile court work. She watched its progress, and read all publications containing stories of local Juvenile Court decisions or undertakings.

In Denver she found time to study it more fully, of the Juvenile Court, and was permitted to make a study of the actual operations of Judge Ben B. Lindsey's juvenile branch, and she became very much interested in it. Judge Lindsey explained its workings in all of its ramifications to the actress. There is no such institution as a Juvenile Court in England, and last July, shortly after the close of her professional engagement in Paris, Miss Nethersole was entertained by Sir William Treloar, Lord Mayor of London, and Lady Treloar, at the Mansion House. The Lord Mayor is a very charitable man, and during this visit Miss Nethersole took occasion to explain the peculiar workings of the Juvenile Court in America, and the great good it is doing among the mendicant children in the principal cities of this country. The Lord Mayor absorbed all the information that Miss Nethersole gave him, and is now engaged in establishing a similar institution in London.

Friday afternoon of last week Miss Nethersole, acording to a promise made to Judge Lindsey last winter, played a special benefit performance at the Broadway Theater in Denver, the proceeds of which, some $1600, were contributed toward the Juvenile Farm, a new auxiliary of Judge Lindsey's work among the children of the poor. During one of the intermissions of this special benefit performance, Miss Nethersole read a letter from Sir William Treloar to Judge Lindsey, conveying his congratulations on the noble work he had accomplished, and pledging his support to the cause, which he hoped to be instrumental in making an international one. Specially for this occasion, Miss Sophie Wright, famous for her free night school for boys in New Orleans, which she established twenty years ago, and also for many beneficent works, came all the way from her home in the southern metropolis to lend her presence to Miss Nethersole's benefit performance. It may be interesting to mention that ten years ago, during Miss Nethersole's first visit to New Orleans, she became interested in a bright little newsboy, whom she met in front of her hotel, known to everybody in the city as "Stale Bread." She found that he was the support of his mother and sister, and that he could neither read or write, but on account of the unusual natural intelligence the little fellow exhibited, Miss Nethersole took him to Miss Sophie Wright's school and agreed to pay for his tuition. She also promised him that if he would write a letter to her unaided, within the next year, that she would have a fine present for him. "Stale Bread" advanced very rapidly in the school, and is now a useful young business man, located in Texas.

For a number of years Miss Nethersole has been an intimate friend and well-wisher of Miss Jane Addams, of Hull House Settlement, Chicago, and during each of her engagements in that city she assists Miss Addams in her splendid work among the poor classes. It was during her visit there last April that Miss Addams got up a special benefit performance especially for Miss Nethersole's entertainment, which was participated in solely by the inmates of Hull House. At a previous visit a year before Miss Nethersole had been shown a little comedetta written by one of the boys in the advanced classes, and it struck her at the time as containing considerable merit. This comedetta was the bill for the matinée alluded to. The actress has pledged Miss Addams that she will see that the young playwright is furnished with an opportunity to develop his talent.



"The actor who surrenders himself to his emotions is a 'ham,'" said Stone calmly, as he wiped the superfluous rouge from his face. "Acting is mechanics, and one might almost say that the best actor is the best regulated machine."

THE LOCAL WEEK.

Olga Nethersole, with her London company, will play a week's engagement at the Mason Operahouse commencing tomorrow evening. The company is identical with the one she presented at the Theater Sarah Bernhardt in Paris, during the summer. Frank Mills, who was seen here with Miss Nethersole last year, remains her leading man.

The opening play, for tomorrow evening, is her new translation of M. Paul Hervieu's "The Awakening," which has never before been played in English. The drama is not yet two years old, and a detailed account of its theme and plot has been recently given in The Times. "The Awakening" will receive its eighth presentation in our language tomorrow night and will be played again on Friday evening, and at the Saturday matinée.

"Sapho" will be seen Tuesday and Saturday evenings and at the Wednesday matinée.

Wednesday evening, Hervieu's "Labyrinth," given here last year, will be seen again.

Thursday evening Miss Nethersole will appear as Carmen.

An 8:20 o'clock curtain for "The Awakening" is announced, while for all other performances the "ringing up" will be at 8:10 o'clock.

"The Only Way," Freeman Wills's dramatic version of Dickens's "A Tale of Two Cities," will be played this week by the Belasco company, with Lewis Stone as Sydney Carton. One of the fine "Belasco mobs" is promised at the session of the Revolutionary tribunal. Scenically, "The Only Way" should furnish Artist Brunton a rare opportunity on canvas.

Following "The Only Way," the Belasco players will be seen in Maurice Hewlitt's romance, "Forest Lovers," familiar to eastern audiences as starring vehicle for Bertha Galland.

William Gillette's farce, "All the Comforts of Home," will be revived at the Burbank today after seven years' quiescence. John Burton, who has been absent upon an extended vacation, will return, and will appear as Theodore Bender, one of the chief characters in the play.

The story is typically Gillettian and possesses an abundance of comedy. The entire company will be seen in the cast.

The Healy Opera Company, at the Los Angeles Theater, will put on "The Strollers" tonight. Aida Hemmi will return to the cast, and the piece will introduce William Blaisdell, well-known comedian.

"The Strollers" is an adaptation from the German by Harry B. Smith and Ludwig Englander, Krenn and Lindau being the original authors.

The music is tuneful, the comedy really humorous, and the situations afford excellent chance for good costuming and pretty stage pictures. The management promises its best production so far.

A big "girl act" heads the Orpheum bill for the week. It is programmed as "The Electric Crickets," who, if photographs are to be taken in evidence, are unusually lively and good-looking specimens. Dances with odd lighting effects are the base of the act.

Inez Macauley, a well-known stage beauty, will offer "The Unexpected," a new playlet by Edmund Day. The Christie duo are billed as Anglo-Russian dancers. Their names are new on the Orpheum roster.

The hold-overs are Charles Guyer and Ada Crispi, the aerial Ruppelts, Mueller and Mueller, and Houdini.

Hal Reid's dramatic version of the Thaw case has at last found a local acceptor, in the Grand stock company, which will present it today.

Here's the only difference in names: Stanford Black instead of Stanford White, Harold Daw instead of Harry Thaw, Emeline Hudspeth instead of Evelyn Nesbit; but the latter's a very clumsy one.

At Fischer's Theater the beauty chorus and the several comedians will be featured this week in "Winning A Bet," a new sketch to be produced under the direction of T. C. Wippern.

Dramagraphs.

Dom Lorenzo Perosi, the famous musical composer of the Vatican, has just finished a new oratorio, entitled "The Soul." It will probably be presented for the first time in Rome next spring.

Ida Greely Smith, a granddaughter of Horace Greeley, is a member of John Drew's company. She recently recovered from a severe illness.

Burton Holmes is working on five new lectures of Berlin, Vienna, Paris, London and Fez. His season begins October 14 in the Middle West.

Henry Miller has postponed indefinitely the production of the play written for him by Henry Arthur Jones, and will continue, with "The Great Divide."

Much interest is likely to be taken in a book about Nellie Melba that is soon to be published in London. It will be by an intimate friend of the singer, and will contain many illustrations, with a chapter on the art of singing by Melba herself.

OLINTO LAMBARDI
ADOLFO PACINI.

Opera Principals Known Here.

Orlinto Lombardi and Adolfo Pacini are the only principals of our coming opera season who are known to Los Angeles audiences. Both sang many times during the engagement which opened the Auditorium, last autumn.

The Musical World.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

The field of modern concert endeavor, embracing as it does a representation of practically all the branches of musical art, may be called distinctively American.

The virtuoso, per se, is of course a product of European cultivation, but the abstraction of the prima donna from her operas, the importation of celebrities over continents and oceans, the planting of the genius in a hundred isolated hamlets where genius never blossomed before, the intricate buiness of routing and booking and touring—these phases belong to the United States, and, just as this country has created the two most massive operatic organizations in the world, so it has perfected the concert tour, and has, in great degree, smoothed the path of the artist.

The direction and routing of musical stars over the western portion of the United States is probably the largest example of this undertaking. And, as told at length in previous issues of The Times, the management of the "big ones," through the whole of the great field west of the Missouri River, has come to rest almost entirely with a single well-known organization in this city, so that Los Angeles is a sort of general clearing-house for the directorial business of Teutonic soprani and contralti, emotional violinists of wild Hungarian, Latin celebrities of varying description and occasional prodigies sprung from plain American soil.

And of course Los Angeles herself is well taken care of for the coming year. The artists who will appear here in the regular "course" are Mme. Gadski, Maud Powell, Herbert Witherspoon, Ignace Paderewski, Mme. Teresa Carreno and Mme. Lillian Blauvelt. The auxiliary list is equally great, for it contains Josef Hoffman, Fritz Kreisler, Mme. Louise Homer and possibly Emma Calvé. Kubelik forms an independent number.

Dates fixed so far are as follows: Mme. Gadski, Tuesday evening, October 22; Maud Powell, Tuesday evening, November 12; Herbert Witherspoon, Tuesday evening, January 14; Mme. Carreno, Friday evening, February 28; Ignace Paderewski, Tuesday evening, March 3; Louise Homer, Friday evening, May 8.

Several of these artists are so well known here by many previous appearances that comment now is superfluous.

Of the newcomers the first to arrive will be Maud Powell, the American violinists. "She is a blood descendant of Spohr," wrote a well-known critic last winter, and when she tucks her fiddle under her chin she makes a solemn reverence before the altar of music, and officiates as a priestess in the temple. Classic repose, romantic tenderness, grace, tonal power and supreme execution are claimed for her work.

Herbert Witherspoon, American basso cantante, will make his first visit to Los Angeles. He is now recognised as a foremost artist of his class, and during the past six years has been the most prominent oratorio bass in the country.

The announcement of Mme. Carreno's coming should prove of interest to music lovers, for this celebrated woman pianiste, while now a mature fixed star on the melodic firmament, has never played here. This will probably be her last Pacific Coast tour.

Mme. Blauvelt, who will return this year, has made previous acquaintance of local audiences, and is known for her clear, pearly lyric soprano.

Of a total of eighty concerts which he will give in America between October 28 and May 1, Paderewski will play only twelve times with orchestras. With the Boston Symphony he will give two performances, and one each in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. He will give two performances with the Theodore Thomas orchestra, and three with the Pittsburgh orchestra. His other concerts will be individual recitals.

Minstrel Programme.

The programme of the Bank Clerks' Minstrels, which will hold forth at the Auditorium on Thursday evening, bids fair to be replete with tune and merriment.

"So Long, Mary," will be used as a feature number in the olio; nine young men will take part, five impersonating girls. The plantation and levee scene will require the efforts of twenty-five choristers in old-time negro costumes. Breakdowns and "Mobile bucks" will be interpolated. J. Wallace will introduce a juggling act and L. H. King will be heard in a monologue. Bruce Gordon Kingsley will contribute still another feature, in several organ solos.

As an after part, the new skit "A Bank Clerk's Life," will be put on. The skit is the "prize package" of the show, and it is hinted that a number of local financial celebrities will be taken off in its progress.

Teresa Carreno
Lillian Blauvelt
Maud Powell
Herbert Witherspoon
Ignace Paderewski

Newcomers Among the Season's Concert Stars.

Carreno, celebrated pianist; Powell, distinguished young violiniste, and Witherspoon, foremost American oratorio bass, are all strangers in the local concert halls. Blauvelt is not a very familiar visitor. Paderewski has not been here for some years.

Faculty Recital.

A faculty recital of the Occidental School of Music will be given at Birkel Hall next Thursday evening.

Participants will be Miss Blanche Donnell, soprano; Miss Elizabeth Lee, pianiste; Erskine H. Mead, organist, and Herr Oscar Werner, violinist, assisted by Mrs. Harriet Dinsmore and Mrs. Oscar Werner, accompanists.

CIGARS IN INDIA.

Key West Makes Are on Sale Notwithstanding the Low Price of Native Labor.

In writing concerning the low prices for cigars and cigarettes in India, Consul-General W. H. Michael of Calcutta has this to say:

A firm in Madras advertises three of its best cigars at 1 1-2 cents, 1 3-5 cents and 2 1-2 cents each, respectively. I suppose these cigars would sell in the United States at 10 to 15 cents each, or two for a quarter. The men who grow the tobacco—that is, the laborers in the field—get 10 to 12 cents a day, and the men who make the cigars get from 12 to 20 cents a day—both classes boarding and lodging themselves. Nice-looking stogies are manufactured in Madras and sold at wholesale for 55 cents a thousand. Cigarettes made in India sell at proportionately low prices. With such prices the outlook for the United States or any other country to capture the cigar and cigarette trade of India is rather discouraging, yet Key West cigars are on sale here.

There is another obstacle in the way of importers of cigars in India. It is a moth or fly that finds its way into a box of cigars or tobacco and lays an egg that soon develops into a destructive worm or grub, which bores through the wrapper into the body of the cigar and ruins it. There is hardly anything that will keep these pests out except to incase each cigar in a bottle or wrap it in heavy tinfoil. For this reason dealers in India do not like to import a better grade of cigars. The loss is too great. One dealer showed me box after box of high-priced imported cigars that were absolutely ruined by the moth described.

Art and Artists.

BY ANTONY E. ANDERSON.

The Greatest Thing in California.

Herbert W. Gleason, who is a member of the American Alpine Club, the Mazama Club, the Appalachian Mountain Club, etc., is well known in the East as a lecturer on a variety of subjects connected with travel and nature study. He has also been engaged to illustrate with his photographs editions de luxe of the writings of Thoreau, Emerson, Lowell, John Burroughs and others.

For the past seven years Mr. Gleason has spent the summer season among the mountains of the West, including the Canadian Rockies, the Selkirks, the Cascades, the great snow peaks of Washington, Oregon and Alaska, securing with his camera picturesque views of the wonderful mountain scenery of these various regions, and also exceptionally beautiful photographs of the wild flowers, birds and animals.

This year he has given the entire summer to California, visiting Yosemite Valley and the region about Tuolumne Meadows with the Sierra Club on their annual excursion, and then going to Mt. Shasta for a brief trip, followed by two weeks spent in the fascinating country about Lake Tahoe. He has just returned to Los Angeles from another two weeks spent in the King's River Cañon.

"The King's River Cañon, lying along the south fork of the King's River," said the artist-photographer to me the other day, "is the grandest thing I have yet seen in California. It is remarkably similar, in its main features, to the famous Yosemite Valley, and a comparison is naturally suggested. The Yosemite stands without a rival the world over for its unique beauty and variety. Nowhere else can be found within such limited space so many and so striking natural wonders. Its waterfalls, in particular, are unsurpassed.

"Yet the King's River Cañon, including the upper portion called Bubb's Creek Cañon, really a part of the same great glacial trough, and Paradise Cañon, which is a tremendous gorge in itself, although only tributary to the main cañon, greatly exceeds the Yosemite in the grandeur and extent of its massive rock formations and in the height and majesty of its mountain setting. The mountains adjacent to he Yosemite are scarcely over 9000 feet high, while many of the peaks which are neighboring to the King's River Cañon are 11,000 and 12,000 feet in altitude, while the high crest of the Sierras, immediately to the south, exceeds 14,000 feet at many points. Consequently, the King's River Cañon, taking in the surroundings as well as the valley itself, is decidedly more impressive than the Yosemite."

Perhaps I looked a wonder that bordered on incredulity. Mr. Gleason, however, only smiled reassuringly to me and kept on talking.

"I speak the simple truth," said he. "My tale is no airy tissue of the imagination, no cloud-wrought fancy of the mind. Go and see for yourself. Nor are the single features of the cañon belittled by a comparison with the more famous valley. Grand Sentinel rears its lofty, pinnacled top 3700 feet sheer above the floor of the valley. The North Dome approaches El Capitan in the grandeur of its perpendicular face, while Bubb's Dome is even more gigantic. Buck Peak, Glacier Monument, East and West Videttes, and various other points overlooking the valley, which are as yet nameless, are quite as sublime as the corresponding cliffs of the Yosemite. To be sure, there is no Vernal or Bridal Veil Fall, yet there are a number of tumutuous cascades of great beauty along the Paradise Branch, Bubb's Creek and Roaring River, while Mist Falls and Roaring River Falls possess a unique charm. The floor of the valley, also, while not conspicuous for its open meadows, like those of the Yosemite, is exceedingly beautiful, with its magnificent sugar pines, yellow pines, California oaks and incense cedars.

"But it is chiefly in its mountain surroundings that the King's River Cañon calls for highest admiration. Goat Mountain, just to the north, reaches an altitude of 12,203 feet, and the view from its summit is one of the grandest in the entire Sierras. Avalanche Peak within only two miles of the southern wall of the cañon, is over 11,000 feet; Mt. Brewer, reached by an easy journey from Bubb's Creek, is over 13,000 feet, while a number of peaks farther south, but still within arm's length, so to speak, of the cañon, approach 14,000 feet.

"A trip up the cañon to the crest of the Sierras at the famous Kearsarge Pass, such as I took last week, is of extreme interest. The trail leads along the boisterous yet beautiful Bubb's Creek, with majestic cliffs close on either hand. At many points the view back down the valley is surpassingly fine. The trail continually ascends until some of the higher meadows are reached, when the superb East and West Videttes loom up in all their grandeur and a glorious view is had of Mt. Brewer with its glistening snow field.

"Still climbing, the trail reaches Bullfrog Lake (or Bryanthus Lake, as many wish to call it,) an exquisitely beautiful Alpine gem with a mountainous setting so vast and rugged as to make its quiet charm all the more impressive by contrast. Farther on the Kearsarge Lakes are reached, and then, after a short climb, Kearsarge Pass—the highest pass in the Sierras, 12,000 feet above the sea. Here one looks down a steep ascent toward the east. Far in the distance appears the desert and the valley of Owens River, with the town of Independence and its surrounding ranches clearly discerned through the haze. The backbone of the Sierras is so sharp at this point that it can almost be straddled, and the view both north and south along the ridge is exceedingly wild and rugged.

"Thus far one can come on horseback, but a much grander and more extensive view is to be had from the summit of Mt. Gould (13,001 feet,) which is reached by an easy though somewhat steep scramble from the pass. Standing here, one can look far to the north and northwest over a sea of lofty peaks. Along the eastern horizon stretch the Inyo Mountains, separated from the Sierras by the great Owens Valley. Far in the southeast is seen Owens Lake, with its desert surroundings. Immediately to the south rises the grand University of California Peak, with the Kearsarge Pinnacles in the foreground, while back of these extends a splendid array of snow-capped giants—the whole forming a mountain panorama superbly beautiful.

"To the west, just beneath one's feet, lies the valley in which Bullfrog Lake is situated, beyond which can be traced the striking headlands which mark the boundaries of the King's River Cañon. A view of this character, so extensive, so magnificent, and so easily reached, ought to make Mt. Gould the Mecca of mountain-loving tourists from all over the world. Yet this is only one of many similar lofty points which are comfortably accessible from King's River Cañon."

"Tell me, Mr. Gleason, are there any other trips of interest which can be made from Kings River Cañon as a base?"

"Any? Many of them, and all of the greatest interest. The climber may go up the valley of Copper Creek, with the ascent of Goat Mountain, or up the basin of Roaring River, or to East Lake, from which Mt. Brewer can be easily climbed, or up the South Fork to Paradise Valley and Mt. King and Mt. Gardner, or to Tehipite Valley on the Middle Fork—and every one of these is a red-letter excursion by itself."

"But how did you get to King's River Cañon?"

"I was obliged to make a horseback trip of it, and the trail was not always easy or delightful. However, the good news has gone forth that the long-contemplated State road is now in actual construction and will be completed in two years. At present, leaving the Southern Pacific at Sanger, there is a stage ride of fifty miles to Millwood, where one must transfer himself and his belongings to a pack train. Two days more are required to reach the cañon by this conveyance, and while the trail leads through a wonderfully interesting region—particularly interesting on account of the splendid groves of noble sequoias through which it passes—most travel-

Style Isn't a Matter of Price

A good designer can put just as much character and style into a $25 suit as into a $50 suit. We employ the best designing talent that we can find, which accounts for the great popularity of Brauer & Krohn tailoring.

Every garment that leaves our tailor shop makes a strong friend of the man who wears it, and is a walking advertisement for our three establishments.

We cater to the man who wants correct clothes made at popular prices. We are satisfied with small profits, because we can afford to be. Our business is so big, that the bulk counts, even though the individual profit is small. Our display of fall woolens includes a very wide range of the new novelties in browns and olive tints, as well as the more conservative greys and the staple blues and blacks.

If you want to find out why Brauer & Krohn clothes are so popular with "Men who know," step in and look over the fine woolens and see samples of our finished garments.

EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

Autumn styles are now the paramount issue, and in the downtown shops clusters of fashionable women may be seen discussing the all-important question of feminine finery. Every suit is severely plain this year and quite the proper thing is to wear a strictly tailored dark plain coat with plaited walking skirt of a fancy material. The hats are extravagantly large and are trimmed with velvet and plumes.

Society Vaudeville.

Ever since the initial announcement, several months ago, local society has been more than ordinarily interested in the coming Society Vaudeville, to be given at the Mason Operahouse Monday night, November 18, under the auspices of the Assistance League.

The Vaudeville Committee, consisting of Mrs. Randolph H. Miner, Mrs. Granville MacGowan and Mrs. Walter S. Newhall, has worked long and arduously upon the programme that will be interpreted by the best known of Los Angeles society people. While the programme is not all definitely decided upon, enough is planned and already in rehearsal to warrant the assertion that the entertainment will be by all odds the best affair of its kind that has ever occupied the attention of the society folk of this city. The contributors to the performance will be directed by Edward Temple, whose splendid stage management was disclosed in the excellent work of the Californians at the Auditorium in the Spring.

With a scale of prices ranging from $3 for the orchestra floor, to $1 for seats in the second balcony, tickets for the Society Vaudeville are sure to prove exceedingly rare, owing to the fact that almost every one in the city will want to attend the performance, while only one night at the Mason is available for the entertainment. In order to secure this single night, the Vaudeville Committee was forced to persuade a traveling theatrical company to give up one night of its engagement.

The sale of seats will commence Tuesday morning, next, at the Behymer ticket office in Bartlett's music store, and the initial rush for seats is expected to exceed all ticket sales in the local history of similar entertainments. One thing is certain: There won't be any unoccupied seats on the night of the performance, and the entertainment itself is pretty certain to prove the greatest triumph imaginable.

The Assistance League, as is rather generally known, was formed immediately after the San Francisco disaster, when it became apparent to a number of the best-known society women of the city that there was an urgent need for a charitable organization entirely removed from the regularly established charitable societies of the city. The work of the league has steadily progressed, and with the enlargement of the scope of the work has come an increased need for financial resources with which to prosecute the laudable efforts. The Society Vaudeville is the result of this requirement.

Each lady and gentleman who will contribute their endeavors to the performance is an individual enthusiast in the work of the league, even to the end of giving their time and talents to the many rehearsals, as well as going to the expense of providing their own costumes—and these in numerous instances will cost hundreds of dollars—so that every dollar received for the entertainment will go into the treasury of the league.

The membership of The Assistance League is as follows:

The marriage, which was the culmination of a romance began in America, was solemnized in the Union Church, Kanazawa, Japan, and was attended by many of the friends of the couple, who were spending their vacation at this popular resort. The ceremony was performed by the bride's father, Rev. T. C. Winn. The bride was attended by Miss Irene Sheppard and Mrs. H. J. Bennett, and the groom by the bride's brother, Merle Winn, and Rev. H. J. Bennett. Following the wedding, Rev. and Mrs. Winn held a reception at their summer home. The New Millinery Fashions
A Story Without a Description. Price and Style the Only Things That Count

$2 Curtains $1.25

Real Battenburg curtains of imported bobbinet with Battenburg inserting and edges; white and Arabian; special Monday.

Within the past several days you have seen in our big show rooms the most remarkable millinery exhibit this side of Chicago; but few stores would attempt to show several hundred imported pattern hats and price them at the beginning of the season at but a fraction of their original cost. Patterns mean to us only just so many ideas from which we can make copies or modifications more suitable to our own American women, and in no city are the women handsomer or more attractively garbed than in Los Angeles and their particular style of beauty subject to our sunny southland that millinery designers raised in other environments cannot appreciate or cater to.

Monday's Millinery Specials

Without attempting to describe in detail any one of the hats that will be offered we will say that there are a full assortment of large and small shapes in black and all the new colors, trimmed in the Hamburger inimitable style; only the best of materials used and the majority of them no two alike, thus insuring exclusiveness in pattern, whether the price you pay is a "half eagle or a double eagle." All of these hats are copies or our own originals, and will be displayed in four large show cases priced as follows:

$7.50 Street Hats	$3.95
$12 Suit Hats	$6.95
$20 Dress Hats	$14.50
$30 Pattern Hats	$23

Royal Regent Corsets $1

Better than $1.50 Values elsewhere.

We absolutely mean that this corset is 50c cheaper than a similar quality can be purchased in any other store; choice of several models suitable for all figures; every pair fitted by an expert; the materials coutil and batiste; trimmed with lace and ribbons made particularly for the new style gowns.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Sunlight Deadly to Germs.

While it has long been known that sunlight is deadly to most disease germs with which science is acquainted, no extended demonstrations until recently have been made. Some English scientists found that from one to two hours of direct exposure to the sunlight would entirely destroy the germ, the germs being inclosed in glass tubes. When, however, they were attached to strips of paper and exposed to the sunlight without any intervening filter, only from two to ten minutes were required for destroying them. In diffused light, such as that from a north-lighted window, the time required ran into several days. Among the bacteria tested were those of tuberculosis, diphtheria, typhoid and Asiatic cholera.

Analysis of the Spleen.

To determine the amount of iron and phosphorus in the spleen an exact analysis of some hogs, spleens was recently made by Prof. Stephen P. Sharples, a leading chemist of Boston, which showed almost exactly three-fourths of a grain of iron and one and one-half grains of phosphorus per ounce.

Smallest of Vertebrates.

Hitherto the United States has had the distinction of possessing both the remains of the largest land vertebrates ever known to have existed, the giant dinosaurs of the West, and the smallest living vertebrates of either land or sea, certain cyprinodent fishes of the Florida and South Carolina coasts.

But the United States Fish Commission has recently received from the Philippine Islands specimens of a new species of fish, belonging to the goby family, which are smaller than any other vertebrate animals yet known. They vary from less than ten up to fifteen millimeters in length.

Their numbers are so enormous that they form an important article of diet for some of the natives, who catch them in closely woven nets. It is purposed to call this new fish mystichtys, from two Greek words meaning smallest fish.—[Louisville Courier-Journal.

Silk Gut from Silk Worms.

Some of the inhabitants of the Island of Procido manufacture a very fine silk gut from silkworms. They call the product fill di seta, or silk threads, their special properties consisting in their strength and flexibility. They are made from the stomachs of silkworms just before they begin to spin the silk, and from their cocoons. The worm is selected when fully matured, that is to say when his nourishment ceases. He is then cut open, great care being taken not to injure the membrane of the stomach. This is then removed, and the stomachs are then put into a pickle, which is the keynote of the whole process, and the secret of which is carefully kept. When the pickling process is over, the workpeople, who are mostly women, take one end of the stomach in their teeth and draw the other end with their hands. This part of the work requires great dexterity, for the threads are drawn out to a considerable length, the whole value of the product depending, in fact, upon its length in its relation to its thickness and the strain it will carry. The gut is used for fishing tackle, brushes and any purpose where fineness and tenacity are jointly requisite.

Charcoal an Antidote.

Japanese physicians declare it is impossible for internal poisoning to occur if powdered charcoal be swallowed as soon as the gastro-intestinal disturbance is felt. French physicians have tested the power of charcoal, and proved that it is the most active of all known antidotes. The charcoal must be taken as oson as tre poison taken begins to show its effects, and the doses must be large. Charcoal is in no way injurious, and as much as a soupspoonful may be taken in divided doses mixed with water.

PROMINENT PERSONS.

Senator Beveridge and Mrs. Beveridge have returned from Europe, arriving at New York on the German-Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm II from Cherbourg.

Ex-Judge Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation, estimates the amount of capital which the country has needed and couldn't get at from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. Not being able to get it, a slowing down of business was desirable. That is what we have had, he says, and the adjustment is being easily and successfully made.

Andrew Carnegie in a conversation at Glasgow recently, said the affairs of New York City are better managed than those of London.

Secretary Root is said to have gained twelve pounds in weight as well as a restoration of nervous strength during his stay at Muldoon's farm in New York State.

J. Pierpont Morgan is said to have his name on the membership lists of fifty clubs. On the other hand, King Edward belongs to only twelve.

Bishop Walden of the Methodist Episcopal Church, addressed a street crowd in Cincinnati one evening recently, and remarked when interviewed that "if the people will not come to church, the church must go to the people."

Congressman Burton of Ohio is the son of a Presbyterian minister, and believes in predestination. Consequently in entering upon his campaign for reëlection, he believes he can unhorse his political opponents, chief of whom is Tom L. Johnson, who has been unusually successful in his Mayoralty campaigns.

J. Marshall Chatterson, acting judge of the Police Court of Louisville, Ky., is a great grandson of the poet Burns. He has been a practicing attorney in Louisville for a number of years.

IN THE BIG INDUSTRIES.

Montana Cement Plant.

Work has begun on a $600,000 cement plant at Three Forks, a town east of Helena, Mont. As a result of cheap basic material the company believes it can market its product for $1 a barrel. The plant will have a capacity of 1000 barrels a day. The company is capitalized at $2,400,000.

Compound Paper in Machinery.

Paper is made into popular and practical gear wheels for machinery. Paper pinions are not subject to temperature variations, they are lighter in weight than iron, are more elastic, quieter, and variously otherwise better, the best available. High grade Manila paper is used for their making. The paper, after being cut into blanks, is subjected to pressure in 1000-ton hydraulic presses, and when it comes out it has the strength of a cast iron gear. When in operation there is no vibration and there is none of the ringing sound of the metal gears. After working a short time and being lubricated with graphite the compressed paper assumes a highly polished surface, which reduces to an appreciable extent the friction between the paper and the metal teeth.

Profits in Mining.

There are 109 mines and metallurgical works in this country that have paid dividends for eight months this year amounting to the large total of $64,967,181, says the Spokesman-Review of Spokane.

These 109 concerns have declared in dividends to date $519,191,803, on an issued capitalization of $555,114,517, showing a return of 93½ per cent. It should be said to the credit of the 104 gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc and quicksilver mines reporting their dividends that they have already declared the enormous sum of $471,374,208, which is equivalent to 124 per cent. on the outstanding capitalization of $383,239,467.

Coal Mines Failing.

Anthracite and bituminous operators say that the coal situation is growing serious throughout Pennsylvania, and it is freely predicted that before midwinter there will be a famine in many cities.

The supply of water has already become a serious problem in the anthracite region. The Reading company is compelled to send between thirty-five and forty tank cars of water to its collieries daily to keep them in operation. The labor supply has been below normal several weeks. Unless there is considerable rain, it may be necessary to suspend operations at some collieries, it is declared.

The labor problem is serious in the bituminous fields of the State. Central Pennsylvania operators are advertising for miners, and agents are scouring the country for miners for the Pittsburgh district. Both anthracite and bituminous operators are selling coal from stocks to supply the demand.

MEN AND THINGS OVER THE SEAS.

Accepted Everything.

During his visit to Germany, the King of Siam became enamored of the Dachsund dogs of the Kaiser. In order to make the King a present of a couple of dogs of this breed, fourteen animals were sent to him for him to make a selection. The King kept them all with thanks.

A German Soldier's Faith.

A private soldier named Muegge, belonging to the Thirty-first Regiment of Infantry, has been sentenced at Berlin to seven months' imprisonment by a court-martial for refusing to obey the commands of his superiors. Muegge belongs to the sect of Adventists, who sternly forbid the performance of any sort of work between sunset on Friday and Sunset on Saturday. Their Sabbatarianism, in fact, is stricter than that of the strictest order of Jews. It is by no means the first time that Muegge has received a similar punishment. He entered the army last autumn, and since then he has been practically all the time in jail, for no sooner has one term of imprisonment expired than his refusal to obey fresh commands on Saturday brings with it fresh punishment.

Appendicitis Research.

Prof. Elie Metchinitzkoff of the Pasteur Institute at Paris is seeking to prove his theory that appendicitis is due to the presence of a microbe, by experiments upon chimpanzees. At present he has one called Antoine, which has been inoculated with serum obtained from human appendixes. Antoine is being carefully watched to see whether he will develop the disease. Up to now he has remained disappointingly well.

Do We Live Too Long.

The annual report of the British Lunacy Commissioners shows that, while the population of England and Wales increased 55 1-2 per cent. between 1869 and 1906, the number of insane increased 133 per cent. A significant fact brought to light by the report is the spread of senile dementia, which alone accounted for over 38 per cent. of last year's fresh lunacy cases. Discussing this phase of the situation, one medical authority expressed the belief that we live too long for the kind of work most of us do.

"The advanced medical knowledge of today," said he, "keeps a multitude of persons alive whose minds are practically worn out. The present age demands more brain work and nerve strain than was demanded a few years ago. There is less and less demand for people who can only use their hands. The physical wear and tear has decreased, while the brain work and the strain on the nervous system have increased.

"The result is that the mind dies first and the body is kept alive by medical science, which thus adds to the growing list of senile dementia cases in our asylums."

Mr. Bointon left England and came to this country, where he has been expecting all the time to bring his sweetheart and make her his bride. She arrived about a week ago.

BITS OF VERSE.

Watch in the Night.

Every night—I know not when—
I waken soft from sleep,
And look out on the summer night
That seems a watch to keep,
And for a while I lie awake—
And feel a part of flower or tree,
Or floating cloud, or anything;
The cricket chirping, or the little bird
That, rousing, takes its head out from its wing
And chirps a drowsy little song, then sleeps again.
And so it comes about I understand
A great deal that the trees say, and the stars;
And oftentimes it seems to me
That I rest better in that hour I am awake
Than all the seven I am sound asleep.
—[Isabella Howe Fiske, in the Craftsman.

Earth's Immortalities.

No more, proud singers, boast no more!
Your high immortal throne
Will scarce outlast a king's!
Time is a sea that knows no shore
Wherein Death idly flings
Your fame like some small pebble-stone
That sinks to rise no more.
Then boast no more, proud singers,
Your high immortal throne!

This earth, this little grain of dust
Drifting amongst the stars
With her invisible wars,
Her love, her hate, her lust;
This microscopic ball
Whereof you scan a part so small
Outlasts but little even your own poor dust.
Then boast no more, proud singers,
Your high immortal throne!

That golden spark of light must die
Which now you call your sun;
Soon will its race be run
Around its trivial sky!
What hand shall then unroll
Dead Maro's little golden scroll
When earth and sun in one wide charnel lie?
Boast no more, proud singers;
Your high immortal throne
Will scarce outlast a king's!
—[Alfred Noyes, in the Bookman (London.)

The Pioneer.

No graven image was there to his eyes,
Nor set he up fantastic thing of stone;
He looked unto the hills beneath the skies,
And learned thereby to serve one God alone.
No Levite there to chant unto his ear,
Nor any priest to tell him what to do;
Yet lo, he some way learned the God to fear;
And lo, he some way learned His law to do.
Ah, ye who lean on men to teach you how,
Oh, ye who never knew the life apart,
Would you bear an equal burden for the prize that he bears now—
To beat the perfect rhythm with a human beating heart?
—[Technical World Magazine.

Courage.

If the sun has hid its light,
If the day has turned to night,
If the heavens are not benign,
If the stars refuse to shine—
Heart of man, lose not thy hope;
Door, there's none that shall not ope;
Path, there's none that shall not clear;
Heart of man, why shouldest thou fear!

If for years should be thy quest,
If for years thou hast no rest,
If thou circlest earth and sea,
If thou worn and weary be—
Heart of man, lose not thy hope;
Door, there's none that shall not ope;
Path, there's none that shall not clear;
Heart of man, why shouldest thou fear!
—[Frederic E. Dewhurst.

Everlasting.

We love the rhymes of olden times;
Our ears they please today;
We love the runes of bygone tunes;
Their measures charm alway.
We hear again each tender strain
Of childhood's merry glee,
And thrill oft at the rhythm soft
From old-time melody.

Poor Jack and Jill are with us still;
They're lifelong friends and true;
And Bonnie Doon our fond lips croon
With pleasure ever new.
We hear at gloam where'er we roam
Our cradle lullaby,
And sigh, ah me, at memory
Of songs like "You and I."

No rag-time reel will ever steal
Into our inmost soul;
No two-step stunt will stand the brunt
Of weary years that roll.
But age may frown with sable gown
And measure of decay—
With feeble breath we'll sing in death
The rhymes of childhood's day.
—[L. S. Waterhouse, in New York Press.

The Clock.

If you turn to work or turn to play,
The clock keeps spinning along;
Your step may weaken from day to day,
But its pace keeps brisk and strong.
Grinding, tirelessly grinding still,
It goes right on, like a mighty master's skill,
Forever spinning along.

The years are ground into weeks and days,
As the clock goes spinning along,
And the days into hours, as we lightly gaze
And murmur a careless song.
And the hours that we fondly seek to stay
Are turned into moments so slight that they
Are tossed, at a breath, with our hopes away,
As the clock goes spinning along.
—[Washington Star.

PENSIONS FOR MOTHERHOOD.

Novel Proposition by a Chicago Professor to Promote Economic Conditions.

A Chicago University professor, thoroughly loyal to the institution he serves, proposes a unique remedy for present-day social ills, which, if put in operation, would materially swell the student roll in future years. He proposes State pensions for motherhood.

Prof. Charles Zueblin, who broached the pension idea last winter, enlarged on the subject in a recent address in Chicago. Basing his reasoning on the hypothesis that the State and the common lot are most deeply concerned in the institution of marriage and family life, the speaker asserted that the State should so regulate it that divorce will become a thing of the past, the selfish consideration of romantic marriages for the support of women discarded, and race suicide eliminated.

"The proper education of the youth of the land is the only way to bring individuals to a true understanding of the sacredness and importance of marriage," said the speaker. "There is too much stress laid on love, wedded bliss and the honeymoon in modern American society. The sexes are too prevalently isolated from common intercourse and relationship for a proper mutual understanding. It follows that when two persons are married after a short acquaintance and enjoy an extended honeymoon, that they will soon become sickened by the surfeit of their pleasure and finally discover the weaknesses of each other, and the divorce court will be sought.

"The marriage for convenience is probably the greatest wrong inflicted by society. By reason of social conditions women are compelled to marry for support, without considering the inalienable rights of probable posterity. There is no ethical right on the side of the individuals in entering into marriage for selfish interests. If the youth were not so segregated along sex lines the mistaken pursuit of selfishness would not exist.

"A State regulation by which women would be made independent and properly equipped with education for industrial life and pensioned for motherhood, would eliminate these evils. The intercourse of the sexes should be that of unrestrained comradeship, so that proper understanding could be reached. The youth should be instructed in the important mysteries of life as soon as they come to a desire for such knowledge, and divorce should be stricken from the statutes.

"Coeducation is by all means to be desired. There is no such thing as equal education under separate instruction. The woman should be permitted to choose the studies she desires, but should be given the same environment as the man.

"If it be practicable, I would beg to advance that the State should set aside a pension for women on the attainment of motherhood, so that economic conditions will not be a factor in the prejudice against the important end embraced in marriage."

EVOLUTION OF A PREACHER.

DWIGHT HILLIS'S HIT.

Clergyman Who Has Succeeded in Determination to Be Unlike Other Preachers—Fills Pulpit Made Illustrious by Henry Ward Beecher.

BY JAMES B. MORROW.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—A venerable and subtle Virginia critic once observed with impressive emphasis that she "liked readin,, but it has to be readin'."

Because of a fuller knowledge, she was obscure as to preachin.' "It's [illegible] on the eyes than readin'," she said, assuming the gravity and warmth of a verse from Solomon, "and it makes your neck tired, but it must be loud and plain."

In the beginning, long before his first sermon, as Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis confesses, he had determined to be unlike other preachers. In that was the germ of all his subsequent triumphs. Plenty of men said, and women, I suppose, that he arranged his own murder and even the broken bones, baked meats, and other details of the funeral, when he agreed to take David Swing's old church in Chicago.

A dwarf on the stilts of vanity and novelty was to follow the prodigious tracks of a giant and have his neck broken! However, there was no dissent in the West when Hillis succeeded Lyman Abbott to the pulpit made illustrious, perilous, and difficult by Henry Ward Beecher, but the East gave voice to its doubt, when it asked: "How long, do you think, will he last?" [illegible] years, nearly, have passed, and the question is both unanswered and [illegible]. And Plymouth Church, [illegible] on each Sunday, is crowded to the doors.

A SOLID MAN IS HILLIS.

When I interviewed Dr. Hillis he had the movement and the manner of a merchant or a lawyer, and was dressed like one. He is a solid man of common height, with brown eyes, heavy, dark hair parted almost in the center, and a thick mustache chopped down to trimness. His voice in tone is good, [illegible] rather than tenor, and he fits it to his language, subjects and moods, not with the professionalism of elocutionists or actors, but with the art of an orator whose auditorium is without galleries. Publicly and privately he talks on, steadily onward, with no perplexity as to words. I saw him in his study, a long, low room under the roof. Except for saws, planes, shavings and boards, it looked like a carpenter's shop, otherwise a place in which to do hard and useful labor. We talked about clergymen—dead ones—and he said:

"Beecher was a great inspirational preacher. His sermons were like the warmth that is in a sunbeam, the perfume that is in a flower, the color that is in a cloud, and the blush and flavor that are in a peach. Spurgeon was a great narrative preacher. He led men to the brink of sheol and showed them the pains and penalties of iniquity. Phillips Brooks was the Greatheart among our preachers, loving the world with all his ardor and proclaiming life to be a feast at which God keeps the best wine until the last.

"Good, old David Swing," and [illegible] put new passion into his discourse, "was an unfulfilled prophecy. He was a crimson rosebud in full bloom set in a sheared lawn of green, fresh and dripping with the dew of morning. The one mighty preacher of Chicago, he came to Chicago like an ancient Greek, built his little altar and lighted his little fire near the board of trade, said his prayers, and disappeared. Unnoticed almost, but he wrought in marvels. He called and beauty arose out of the dregs and [illegible] of slaughterhouses and the materialism of business. Chicago doesn't know it, but the influence of his presence and teaching, the power of his memory, built it an art [illegible] and a museum, and even [illegible] the World's Fair. Write to Lyman J. Gage for the name of the man in Chicago who gave expression and impulse, to a great movement, in fact, away from the blood of the beasts and the smudge and roar of factories. I am sure he will say it was David Swing."

DECLARES BEECHER INNOCENT.

"Guilty," I asked, "was Beecher guilty?" The inquiry was brutal, and I felt some shock in asking it.

"No," came the answer in a shout. "I have documentary evidence of his innocence—evidence that has never been published. The soul of Henry Ward Beecher went to its Maker white as a cloud. An old man, four years beyond three-score and ten, the grave at his feet, he said to some of his closest friends: 'My enemies will be surprised to meet me in heaven, but I shall be there. I have suffered as no man can ever know, but I am rejoiced to believe that the sorrow I have borne will be the brightest jewel in my crown of glory and that God and Jesus Christ, who know me, will declare me guiltless before all the company of angels and saints.' For myself, I want nothing better than his own word.

"I say now that Henry Ward Beecher still walks the streets of Brooklyn in more strength of righteousness, in greater moral and spiritual majesty, than any man in this city. He left the most remarkable church in the world. It lives today, and it would require six preachers as poor as I am to kill it. If it were locked up and boarded up for ten years and given over to rats and insects and then reopened, the first sunbeam to fall across the threshold or to come through a window would be rose colored.

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis.

"Plymouth Church is on the border of the tenement house district, among stores and other places of business, but 1750 families make it their religious home, and our pew rents and weekly collections amount to $30,000 a year. Some of our people live three miles away, but they come on Sunday and also to prayer meeting. We have a men's church. On Sunday evening it is a young men's church. In one pew you will find John Arbuckle, who has made millions in coffee and sugar. Near by will be a $1200 book-keeper. And each member is a pope, an assembly, a conference, and a synod in himself. Mr. Beecher taught liberty, charity, and toleration, and those are the living principles of the church today."

HE DROPPED THEOLOGY.

"How do you prepare your sermons?"

"I choose a subject or a text, think it out, and some time on Saturday or early Sunday morning write down a few brief notes on a sheet of paper. Then I am ready to preach."

"I had supposed you memorized your sermons?"

"Let me give you my theory about memory in the pulpit and in other spheres where oratory is necessary. When I began to prepare for the ministry I concluded to omit the study of theology. Of course, the seminary authorities compelled me to accept their own curriculum. When I was graduated, however, I immediately sold my books to a second-hand dealer. My purpose, understand, was to depart from traditions and to be, if possible, unlike the conventional preacher.

"While I dropped the study of theology on leaving college I did not neglect to read religious books. I have 200 of them in this room, together with 600 volumes of biography and 800 volumes on the life of man, his labors, his tariffs, and his economic problems. Also, I have the poets. The biography of a seed is worth a book in itself, and so is the biography of a star. The human soul is vastly more important than anything in the world, and you get its history in the novel. I keep it downstairs, read it and recommend it to others.

"To me humanity is the finest of all studies and subjects. It was so back in my seminary days. I had theories then about preaching, but they were undeveloped and inapplicable. Suddenly, it occurred to me that there were two kinds of memory—verbal memory, which called for volume, page, and paragraph, scrapbooks, gazetteers, and encyclopedias, all leading finally to mental dreariness and nervous prostration, and natural memory, which put all the labor directly on nature. My work, you see, was to be with man, my favorite study, and it was my business to discover the best way to reach and convince him. Instantly, I dropped details and took up principles, which I tried to think out in word pictures. There was instantaneous relief from drudgery and barrenness. My trees began to bloom and bear fruit. I only had to shake a limb and fill my baskets. Even then, recollect, I was but a student in the seminary.

BELIEVES IN SIMILITUDES.

"Leading up to my liberation from the fetters of ancient conditions and customs, I was struck by the thought that Christ taught in parables and pictures drawn from fields and orchards. I went to Homer, Dante, and Shakespeare, and spent months in getting their similes and illustrations. I found that the four superlative geniuses among the sons of man depended upon imagery, that the sermons and poems which saved and fructified the earth were written in simple but mighty similitudes.

"Then I thought of inspiration and searched for it in the Old Testament, in the New Testament, and in Jesus Christ. I looked to nature and saw the potato plant springing up in the dark cellar of winter and pressing toward the light. I looked to history and saw Henry Clay and Abraham Lincoln, children of poverty, the rulers of men. I looked to art and heard a scullion boy exclaim: 'I shall paint.' I looked to nations and beheld the horde of Goths in search of gold, and also Columbus, Cabot, the hunger movement in the Renaissance, and the conscience movement in the Reformation. And all the while verbal memory kept repeating to me: 'This is the skull, these are the ribs, here is the kneecap, and there is the heel. For the other bones, large and small, consult the chart. I've forgotten them.' I don't know that I have made myself clear. I trust, however, that you understand why I do not write and then memorize my sermons."

"When did you conclude to be a clergyman?"

"I don't know the day and hour. The call was not so epoch-making as all that. I was reared in a home where religion and education were honored and supported. My father, a disciple of Henry Ward Beecher and active in the affairs of the Congregational Church, was a member of the group of ten Yale men who, going to Iowa, established two colleges and two academies when the population was scarcely large enough to fill the various boards of trustees. My sister made the issue, and was the first woman admitted to Cornell College, at Mount Vernon, Iowa, as she was the first Iowa woman to go to India as a missionary.

"Well, I was brought up to work and to be religious. While a boy I started three Sunday-schools near the village of Magnolia, where I lived, that I might address them alternately. I liked to talk, even that far back. When I was nineteen there was a religious movement in our region which strongly impressed me. I would become, I then thought, a working and talking layman. With that conviction in my mind, I started West for the purpose of organizing Sunday-schools. Going as far as the railroads would carry me, I continued my journey on horseback. There were no buildings except sod huts and now and then a sod schoolhouse.

"I had no assured support or financial plans. Ruskin's 'Modern Painters' was in my scant baggage. I would leave a sod house early in the morning, after having slept on the floor, ride for several hours, then tether my horse and read in the shade of a bush. Whenever I had a chance I would talk Sunday-schools and Ruskin. After Ruskin I read Thomas Carlyle and talked him. So I traveled in Nebraska from Red Cloud to Culbertson, 150 miles away. At a Sunday-school convention, five months after I left home, I met a man who said a friend of his in the East would pay my traveling expenses. After that checks came to me regularly. I was gone fifteen months, during which time I organized sixty-five Sunday-schools, fifteen churches, and saved $100. I suppose I established the first Sunday-school in Wyoming. I met the representatives of all the nations and religions on earth, and was much benefited by the trip.

THROUGH THE BAD LANDS.

"For many days I rode through the Bad Lands in a buckboard with a greaser mail carrier for a driver. At night I was strapped to the seat, so as not to fall off. Coming to a relay station made of poles and dirt, we read this inscription, burned into the soft wood over the door by the boy who changed our horses: 'The next cabin to the east is 50 miles, to the west 110 miles, to the south 40 miles, to the north 75 miles. Hell is four inches underground.'

"A captain in the regular army had written without my knowledge to a man in a little mining town, which long since has disappeared, that I had talked to the soldiers and might talk to the miners. A committee of two, dressed largely in knives and revolvers, invited me to address the camp. The settlement was a year old, they said, and the boys wanted a meeting. The greaser promised to wait an hour, and I agreed to make a speech. Word was passed along, and men and women soon came pouring into the saloon and gambling place where I was to hold forth for their instruction, uplift or entertainment, according to individual circumstances. The men climbed on barrels, and the women and children sat on tables. I talked everything, religion, home, mother, and temperance, but could not strike the right note. My audience was respectful, but sodden. While I was thinking what else I could do the saloon-keeper's baby began to cry. A miner from the top of a barrel called out, 'Damn the brat. Somebody choke it.'

"'Let the baby alone,' I said, 'it's crying is music in my ears. I have a sister far away, but poor as I am, I would give $5 to hear the voice of her baby, no matter if it whooped like an Indian.'

"The wail of that infant turned lethargy and silence into enthusiasm, and I was cheered right through to the end. When the meeting broke up the same miner on the barrel asked the boys 'to give the young fellow something, and shake hands with him.' The saloon-keeper was the first man to contribute. Altogether $125 was thrown on the table at my side.

"'Boys,' I said, 'I don't want your money, but if some of you will promise to act as trustees I'll buy you a circulating library.' Several men and women volunteered for the service, and later I sent them a library and a hundred gospel song books.

HAD NO INTENTION OF BEING A CLERGYMAN.

"Strange to say, I had no intention at that time of being a clergyman. My father had lost his property, I had quit going to school and was so busy and pleased with the work I was doing that I didn't think about myself at all. I continued to read the best literature I could find, and, fortunately, got a volume of David Swing's sermons. The sublimity of his thoughts and the beauty of his descriptions entranced me. Believing I could understand him better if I knew Greek, I gave up my missionary tour, returned to Iowa, and entered college."

"And you were poor?"

"Almost as poor as Job's fabled turkey. I taught school two summers, and at another time wrote 440 pages for a man in Chicago who was publishing a biographical dictionary. He paid me $1 a page. In my freshman year I was made college librarian and gave two hours a day to the work. In order to be of service to the students, I undertook the task of looking into every book in the library. I began with Addison and slowly went down the alphabet of writers to Zenadotus, the first librarian of Alexandria, although I am not sure he was an author. When I was half through my junior year I had familiarized myself in a general way with each of the 10,000 volumes on our shelves."

"Where did you preach before coming to Brooklyn?"

"First at Peoria, Ill., then at Evanston, and after that in Dr. Swing's old church in Chicago. I have spoken of 'Modern Painters,' which I read in the West. I studied Ruskin more fully later, and wrote a lecture, which I have delivered over 500 times. I wouldn't dare to tell you how the lecture has helped me financially, how necessary the money earned in that manner has been in buying furniture and books and in educating my children. I took up Beecher in the same systematic way and read everything I could find in the West. Then I came East for first editions of his books, for his manuscripts, and for the recollections and testimonies of his friends. When Barrows wrote his life, I supplied a very great part of the material, because I happened to know more about Beecher than did any one else. Dr. Abbott succeeded Mr. Beecher, and when he resigned his pastorate in 1898 I was the only man suggested for the place.

"Ruskin, Swing and Beecher, as you see, have directed and energized my life more than have any other men. But for Swing I might not have read Greek. Without Greek I might still be a talking layman. I much prefer to preach."

GOSSIP OF THE FOREIGN STAGE.

BY HAYDEN CHURCH.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—Possibly the present theatrical season in London, like its immediate predecessor, will go down to history as essentially an "American" one. At any rate, the new year in the playgoing world here has opened with the Transatlantic influence strongly marked. The first new play to be given was a Transatlantic winner—Jones's "Hypocrites," and in another fortnight we shall have "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" at the Haymarket. Moreover of the two important productions of the present week, one has an American star in the person of Maxine Elliott, while the other boasts a heroine from the land of the dollar.

The last mentioned piece is Seymour Hick's new offering, "The Gay Gordons," and most people who are familiar with its author's methods confidently expected that in addition to its Transatlantic central figure, the piece would be supplied with several of the latest American songs, renamed, slightly rewritten, interpolated and without the slightest asknowledgment to their authors. But this time Hicks appears to have resisted temptation, for, so far as my knowledge goes, there is not a single stolen American ditty in "The Gay Gordons." With this actor, however, one never is certain, for I remember being assured by an American friend that his "Mr. Chamberlain" song in "The Beauty of Bath," which every one here supposed had been written by Hicks, actually came from America, like "Cheyenne" which was utilized in the same piece, and originally eulogized some popular idol at home.

Perhaps he erred in being virtuous this time, for what "The Gay Gordons" badly needs, at present, is a few of exactly the kind of songs that the American authors upon whom Hicks generally battens have the trick of writing. Evidently Guy Jones, who has set the new piece to music, is not another Ivan Caryll or a Lionel Monckton, and lilting melodies are "to seek" in his score. But apart from this defeat—which can easily be remedied when the piece crosses the Atlantic—"The Gay Gordons" really is capital and will crowd Frohman's Aldwych Theater for a long time to come.

True, it is the old bag of tricks which has been reopened at the Aldwych. But this time Hicks has made the time-worn materials serve him uncommonly well and deserves full credit for deft work as author, producer and actor. Let us be grateful to him, likewise, for an American heroine who is just a lovable girl (without even much of an accent) instead of the monstrosity which commonly results when a British writer attempts to draw a Yankee damsel or an English actress essays to represent one. Hicks's wife (Ellaline Terriss) plays the part of Peggy Quainton of New York, and makes this American heiress quite charming, while William Lugg, who takes the part of her millionaire father, is likewise unobjectionable, limiting his "Americanism" to a broad-brimmed hat and an occasional "bully" or 'gee."

But talk about impersonation! This favorite device of the musical comedy writer is pushed to its uttermost limits in "The Gay Gordons," the hero, heroine, and practically all the other important characters having masqueraded as some one else before the end is reached. Peggy Quainton, the American girl, begins it by swapping clothes with a gipsy and making the latter impersonate her at a big party which her father, Andrew Quainton, who has leased "Meltrose Castle" is giving that evening. This action of Peggy's is taken with a view of discovering the motives of several young aristocrats who are to be at the ball, but who have not yet been presented to her; for the Yankee heiress dreads fortune hunters. In fact, she "bars" all titles so far as matrimony is concerned, and declares that she will return to New York "either as Miss or plain Mrs."

You will not need to be told that her act has unexpected results. Nor will you be surprised to learn that there is an unknown heir to the Meltrose estate lurking about in the person of Angus Graeme, a private in "The Gay Gordons," and that he falls in love with Peggy, whom he supposes to be a gipsy. But all this is very charmingly managed and the first act ends with Graeme discovering that he is the real Earl of Meltrose and heir to goodness knows how many thousands of pounds per annum. Now, however, there is the American girl's insuperable prejudice against a title to be dealt with (it really is a terrible thing, this prejudice) and most of the second act is taken up with the young Earl's attempts to conceal his rank from his fiancée until he can marry her.

To this end he changes uniform with one of the officers of his regiment, and Peggy who has discovered the trick, to punish him, dresses up as her own brother and reads him a lecture, and there is all kinds of pother. Finally, however, Peggy discovers that Angus didn't know he was an Earl when he first made love to her, and this makes all the difference, and so there is a "Scotch marriage" in the gloaming, and —curtain. When the curtain is raised again the stage is quite deserted save for a little cupid, seated, victorious, on the castle steps.

You will enjoy "The Gay Gordons," I think. At the Aldwych, Hicks, who revels in this sort of thing, piles on the sentiment to an extent that few American audiences would stand for, but London likes that, too. However, he has written uncommonly good parts for Ellaline Terriss and himself, in which American players will be able to shine. And though the scene is Scotland, there isn't a "hoot" or a 'laddie" from start to finish!

Oddly enough there is quite a curious simliarity between "The Gay Gordons" and H. V. Esmond's "Under the Greenwood Tree," produced this week at the Lyric Theater with Maxine Elliott in the principal part. No one, not even the actors, knew quite what to make of the piece, but everybody manifestly enjoyed it, and enjoyed the stately beauty of the American actress. The play seems to have been written around her and nicely calculated to show off her beauty, and she takes full advantage of it. She is pictured as a millionaire orphan, pestered to distraction with demands for charity, and proposals of matrimony. She flees from it all and buys a gipsy's van and lives in the woods with her sarcastic secretary, rhapsodizing over the flowers and the birdies, following the simple life on sardines and lobster, and arrayed in gipsy clothes when she isnt in a particularly chic Parisian bathing costume. The young squire, on whose land she trespasses, comes to drive off the interloper and remains to adore. He is knocked on the head by tramps, who tie the beauteuos orphan to a tree and steal the solid silver accessories of her simple life. She is rescued by her secretary, nurses the wounded squire and before the curtain falls, has promised to marry him.

Unless Miss Elliott misinterpreted Esmond's intention, it would appear that he was in earnest when he wrote her part, and that he had his tongue in his cheek when he wrote the other parts, especially that of the secretary, which is full of witty satire. It is rather puzzling when a play is irresponsibly fantastic and impossible and mocking at one moment, and mild realistic melodrama the next moment. Mary Jerrold, who, I believe, is a granddaughter of that distinguished man of letters, Douglas Harrold, and who has been practically unknown to the London stage hitherto, made a marked success of the part of the secretary.

Indiana Democratic politicians say the Chanler boom for President has been hoodooed by the fact that the campaign literature sent to that State by the Chanler management was mailed on Friday, the 13th of the month.

She turned the ponies round almost at the door of the Albany, which they had just passed while they talked, and drove up to the door of that somewhat dismal abode. A word to her groom to be in Berkeley Square in half an hour did not astonish that worthy, who was quite accustomed to "Miss Hanna's" vagaries. In the corridor before the chambers, Willy laid stress upon the point about the charwoman and made much of her.

"I'll ring the old girl up and you can cross-question her if you like. She's a regular beauty. Don't you think that I'd deceive you, Anna. Have I ever done it in all my miserable life—eh, what?" he said at the door. "Now walk right in and I'll order tea. It seems like old times to have you about, upon my word it does."

She followed him into the chambers, her axiety about the charwoman absolutely at rest. The rooms themselves were in some little confusion, but promised to be splendidly furnished presently. Fine suites of furniture were all huddled together like policemen at a scene of public rejoicing. The rich curtains, unhung, were neatly folded upon chairs and sofas—a few sporting prints relieved the cold monotony of tinted walls—the library boasted Ruff and Wisdom for its chief masterpieces. Nothing, however, disconcerted Willy Forrest. He had produced that charwoman before you could count five.

"Make us a cup of tea, Mrs. Smiggs, will you?" he asked her boisterously. "Here's my cousin come to tell me how to plant the furniture. We shan't trouble you long—just make love to the kettle and say we're in a hurry, will you now, there's a good soul."

Mrs. Smiggs took a sidelong glance at the lady, and tossing a proud but tousled head assented to the proposition in far from becoming terms.

"I'm sure sir, that I'm always willing to oblige," she said condescendingly, "if as the young lady wouldn't like me to step out and get no cakes nor nothing—"

"No, no, no cakes, thank you, Mrs. Smiggs—just a cup of tea as you can make it and that's all. My cousin's carriage is waiting—she won't be here ten minutes—eh, what?"

The good woman left them, carrying a retroussé nose at an angle of suspicion. Willy Forrest drew an armchair towards the window of that which would presently be his dining-room, and having persuaded Anna to take it he poised himself elegantly upon the arm of a sofa near by and at once invited her confidence.

"Say, Anna, now, what's the good of nonsense? Why did you let the old man send me that cheque?"

She began to pull off her gloves, slowly and with contemplative deliberation.

"I let him send it because I did not wish to marry you."

"That's just what I thought. You got in a huff about a lot of fool's talk on the course and turned it round upon me. Just like a woman—eh, what? As if I could prevent your horse going dotty. That was Farrier's business, not mine."

"But you let me back the horse."

"Of course I did. He might have won. I was just backing my luck against yours. Of course I didn't mean you to lose anything. We were just two good pals together, and what I took out of the ring would have been yours if you'd asked me. Good Lord what a mess your father's made of it! Me with his five thou in my pocket and you calling me a blackguard. You did call me a blackguard—now didn't you, Anna?"

It was very droll to see him sitting there and for a wonder telling her something very like the truth. This, however, had been the keystone of a moderately successful life. He had always told people that he was a scamp—a kind of admission the world is very fond of. In Anna's case he found the practice quite useful. It rarely failed to win her over.

"What was I to think?" she exclaimed almost as though her perplexity distressed her. "The people say that I have cheated them and you win my money. If I don't pay you, you say that I must marry you. Will you deny that it is the truth? You won this money from me to compel me to marry you?"

Capt. Willy Forrest slapped his thigh as though she had told him an excellent joke.

"That's the best thing I've heard for a twelvemonth," cried he; "as if you were the sort to be caught that way, Anna—by an impostor, too, as your Little Boy Blue told you at Henley. He said I was an impostor, didn't he? Well, he's about right there—I'm not the son of old Sir James Forrest—never was, my dear. He was my father's employer, and a devilish good servant he had. But I've some claims on his memory all the same—and why shouldn't I call myself Forrest if I want to? Now, Anna, I'll be as plain with you as a parson at a pigeon match. I do want to marry you—I've wanted to marry you ever since I knew you—but if you think I'm such a fool as to go about it in the way you say I've done, well, then, I'll put right in for the Balmy Stakes and win 'em sure and certain. Don't you see that the boot's just on the other leg right along? I win your money because I want you to think I'm a decent sort of chap when I don't take it. As for the bookies who hissed the horse on the course—who's to pity them? Didn't they see the old gee in the paddock—eh, what! Hadn't they as good a chance as any of us to spot that dotty leg. If I'd a been born with a little white choker around by swan's-down, I'd have shouted the news from the mulberry tree. But I wasn't, my dear—I'm just one of the ruck on the lookout to make a bit—and who'll grease my wheels if I leave my can at home? No, don't you think it—I wanted to marry you right enough, but that wasn't the road. What your father's paid me, he's going to have back again and pretty soon about. Let him give it to the kid who's playing Peep-bo with the Polish Venus—I shan't take it, no, not if I come down to a porcelain bath in the Poplar Union—and what's more, you know I won't, Anna."

His keen eyes searched her face earnestly, much more earnestly than their wont, as he asked her this pointed question. Anna, upon her part, knew that he had juggled cleverly with the admitted facts of the case, and yet her interest in his confession waxed stronger every moment. What an odd fascination this man exercised upon her. She felt drawn toward him as to some destiny she could not possibly escape. And when he spoke of Alban, then he had her finally enmeshed.

"What do you know of Mr. Kennedy?" she asked, sitting up very straight and turning flashing eyes upon him. "He certainly wouldn't write to you. How do you know what is doing?"

"A little fat bird in a black coat living down Whitechapel way. Oh, I don't make any secret of it. I know a man who used to be a parson. He began to stick needles into himself, and the bishop said—what ho! They took off his pinafore and he is now teaching Latin outside Aldgate Station. He's in with the Polish crowd—I beg your pardon, the gentlemen refugees from Poland—who are sewing the buttons on our shirts not far from the Commercial Road. Those people knew more about your friend than he knows about himself. Ask 'em straight and they'll tell you that he is in Warsaw and the girl Lois Boriskoff with him. Whether they've begun to keep house, I don't pretend to say. But it's as true as the east wind and that's gospel. You ask your father to make his own inquiries. I don't want to take it on myself. If he can tell you that Master Alban Kennedy is not something like the husband of the Polish lady Lois Boriskoff, then I'll give a penny to a hospital. Now go and ask him, Anna—don't you wait a minute, you go and ask him."

"Not until I've had that cup of tea, Willy."

She turned round as the charwoman entered, and so hid her face from him. Light laughter cloaked at once the deep affront her pride had received, and the personal sense of shame his words had left. Not for a moment did she question the truth of his story or seek to prove it. As women all the world over, she accepted instantly the hint at a man's faithlessness and determined that it must be true. And this was to say that her passion for Alban Kennedy had never been anything but a phase of girlish romance acceptable for the moment and to be made permanent only by persistence. The eastern blood, flowing warm in her veins, would never have left her long satisfied with the precise and strenuous Englishman, and the restraint his nationality put upon him. She hungered for the warm passionate caress which the East had taught her to desire. She was drawn insensibly toward the man who had awakened this instinct within her and ministered to it whenever he approached her.

They drank their tea in silence, each perhaps afraid to admit the hazard of their task. When the moment came, she had recovered her self-control sufficiently to refer again to the question of the cheque and to do so adroitly.

"Are you going to return that money to my father, Willy?"

"That's just as you like. When you come here for good, we could send it back together."

"What makes you think that I will come here for good, Willy?"

"Because when I kiss you—like this—you tremble, Anna."

He caught her instantly in his arms and covered her face with passionate kisses. Struggling for a moment in his embrace, she lay there presently acquiescent as he had known even before his hands touched her. An hour had passed before Anna quitted the flat—and then she knew beyond any possibility of questionthat she was about to become Willy Forrest's wife.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE PRISON YARD.

The great gates of the prison yard rolled back to admit the carriage in which Alban had been driven from the hotel, and a cordon of straight-backed officials immediately surrounded it. Early as the hour was, the meanest servant whom Zaniloff commanded had work to do and well understood the urgency of his task. The night had been one long story of plot and counter-plot; of revolutionaries fleeing from street to street, Cossacks galloping upon their heels, houses awakened and doors beaten down, the screams and cries of women, the savage anger of men. And all this, not upon the famous avenues which knew little of the new entente, but down in the narrow alleys of the old city, where bulging gables hid the sight from a clear heaven of stars and the crazy eaves had husbanded the cries.

There had been a civil battle fought and many were the prisoners. Not a cell about that great yard but had not its batch of ragged, shivering wretches whose backs were still bloody, whose wounds were still unbound. The quadrangle itself served, as a Cossack jocularly remarked, for the overflow meeting. Here you might perceive many types of men students, still defiant; sage lawyers given to the parley, ragged vermin of the slums gathering their rags close about their shoulders as though to protect them from the lash; timid apostles of the gospel of humanity cowering before human fiends—thus the yard and its environment. For Alban, however, the place might not have existed. His eyes knew nothing of this grim spectacle. He followed the Chief to the upper rooms, remembering only that Lois was here.

They passed down a gloomy corridor and entered a lofty room high up on the third floor of the station. Two spacious windows gave them a fine view of the yard below with all its gregarious misery. There was a table here, covered by a green baize cloth, and an officer in uniform writing at it. He stood and saluted Zaniloff with a gravity fine to see. The Chief, in turn, nodded to him and drew a chair to the table. When he had found ink and paper he began the interrogation which should help his dossier:

"You are an Englishman and your age is——" he waited and turned to Alban.

"My age is just about 21."

"You were born in England?"

"In London; I was born in London."

"And you now live?"

"With Mr. Richard Gessner at Hampstead."

So it went—interminable question and answer, of the most trivial kind. It seemed an age before they came to the vital issue.

"And what do you know of this crime which has been committed?"

"I know nothing—how could I know anything?"

"Pardon me, you were yesterday in company of the girl who is charged with its commission."

"The charge is absurd—I am sure of it."

"We shall decide that for ourselves. You visited her upon the barge of the German merchant, Petermann. He is now in custody and has confessed as much. What did she say to you when you were alone with her?"

"She asked me to help to set her father free."

"An honest admission—we shall do very well, I see. When she spoke of his excellency, the Count, she said——"

"I am not afraid to tell you. She did not like him and asked me to take her away from Warsaw, disguised as my servant."

"That was not clever, sir. As if we should not have known——but I pass it by. You left her, and then——"

"I spent the day with the Count and returned with him to the hotel at 3 o'clock in the morning."

"There was no one with him, then?"

"Yes, his valet was with him."

"Did you leave them together when you went to bed?"

"He always helped the Count to undress. I cannot remember where I left him."

"You have not a good memory, I perceive."

"Not for that which happened at 3 o'clock in the morning."

Zaniloff permitted the merest suspicion of a smile to lurk about the corners of a sensual mouth.

"It is difficult," he said drily—and then: "Your memory will be better later on. Did the girl tell you that his excellency would be assassinated?"

"You know very well that she did not."

"I know?"

"Certainly, you have had too much experience not to know."

"Most flattering—please do not mistake me. I am asking you these questions because I wish that justice shall be done. If you can do nothing to clear Lois Boriskoff, I am afraid that we shall have to flog her."

"That would be a cowardly thing to do. It would also be very foolish. She has many friends, both here and in England. I don't think they will forget her."

"Wild talk, Mr. Kennedy, very wild talk. I see that you will not help me. We must let the Governor know as much, and he will decide. I warn you at the same time that it will go very hard with you if the Count should die—and as for this woman, we will try other measures. She must certainly be flogged."

"If you do that, I myself will see that her friends in England know about it. The Governor will never be so foolish—that is, if he wishes to save Mr. Gessner."

"Gessner—Gessner—I hear the name often—pardon me, I have not the honor of his acquaintance."

"Telegraph to the Minister at St. Petersburg, and he will tell you who Mr. Gessner is. I think you would be wise to do so."

Zaniloff could make nothing of it. The cool effrontery of this mere stripling was unlike anything he had heard at the bureau in all the years he had served authority. Why, the bravest men had gone down on their knees to him before now and almost shrieked for mercy. And here was this bit of an English boy plucking the venerable beard of Terror as unconcernedly as though he were a sullen-eyed Cossack with a nagaika in his hand. Assuredly he could be no ordinary traveler. And why did he harp upon this name Gessner, Richard Gessner! Reflection brought it to Zaniloff's mind that he had heard the name before. Yes, it had been mentioned in a dossier from the Ministry of Justice. He thought again, and recalled other circumstances. The government had been anxious to do the man a service—they had commanded the arrest of the Boriskoffs—why, at this very Gessner's bidding! And had not the Count warned him to treat the young Englishman as his own son—merely to play a comedian's part and to frighten him before opening the doors with profuse apologies. Zaniloff did not like the turn affairs had taken. He determined to see the Governor-General without a moment's loss of time. Meanwhile, there could be no earthly reason why the girl should not be flogged. Whatever happened, the Minister would approve that.

"It shall be done as you advise," he rejoined, presently, the admission passing for an excellent joke. "The telegram shall be dispatched immediately. While we are waiting for an answer I will command them to bring you some breakfast to my own private room. Meanwhile, as I say, the girl must be flogged."

Alban shrugged his shoulders.

"I did not believe that you could possibly be so foolish," he said.

It puzzled Zaniloff altogether. Searching that open face with eyes accustomed to read many human stories, he could discern neither emotion or anger, but just an honest man's faith in his own cause and a sure belief that it must triumph. Whatever Alban might really feel, the sickening apprehension of which he was the victim, the almost overmastering desire to take this ruffian by the throat and strangle him as he sat, not a trace of it could be discerned, either in his speech or his attitude. "He stood before me like a dog which has barked and is waiting to bite," Zaniloff said afterward. "I might as well have threatened to flog the statue of Sobiesky in the castle gardens." This impression, however, he was careful to conceal from the prisoner. Official dignity never argues—especially when it is getting the worst of the deal.

"My wisdom is not for us to discuss," he snapped; "please to remember that I am in authority here, and allow no one to question what I do. You will remain in my room until I return, sir. Afterward, it must be as the Governor decides."

He took up his papers, and, whispering a few words to the stolid secretary, he left the room and went clanking down the corridor. The officer who remained seemed principally concerned in driving flies from his bald head and from the documents he compiled so laboriously. Stopping from time to time to shape a quill pen to his liking, he would write a few lines carefully, kill a number of flies, take a peep at Alban from beneath his shaggy brows, and then resume the cycle of his labors. Alban pitied him cynically. This labor of docketing scarred backs seemed wretchedly monotonous. He was really glad when the fellow spoke to him, in as amazing a combination of tongues as man had ever heard:

"Mein Herr—pardon—what shall you say—comment a dire—for the English—Moskowa?"

"We say Moscow, sir."

"Ah—Mosk — Mosk-nitchevo—je ne m'en souviens jamais."

He continued to write, as though laboring under an incurable disappointment. That Alban knew what Moskowa meant was not surprising, for he had heard the word so often in Union street. Here in this very courtyard, far below his windows, were the sons and the brothers of those who had preached revolution in England. How miserable they looked—great hordes of them, all crouching in the shadow of the wall to save their lacerated skins from the burning sunshine. Verily did they resemble sheep driven into pens for the slaughter. As for the Cossacks who moved in and out among them, there was hardly a moment which found their whips at rest. Standing or sitting, you could not escape the dreadful thongs—lashes of rawhide upon a core of wires, leaded at the end and cutting as knives. Sometimes they would strike at a huddled form, as though they resented its mute confession of overwhelming misery. An upturned face almost invariably invited a cut, which laid it open from forehead to chin. And not only this, but there were ordered floggings, one of which Alban must witness as he stood at the window above, too fascinated by the horror of the spectacle to move away, and not unwilling to know the truth.

Many police assisted at this—driving their victims before them to a rude bench in the center of the yard. There was neither strap nor triangle. They threw their man down and held him across the plank, gripping his wrists and ankles, and one forcing his head to the floor. The whip of a single lash, wired to cut, and leaded everywhere, fell across the naked flesh with a sound of a can upon a board. Great welts were left at the very first blow, torn flesh afterward, and sights not to be recounted. The most stolid were broken to shrieks and screams, despite their resolutions. The laugh upon defiant lips became instantly a terrible cry, seeming to echo the ultimate miseries. As they did to these poor wretches so would they do to Lois, Alban said. He was giddy, when a voice called him from the window, and he almost reeled as he turned.

"Well, what do you want with me?"

"I am to take you to the cell of the girl Lois Boriskoff, mein herr. Please to follow me."

An official, well dressed in civilian's clothes, spoke to him this time, and with a sufficient knowledge of the English language. The bald-headed secretary still snapped up the unconsidered insectile trifles which troubled his paper. Alban, his heart thumping audibly, followed the newcomer from the room, and remembered only that he was going to Lois.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

"I am sending you my photograph to show what Newbro's Herpicide has done for me.
"Since I first tried Herpicide upon my hair I have used it exclusively in giving scalp treatments to others, and I would not think of trying to get along without it."
(Signed) MRS. ANNA CONNER.
2807 Archer Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Hundreds of lady scalp specialists and hair dressers use and recommend Newbro's Herpicide, instead of products of their own manufacture upon which a much larger profit could be made. They claim that Herpicide makes friends for them and gives much better satisfaction. Some hair dressers use Herpicide for obstinate cases only, but why not use the best first?
Herpicide is a delightful dressing that can be used when there is no disease of the hair or scalp, and as an actual remedy for dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair, it stands in a class singularly its own.
Many ladies object to a gummy and sticky hair dressing, or one that is full of sedimentary chemicals intended to dye the hair. The marked preference for a clean and dainty preparation, particularly one that overcomes excessive oiliness and leaves the hair light and fluffy, is reflected in the enormous sale of Newbro's Herpicide. Discriminating ladies become enthusiastic over its refreshing quality and exquisite fragrance. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

BEAUTY LURED MEN TO DEATH.

STORY OF COUNTESS TARNOVSKY, AUTHOR OF MURDER.

Induced Two of Her Suitors to Engage in a Plot to Rid Her of Her Fiance in Order That She Might Gain Possession of His Enormous Wealth.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

VIENNA, Sept. 11.—No more sensational story has ever been told in fiction or acted in melodrama than that which has been unraveled by the Vienna police in solving the mystery of the murder of Count Kamarovsky at Venice a few days ago. Although some details of the crime have doubtless been cabled to America, the story in its entirety is of such dramatic interest that it is well worth telling in full.

It is the story of a beautiful she-devil and the demoniacal power which her wondrous beauty and powers of fascination enabled her to exercise over men who fell victims to her charms. For the real author of the murder of Count Kamarovsky is the Countess Maria Nikolyeffna Tarnovski who, for some time, has been dazzling Vienna with her lovely face and magnificent dresses. The other characters in the tragedy were her puppets—men whom love of her had made pliant slaves, willing for the chance of winning her to risk the gallows in this world and damnation in the next.

The Countess is one of those seductive sirens luring men to destruction that you read about sometimes in novels, and then doubt if their counterpart in real life ever exists. She is not yet 30, and time has merely ripened her beauty.

BEGAN YOUNG.

She was 18 when she married Count Tarnovski, a Russian nobleman of ancient lineage and possessed of large estates. After a few years she tired of her husband and solaced herself with a lover. Tiring of him, too, she denounced him in an anonymous letter to the Count. The result was the Count challenged him and killed him in a duel. He was the first man to lose his life for the Countess. How many more she has been instrumental in sending to an untimely grave noboby knows, for the Vienna police have not yet traced her career in full.

The death of one lover left her freer to ensnare others. But Count Tarnovski's eyes were opened at last, and instead of issuing more challenges to fight duels, he procured a divorce. The Countess was glad enough to be released from her matrimonial fetters. The process brought her another victim. In the divorce procedings she employed a Moscow lawyer, M. Prilukoff. At that time Prilukoff was making something like $30,000 a year, enjoyed an unblemished reputation and was happy in his domestic relations. Prilukoff succumbed to the fascinations of his client. The result was that his law practice went all to pieces, his wife got a divorce from him and he fled from Russia with $25,000 with which he had been entrusted by clients before he was ensnared in the toils of the Countess. Prilukoff tagged after her about Europe. She picked up other victims in the course of her peregrinations, and discarded them as it suited her convenience, but Prilukoff she always kept in tow. He was her emergency man. He tried to poison himself once, he said, to get rid of his troubles, but the doctors got to work on him with a stomach pump in time to save his life. That he now regards as a misfortune, for if he does not swing for his share in the murder of Count Kamarovsky he will certainly get a long term of penal servitude.

In the course of her travels the Countess chanced to meet Count Kamarovsky, an old acquaintance, whom she had lost track of for some time, because the Count, as captain of the Cossack Guards, had gone to the front in the war with Japan, and had there been severely wounded. The Count had lots of money, and the Countess wanted money badly, for Prince Naumoff had about exhausted his immediate resources on her account, and Prilukoff had been dead broke for two years or more.

With the Countess, of course, the first preliminary to getting hold of a man's money was to make him in love with her. She was an adept at that. Count Kamarovsky proved an easy conquest. He had a wife at the time. She brought a suit for divorce against the Count, but before the case came up for trial she simplified matters by dying. Then Count Kamaravsky and the Countess Tarnovski became formally engaged.

The Count lavished gifts upon her. When she went out driving with him in Vienna she created a sensation by the splendor of her toilette and the magnificence of her jewels. She spent much time with him in Venice, too, where the Count had a handsome villa on the Campo Santo Mona del Giglio.

But marriage with him formed no part of her plans. It was his wealth she coveted and marriage might prove an obstacle rather than an aid to its complete possession. She got the Count to insure his life in her favor for $100,000. Prilukoff selected the company in which it was taken out. The Countess told him to make sure that in case the Count was killed there could be no question of disputing the payment. Her next step was to induce the Count to execute a will in her favor by which, in the event of his death, the whole of his great fortune would be hers. The Count was so madly in love with her that he was willing to accede to her every request.

The one thing remaining to be done to make her an enormously wealthy woman was to get rid of the Count. She asked Prilukoff to do the job for her, promising to reward him by marrying him and sharing the Count's fortune with him. Whether she ever had any intention of redeeming that pledge is doubtful.

Prilukoff took lessons in shooting and studied other methods of assassination. According to the confession of the Countess the plan originally arranged was that Prilukoff should take the same train by which the Count was to travel from Vienna to Venice, by some pretext get into the compartment which the Count would have reserved for himself, engage him in conversation, offer him a narcotised cigarette, and when it had rendered him unconscious, shoot him.

It was a risky scheme and as the time drew nigh for putting it in execution Prilukoff's nerve failed him. The Countess says Prilukoff told her he was afraid that if he actually killed the Count she would get to loathe him as a murderer and refuse to marry him. Probably she would not have married him but it would not have been because he had played the role of an assassin. Prilukoff gave her credit for more scruples than she possessed.

But with Prilukoff balking, it became necessary to employ a more daring tool to get the Count out of the way. The Countess summoned Prince Naumoff to Vienna. The Prince was only 25, hot-blooded and impetuous and madly jealous of any one who stood between him and the Countess. He had already sent Count Kamarovsky a letter threatening to kill him if he cut him out. She told the Prince that she had intended to go no further than a flirtation with the Count, but that his persecutions had rendered him detestable to her. She assured the Prince that he was the only man she had ever really loved, and offered him the same terms as she had offered Prilukoff, and the more venturesome Prince eagerly accepted them.

The siren had not the slightest intention of carrying out her bargain with the Prince. Prilukoff was cognizant of the arrangements made with him. The pair set to work on a scheme by which in the event of the Prince's mission of assassination succeeding they hoped their own safety would be assured.

It was a plot within a plot by which it was to be made to appear that the Countess and Prilukoff had striven to save the Count from the vengeance of his jealous rival. The Prince was to kill the Count at his villa in Venice, journeying from Vienna for that purpose. Prilukoff preceded him thither with a couple of detectives, and posted them about the villa. That would substantiate the story he was to tell—and did tell when first arrested—that the Countess had dispatched him to Venice to take precautions to insure Count Kamarovsky's safety because she had heard the jealous Prince utter threats against the Count's life.

It was part of the scheme that the detectives were to capture the Prince as he left the villa. That they didn't do. Prilukoff with his two men were actually in front of the Count's villa when the Prince entered it. But he did not tell the detectives that the Prince was going there to shoot the Count. That would have prevented the murder and the prevention of the murder, would, of course, prevent the Countess from getting possession of the Count's fortune. That was the first point that caused the police to doubt the genuineness of the story told by the Countess and Prilukoff that all their efforts had been aimed at saving the Count from the danger that threatened him.

The only order Prilukoff gave to the detectives was to seize anybody who rushed out of the house. They pounced on a man who ran out to give the alarm and the Prince escaped, only to be arrested by the Italian police later.

The Count lingered for some days after he was shot. The Countess and Prilukoff were arrested in Vienna just after they had collected the insurance money on the Count's life. Their trial and that of the Prince will take place in Venice where the crime was committed.

ers would doubtless prefer the quicker and more comfortable stage route.

"The new road will pass through the Gen. Grant National Park, thence to Ten-mile Creek, thence to the southern portion of the cañon, crossing the river and continuing along the north bank through some very notable scenery until the main floor of the cañon is reached. There is a camp at the junction of Copper Creek and the King's, and here have already begun extensive improvements in anticipation of the certain increase of visitors following the completion of the stage road.

"There is no question but that this King's River region is one of the most valuable assets which the State possesses. It is sure to become widely famous in the immediate future, and it will not surprise me if eventually the number of visitors annually will equal or exceed those now going to the Yosemite. In that case, of course, something of the charm of the locality will be lost, for at present its primitive wildness and total absence of everything artificial constitute no small part of its attractiveness to many visitors.

"But if the matter is properly handled this loss will be very slight. First of all, the entire region of the headwaters of the Middle and South Fork of the King's should be made a national park, and placed under government supervision. The advantages accruing from this would be inestimable, not only in making the region more accessible and maintaining its facilities in better shape, but in preserving its natural beauties, especially the forest growth, and protecting its wild life. Contrast the present timidity of wild animals, especially the deer, in the King's River region with the tameness of the same animals (wild, and yet protected,) which we find in Yellowstone Park. It would be but a few years, under proper government supervision, when the King's River region would also become a paradise for wild animals.

"There is one other improvement which should be made, it seems to me," Mr. Gleason continued reflectively, "and that is in respect to the nomenclature of the locality. It is unfortunate that the cañon did not receive some appropriate name of Spanish or Indian origin. Yosemite, Tuolumne, Merced, San Joaquin, Tehipite—are all beautiful names. Mr. King may have been a very worthy man, but the name is empty and devoid of all significance to 99 out of every 100 who visit the cañon. And who was Bubb? It is a shame that such a magnificent valley and stream should bear such an insignificant name."

"Mr. Gleason, referring again to the comparison between the Yosemite and the King's—a comparison that did not strike me as being at all odious—if a person can visit but one of these localities, which shall he choose?"

"The Yosemite, by all means," answered the artist emphatically, "because of its greater accessibility and its manifold beauty, but having seen the Yosemite, he should, if possible, visit the King's River Cañon, if he would gain a true conception of the marvelous scenery of the Sierra Nevada."

ART NOTES.

Hobart Bosworth has been so busy directing the Belasco Stock Company this summer that when asked the other day what he had to show in the line of recent pictures from his brush, he replied that they could be represented in this wise:

However, he went sketching at Millard Cañon last Wednesday, to be gone for three days. As he intends to paint two sketches a day, the blank space will soon be more than filled.

The two Wachtels have gone to Malibu ranch, twenty-five miles north of Santa Monica. They will remain there for about three weeks. Their return will undoubtedly bring to light a fine output of sketches, for Mr. and Mrs. Wachtel are among the hardest working of all the Los Angeles painter folk.

Norman St. Clair did some sketching in Santa Barbara recently, but last week he went to his favorite place, Laguna Beach, where he will sketch for several weeks.

The Rembrandt Art Club of South Pasadena met on September 11 at Mrs. Mathis's picturesque house among the oaks of Lincoln Park. Prof. Mohler gave a lecture on water-color painting, using the trees and distant mountains to illustrate atmosphere, planes, etc. The club is making preparations for holding an exhibtion during the first week in December.

NATURE'S CREED.

I believe in the brook as it wanders
From hillside into glade;
I believe in the breeze as it whispers,
When evening's shadows fade.
I believe in the roar of the river
As it dashes from high cascade;
I believe in the cry of the tempest
'Mid the thunder's cannonade.
I believe in the light of shining stars,
I believe in the sun and the moon.
I believe in the flash of the lightning.
I believe in the night bird's croon.
I believe in the faith of the flowers,
I believe in the rock and sod.
For in all these appeareth clear
The handiwork of God.

NEW BOOKS REVIEWED.

(BY A TIMES REVIEWER.)

Unmothered Heroine.

ABBIE ANN. By George Madden Martin. The Century Company, New York. (Price $1.50. For sale by C. C. Parker.)

Those who loved that dear little maid, Emmy Lou, with her very real, human and lovable young heart, will enjoy the last book of the lady who disguises herself as George Madden Martin. It would be ungracious to say that Abbie Ann is not another Emmy Lou—the world would not tolerate an endless procession of such a likable person even, and the author is, perhaps, wise not to attempt it.

George Madden Martin must have a strenuous early life, for she delights in unmothered heroines—untrained youngsters whose exerescences are the result of good blood run riot and sadly in want of restraint. Emmy Lou was one type—Abbie Ann is another, slightly less lovable, perhaps, but as sound and fine. Abbie Ann has gray eyes and red hair, and a barbaric love of finery—and a certain fierceness of soul that gets into conflict with the experience of twelve years.

Her unmothered life in Coal City, her going away ot school, her experiences there, the home coming, and above all, her two stately and austere old aunts, are all done with the insight and touch that made "Emmy Lou" a book to be remembered. The incidental characters are, perhaps, better than even in "Emmy Lou"—notably the father and the station agent.

Abbie Ann,
the heroine of George Madden Martin's new story.

It must not be supposed that because the heroine is a kiddie in short dresses, that "Abbie Ann" is a children's book. The author's forte is the psychology of the child, and her book is one for men and women to read—and profit by, if they have among their acquaintances any Emmy Lous or Abbie Anns.

A Book for Children.

CAPTAIN JUNE. By Alice Hegan Rice. The Century Company, New York. (Price $1.)

Whatever critics may say and purists rave over, the success of Mrs. Wiggs and her friends prove that Alice Hegan Rice's books do contain that certain human quality, which is not absolutely bound up in form and style and is often sacrificed to them. "Capt. June" is her first book for children. It is more than reminiscent of Mrs. Wiggs, and has something of that lady's lovable earthiness—but not enough. "Capt. June" is rather too good and cheruby. But for all that, it is a good story, and gives in an interesting way, little glimpses of Japanese life and customs.

A Satire on Municipal Ownership.

ALICE IN BLUNDERLAND. By John Kendrick Bangs. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York. (Price 60 cents.)

John Kendrick Bangs, being a man who never seems to hesitate to force the comic muse to his needs, writes many things that have not the funny afflatus. In "Alice in Blunderland," however, he has struck upon a novel and timely theme, and he handles it well. This travesty on "Alice in Wonderland" is a satire on the present craze for municipal ownership. "Blunderland" is the brilliant idea of the Hatter—who talks a great deal through his hat—and he and the March Hare conduct Alice to the Immovable Trolley, the Aromatic Gas Plant, the Municipaphone, etc.

In the matter of the Aromatic Gas Plant, the Hatter "figured that coal gas was nothing more than alcohol mixed with aromatic oils, and that inasmuch as both alcohol and oil burn readily, there was no reason why hot air passed through them should not burn also, and carry off some of the [illegible] as well."

"It certainly was a pretty idea,' said Alice.

"All the M. O. ideas are pretty,' said the March Hare. 'It is only the question of reducing beauty to the basis of practical utility that confronts us.'

"'And how did it work?' asked Alice, very much interested.

"'Beautifully,' said the Hatter. 'Only it wouldn't burn—just why I haven't been able to find out. But in the matter of perfume it was fine. People who turned on their jets the first night soon found their houses smelling like bowers of roses, and a great many of them liked it so much they they turned on every jet in the house, and kept them turned on all day, so that in the mere matter of consumption twice as much of my aromatic illuminating gas was used in a week as the company had charged for under the old system, and we used the same meters.'"

There are some clever bits of verse scattered through the little volume; as:

"A City may not own its Gas,
Its Barber Shops, or Cars;
It may not raise Asparagrass,
Or run Official Bars;
It may not own a big Hotel
Or keep a Public Hen,
But it will always find it well
To own its Aldermen."

The pictures in Mr. Bang's "Irridescent Dream" are from the clever pen of Albert Levering, and are done in the manner of the illustrations in Lewis Carroll's famous book.

A Romance of Belmania.

THE LOST PRINCESS. By William Frederick Dix. [illegible] Yard & Co. New York. (Price $1.50.)

Ever since Athony Hope Hawkins galloped to success on the romantic steed of "Zenda," the fictious country and the make-believe court have exercised an irresistible fascination for the novelist. None of them, however, has equaled Hope in freshness and inspiration. But a large class has produced interesting stories which, though not fictional works of the first order, form entertaining reading for the idle hour.

Such a book is "The Lost Princess," a romance of Belmania and surrounding provinces, by William Frederick Dix. Mr. Dix might have gotten further away from Roumania than Belmania, unless, indeed, he is chronicling some sort of comparison. The story is told in the first person, that of Karl, eighth baron of Casamare and peer of the Belmanian realm. The introduction is spirited enough, as the reader finds Karl seated in the palace of Malvera—capital of a neighboring and unfriendly kingdom—and just being declared a spy. His pell-mell escape, which occupies the remainder of the chapter, is hair-breadth enough to satisfy even a melodramatic audience.

"The Princess" is soon introduced, and the mysteries of love, political intrigue and frank adventure occupy the remaining pages—297 in all.

A Classic for the Young.

STORIES EVERY CHILD SHOULD KNOW. Edited by Hamilton Wright Mabie. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York. (Price 90 cents.)

This fascinating little book in bluish gray, with a pretty and demure maid absorbed in reading pictured on its cover, proves to be even more interesting inside than out. It contains eleven famous stories, among them being one in verse, "The Diverting History of John Gilpin," by William Cowper. Others are Fouqué's "Undine," Edward Everett Hale's "The Man Without a Country," Ouida's "The Nurnberg Stove," Dr. Brown's "Rab and His Friends," Hawthorne's "The Great Stone Face" and "The Snow Image," etc.

The titles already enumerated show a careful and judicious selection. As Mr. Mabie says in his preface: "The stories collected in this volume have been selected from many sources, because in the judgment of the editor they are sound pieces of writing, wholesome in tone, varied in interest and style, and interesting. It is his hope that they will not only furnish good reading, but that they will suggest the kind of reading in this field that should be within the reach of children."

Strenuous Writer.

Signor Gabriele D'Annunzio is credited with having in hand simultaneously the probably unprecedented number of five separate works widely differing in character. Two are comedies of modern life. Two others are tragedies—one, "La Nave," is really an apotheosis of the sea power of Venice, and the other upon the legend of "Tristan and Isolde." Then he is well under way with a short romance entitled "Perhaps, Yes; Perhaps, No."

That delightful story of the West, by Marie Manning, published by the Harpers a few years ago—"Judith of the Plains"—has recently been dramatized and is now appearing in some of the eastern cities.

Frances Hodgson Burnett, author of "Cozy Liar."

A LOOK ABROAD FOR THE BOOKISH.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

FLORENCE (Italy,) Sept. 11.—Gabrielle d'Annunzio, most famous and most discussed of living Italian authors, has informed the public at large, through an interviewer, of the Giornale d'Italia, that if baseless stories about him did not cease, some one will get hurt.

"Whenever the gossip of Italy," he declared, "has nothing else to concern itself about, it diverts itself with inventing stories about me. I desire only to be left to my work, and if I am not I shall be obliged to give a severe lesson to some one."

The cause of this outburst is the recent publication, in many journals, that the writer, who is credited with possessing 200 neckties and 20 suits of pajamas, intended to go to Brescia in an automobile at the rate of 120 kilometers an hour. Many fantastic additions were made to the story, and the finish of the author prophesied.

"I have read with astonishment," said Sig. D'Annunzio, "the numerous statements in the newspapers concerning my journey to Brescia. I deplore that so many serious journals take it into their heads now and then to draw fancy pictures of me. I have accepted an invitation to go to Brescia in the automobile of Sig. Constantini, but I do not wish to risk my life, and we certainly should be madmen to run an automobile at the rate of 120 kilometers an hour. In certain places, especially between Bologna and Mantua, the road is such that one is compelled ot go at moderate speed."

Apropos of D'Annunzio's possible death, the Vita publishes an interesting anecdote concerning a prophecy made by the poet himself. A few months ago he gave a photograph of himself to a newspaper colleague. It was reproduced in the Italian comic paper, Don Chisciotte, and Vamba caricatured it by elongating the small mustaches of the poet, who, himself wrote beneath it: "Born, ——; died, 1929." As D'Annunzio—though he refrained from mentioning it in this "epitaph"—was born in 1864; and is now 43, it is evident that he expects to attain the ripe age of 65 before departing this life.

The eminent socioligist, Prof. Pasquale Villari, has just contributed a striking article to the Corriere della Sera on the results of Italian immigration to America. He deals with two questions, the first relating to the abandoned provinces in Italy, the second to the proceedings of the Italians who return with American gold. The latter instantly buy land, and their ignorance is leading to all manner of agricultural evils. Prof. Villari, accordingly, proposes an agricultural education, furnished by the government, or a distribution of land by the Umanitaria, a philanthropic society of Milan, which will keep its eyes on the land syndicates, the peasants' enemy, as possible remedies. The point of interest to America is that the Italians do not stay in that country to become model citizens Senator Latimer and Mr. Burnett hope for, but have Italy always in the backs of their minds, and that in the Molise district alone, the postal savings bank deposits, which were 1,339,740 lire in 1888, increased to 9,372,927 lire in 1905.

Don Murri has just had his book, "La Vita Relligiosa nel Christianesimo," placed on the Index. It is a most serious, grave and interesting volume, though spoiled somewhat by a little too much ardor, and devout Catholics are completely at a loss to know wherein it sins.

While the Papal party on the one hand is condemning right and left, the King is declaring himself the friend of letters, and in a private audience given Sig. Vincenzio Giannotti, His Majesty impressed upon him the fact of his vivid interest in everything pertaining to the publishing interests. He spoke of certain firms by name, and discussed at some length the present book movement in Italy, and his hope of the production of a national literature.

Not only is there an upsetting of religious ideals in Italy, and a revival of Christian ethics among young men, but there is a literary one as well. In each of the large cities, new authors are appearing, young, talented, and very eager, with a general impulse away from the literary ideals of D'Annunzio, a few years ago the literary mentor.

In Florence, for instance, there is a group of young men who publish a paper in the interest of things literary, called "Lt Vita Letteraria." In it the young writers of the day find voice. A writer of whom its editors prophesy great things is Umberto Desogus, who comes before the public with a drama, "Era Destino," which is declared to possess rare power.

The Marchese Ridolfo Peruzzi, whose mother was Edith Story, is one of these young Italian writers, his "La Morte del Falco," and his "Canto delle Stagione," having appeared before he was twenty-one.

Ugo Ludovico Morichini of Rome, author of "Semi Su Pietre," is also but 21. The latter possesses what may be called a photographic mind. He pays a call, say, and on his return home he will find every bit of color, every article of furniture, every peculiarity of the person visited; in fact, the entire room in detail, so pictured in his mind that he has merely to write it out without effort. When he was ready to write his "Semi Su Pietre," he refrained from entering a single house during its writing, that his photographs might not become composite ones. He is able to write anywhere; armed with his notebook, he may be seen in the midst of a fashionable crowd on the Pincio, writing with the ease of some other writer in his study.

Alice Hegan Rice,
author of "Captain June."

PEOPLE AND THINGS OF LITERARY WORLD.

The popularity of Mark Twain is perennial, and the Harpers have just found it necessary to issue new editions of "Huckleberry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer."

American readers who like to keep informed touching English opinion on American affairs and tendencies will be interested in an article, "Is America Heading for Aristocracy?" which the Living Age for September 21 reprints from the London Nation.

"The Spoilers," the novel by Rex Beach, was dramatized by the author and James MacArthur, and appeared last winter in New York and other cities. The play has recently opened in its second New York season.

John L. Given's "Making a Newspaper," an accurate account of newspaper organization and methods, has been adopted as a text book for the courses in journalism at Bucknell University and the University of Illinois.

The Century Company has in hand for fall publication Kellogg Durland's story of a year's travel, adventure and observation in Russia. It is to be illustrated with over sixty photographs, and will be entitled "The Red Reign."

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will publish in October the Rotch edition of Emanuel Swedenborg's theological works in thirty-two volumes. This is the first complete edition of Swedenborg's theological writings, and the first trade edition of his works published in this country.

A short time ago a live Teddy Bear was found roaming around Oyster Bay, we have Teddy Bear dolls, Teddy Bear pins, and Teddy Bear automobile horns; now comes "The Teddy Bear A-B-C" by Laura Rinkle Johnson, illustrated in color by Margaret Landers Sanford and published by H. M. Caldwell Company of New York and Boston.

The "Cynic's Calendar," with which is to be incorporated a lexicon of legal phrases designed to enlighten the uninitiated, is again in preparation for 1908. This year's edition will bring the circulation of this diverting annual up to 150,000 copies. The publishers, Paul Elder & Co., announce that it will be ready October 15.

An important biography is just announced for publication by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., this autumn in "Augustus St. Gaudens: a Memorial," by Royal Cortissoz. This volume will contain a memoir of the great sculptor and a study of his work by a distinguished art critic who was his intimate friend. It will be illustrated with photogravure reproductions of St. Gaudens's work.

Miss Caroline Fuller, author of "Brunhilde's Paying Guest," is a native of Maine and a graduate of Smith College. Her earlier published books include "Across the Campus" and "The Alley Cat's Kitten;" besides which she has composed "The Shepherd of the Day," and the music for three songs of Robert Browning.

We learn that Frederic Harrison's "The Creed of a Layman," which was published last spring, was the first of a series of four volumes, which will contain a complete collection of his miscellaneous essays. The second volume, containing Philosophical Essays and Discussions, will appear in the early fall, and succeeding volumes will deal with social and economic questions, and controversial essays and criticisms.

Among the many amusing anecdotes told by John Burroughs in his new book, "Camping and Tramping With Roosevelt," is the following: "The Rough Riders, wherever they are, always look to President Roosevelt when in trouble. One had come to grief in Arizona. He was in jail. So he wrote to the President, and his letter ran something like thus: 'Dear Colonel—I am in trouble. I shot a lady in the eye, but I did not intend to hit the lady. I was shooting at my wife.'"

Among the best sellers of the month are two books by W. J. Locke, "The Beloved Vagabond" and "The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne." Beerbohm Tree will be seen in the character of the "Beloved Vagabond" this autumn in London. Mr. Locke's other book has also been dramatised, and will be seen next month upon the American stage under the title of "The Morals of Marcus." Mr. Locke has at last come into fame, and is now one of the most important figures of English letters and the English stage.

"Are You a Bromide?" which has brought Gelett Burgess into such popularity, is now in its fifth printing, though only published late last fall. The demand for this book exists in every part of the country, and orders from abroad are plentiful. The terms "bromide" and "sulphite" crop up everywhere. An Indianapolis newspaper heads its funny column "Bromides and "sulphites," and Trixie Friganza, in "The Orchid," imitates the pose of one of the figures on the cover design, and hurls the epithet "Bromide!" at Eddie Foy.

Dr. Albert Shaw, editor of the Review of Reviews, is the author of a book entitled "The Outlook for the Average Man," which is to be published early next month. It will deal with various phases of industrial and social life in the twentieth century, and with the tendencies which these phases indicate. Dr. Shaw is known to be a brilliant and well-trained student of economic subjects; but he is above all a practical man, and the purpose of his book is practical rather than merely theoretical and scholarly.

Gen. Morris Schaff, whose interesting reminiscences of "The Spirit of West Point" will be published the middle of October in book form, with illustrations, additions and revisions, has received many letters of commendation from army men all over the country. One of them reads as follows: "Your work will have a beneficial effect on a large number of readers, who know little of the true spirit of West Point, which is best known by those who have been associated with its graduates in active service and have come to know of its efficiency in teaching patriotism, loyalty, devotion to duty, courage, and manly fortitude. West Point is the nation's most beneficial institution."

The publication of Vol. II. of the poetical works of W. B. Yeats makes accessible all of this poet's verse that he cares to see preserved. This second volume is devoted to the poetical plays, which occupy a position of their own in the modern drama. All of them have been performed, one or two of them with conspicuous success. In America Mrs. Lemoyne's production of "The Land of Heart's Desire" a few years ago will be remembered, and "The Countess Cathleen" has been played in this country by Miss Wycherley. The latest of these plays, "Deirdre," was produced at the Abbey Theater, Dublin, on November 27, 1906, and has not before been printed in this country.

In his forthcoming book, "An Artist's Reminiscences," Walter Crane tells an amusing story of an encounter with Whistler at a fancy ball. "Among the guests," he relates, "was the great Whistler, disguised as a Spanish cavalier in black, with a big sombrero. I was all in white, as Cimabue, so we presented a complete contrast both of style and color, which may have been quite symbolic. I had met him previously at one of his own private views, and said to him by way of greeting that I thought I had had the pleasure of meeting him before; but he was not at all inclined to be friendly and only said drily, 'very likely'—and we didn't get any further."

WHO IS THE AUTHOR?

Many Conjectures as to Identity of Person Who Wrote Book on Russo-Japanese War.

There is much guessing going on as to the identity of the author of "As The Hague Ordains," who refused Messrs. Henry Holt & Co.'s request for a preface or introduction. When the Messrs. Holt were recently asked for the German rights, they wrote that they would have to refer the matter to the author's agent who was abroad.

Although the book bears the subtitle "Journal of a Russian Prisoner's Wife in Japan," one reviewer writes, "Her femininity is not so strongly evidenced that it may not be the mask that renders more artless the critical reasoning of a masculine author. In many instances, notably the high tribute it pays to the sanitary and surgical skill of the medical corps of the Japanese army, the book suggests one published a year ago by Dr. Louis Livingston Seaman."

Even the author has been asked if Putnam Weale, author of "Truce in the East and Its Aftermath," were not the author, while others guessed Mr. and Mrs. George Kennan, or the young Countess Bienkendorff, who joined the Count in Japan and remained there through the war. The commandant of engineers at Cherbourg, who saw part of the war, had the book sent him, but his command has been unable to solve the problem. In Japan, where the book is to run in Japanese in a periodical, the identity of the author has been the subject of much discussion, but so far without definite result.

SOME POINTS ABOUT OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

The first of Gen. Oliver O. Howard's valuable "Recollections of Distinguished Men" will appear in the October Century, giving his memories of Gen. Grant, in war, and in his last illness. Gen. Howard's final interview with Grant was a brief meeting on March 25, 1885, when the two talked of serious subjects and bade each other good-by, with the knowledge that it was for the last time.

The Living Age announces two new serials, beginning in October. "The Return of the Emigrant," by Lydia Miller Mackay, author of "A Lady of the Old Rebellion," recently printed in Blackwood's; and "The Good Comrade," by Una L. Silberrad, which English critics have hailed as one of the most pleasing stories by this writer.

The October Wood Craft has an elaborately illustrated article on the tenencies of joinery and furniture making, the essay having reproductions of notable specimens of modern and ancient craftsmanship. There is also a discussion of some suggested changes in the forms of woodscrews and the designs that have been attempted hitherto.

With the October number the new Putnam's Monthly will celebrate the first anniversary of its birth, and it has secured a remarkable list of contributors with which to start off the new year. Among the prominent writers appearing in the October table of contents are: Gov. Hughes, Cardinal Gibbons, Booker T. Washington, Tommaso Salvini, Sir George Trevelyan, Maurice Hewlett, John Kendrick Bangs, Carolyn Wells, W. H. Mallock, Arthur C. Benson.

The striking feature of Gunter's for October is "Prince Karl," the novel by Archibald Clavering Gunter, founded upon his comedy of the same name, which was played by Richard Mansfield. "Prince Karl" is the production in which Mansfield first starred and met with unqualified success throughout America as well as in London. Is is rather a coincidence that at the time of this great actor's death "Prince Karl" should be appearing for the first time in novel form.

A score or more of American humorists tell, in the October Bohemian, the secrets of their craft in an article entitled "How a Joke is Made." Another article, entitled "Being a Model," will dispel many mistaken notions which the ordinary American has held regarding the artist's model. Miss Blanche Bates, whose work on the American stage is attracting much attention, contributes to the October issue an account of her life entitled "My Yesterdays." The leading humorous feature of the number is "The Autobiography of Cupid," edited by Edward Marshall. In this feature the little god makes a clean breast of his long and busy life.

Edwin A. Abbey had made three characteristically fine pictures for the opening article in the October Harper's Magazine, illustrating Arthur Symons's critique of Shakespeare's "Troilus and Cressida." In the same number William Nicholson has a striking picture in color of a Morris dancer in England. This accompanies an article on May Day dances in Old England by the young English writer, Max Beerbohm. Charles Edward Russell writes very entertainingly about Burmah and the Irrawaddy River, under the title, "The River of Pagoda Land," in which he recounts some facts about Burmese women which are rather startling to western readers.

An interesting light is shed upon a timely topic in the Outing Magazine for October by F. P. Lahm of the United States army, who writes upon "Ballooning and Aerial Navigation." He reviews the history of ballooning in order to make the reader appreciate the importance which this new method of locomotion is coming to mean to science and to the different governments. "The Country Fair," by David Lansing, is an attractive illustrated account of a quaint institution that is now practically passed away. Stewart Edward White, who has made a close and exhaustive study of western social and industrial life, contributes to the October number the first of a series of papers on "Round-up Days."

Of timely interest and unique character is the characterization of Judge Landis by John T. McCutcheon in Appleton's Magazine for October. The cartoonist depicts the famous judge both in cartoon and comment. One of the best bits is a map of the United States made up of characteristic heads smiling at the $29,000,000 fine. The woman who has climbed higher peaks than any other has given her own account of her greatest achievements, illustrating it with photographs often taken in places where the very lifting of a camera was dangerous. In "The Looting of Korea," Homer B. Hulbert, for many years a most important educator in Korea, describes the Japanese methods of acquiring Korea.

Transatlantic Tales for October contains the complete novelette, "Crevalcore," from the Italian of Neera, and a dozen short stories selected from the French, German, Spanish and Swedish. In addition to the usual editorial pages of foreign literary comment and book reviews, this number contains the first of a series of articles in "Contemporary European Literature." For this department, which is to run through two years, the publishers have obtained the services of Drs. John Glanville Gill and Frederic Taber Cooper of Columbia University; Dr. Louis Delamarre of the College of the City of New York; Grace Isabel Colbron, Sinclair Lewis, Agatha M. Bullitt and L. B. Gorin. This first article is by Drs. Gill and Delamarre. It gives a detailed biographical and critical study of four famous Frenchmen, who have but recently died: Guy de Maupassant, Alphonse Daudet, Emile Zola and André Theuriet.

Everybody's for October has a striking cover, in white and scarlet, to advertise their leading article, "The Keystone Crime," by Owen Wister. This is the first comprehensive story of the scandalous cost of Pennsylvania's new Capitol, and in telling it Mr. Wister proves himself a publicist, as well as a novelist. There is the usual number of readable articles in the October number, notably "Celebrating a New Ireland," by Maude L. Radford, a suggestive account of the exhibition at Dublin, and "The Miracle-Workers," by Henry Smith Williams, giving some of the amazing recent achievements in industrial chemistry. Hartley Davis offers some interesting figures in "The Business Side of Vaudeville;" Leroy Scott relates the dramatic experiences of a woman revolutionist in Russia, and Charles E. Russell, in this month's installment of his series, "Where Did You Get It, Gentlemen?" resumes his study of the career of Thomas F. Ryan.

Some Matters of Special Interest to the Women.

DOMESTIC SCIENCE.

BY EMMA PADDOCK TELFORD.
[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

THIS is the time of the year when the woman who dotes on gathering in the rich treasure trove from wood and meadow, seashore and country roadside, finds herself in her element. For once the question of cost in dollars and cents is lacking. It is nature's "bargain" day, with everything free and chromos thrown in. All that is needed is the seeing eye, the nimble wit to discern possibilities in her free gifts and the strength and opportunity to garner them in.

SEA SHELLS.

In sea shells there are no end of delightful possibilities for Christmas presents. The little ones are exquisite lined into chains, necklaces, lampshades and even portieres if one has the patience to attempt so large a job. There is a new old-fashion this year of making dainty little jewel and workboxes out of the small shells, gluing them on to a pretty pasteboard box. The handsomest shells can be taken to a jeweler to be set in gold or silver, as hat, belt and stickpins and exceedingly ornamental they are.

WILD FLOWERS AND SEAWEED.

Pressed seaweed is exquisite to decorate the heads of notepaper or to be used on tally cards and dinner cards.

The directions given by an expert for mounting seaweed are as follows: Select stiff cards, white or tinted as prefered. With the seaweed (which is now in the best condition) a couple of deep basins of salt water, the cards or paper, a pair of tweezers to use in picking up the delicate structures and a camel's hair brush or wooden toothpick, one is ready to begin the work. Float a small mass of the specimens in one of the basins, then with the tweezers as it separates into parts, pick out a single plant and wash free from sand in the second basin. When ready plunge one of the cards under the water and bring directly underneath the cleansed specimen. Now holding the card at a sharp angle arrange the base of the specimen in the position desired, working out the filaments still under water with the brush, needle or toothpick. When spread out to the best advantage, bring to the surface of the water and the weed will be found to adhere without any difficulty. If any alteration is necessary, plunge under the water again. When the work is finished, drain off all the water possible, and cover the mounts with white cotton cloth, to prevent the seaweeds from adhering to anything else. When all are finished, press under heavy weights for several hours.

EDIBLE MOSSES.

Not every housekeeper knows the value of sea moss, both as food and medicine. While thousands of pounds of it are sold every year, foreigners are the usual customers. There are two varieties of the edible moss, the Irish dulse, a pretty purple red moss that comes in leaves and the Iceland moss that grows on the Massachusetts coast. The dulse is extremely salty and is used by the Irish particularly as a remedy for indigestion and stomach trouble of various sorts. It retails for about twenty-five cents per pound. The Iceland moss is excellent in pulmonary affections and for delicate desserts for those with impaired digestion. All that is essential for its preservation is to wash well, then dry.

TASTY WAYS OF COOKING ICELAND MOSS.

To make blanc mange let two tablespoonfuls of the moss remain in tepid water for fifteen minutes, then put in a strainer and hold under a faucet, allowing cold water to run over it for a moment. This removes the crude sea flavor. Put into a quart of milk and boil gently for fifteen minutes, then press through a colander to break up the moss. Some prefer to have all the moss retained. Sweeten and flavor to taste; pour into individual moulds to harden and when ice cold serve with cream. A change may be affected by strewing the moss with sliced peaches or pears; berries of any sort, sliced pineapples or oranges. Set on ice until chilled, then serve with whipped or

ICELAND MOSS SALAD.

Wash some of the moss well in hot water, place in a mould or glass dish, then cover with hot lemon juice. In a couple of hours the moss will have dissolved and coagulated into a solid jelly, which should then be set upon the ice to chill and harden. Arrange on a salad dish a few crisp leaves of lettuce, cut the moss into cubes and arrange in the center of the leaves, then arrange about a tart apple peeled and chopped and about the same amount of chopped celery. Cover with mayonnaise. A few nut meats may be added to the salad if desired.

ICELAND MOSS FOR THROAT TROUBLE.

Wash, boil half an hour in water, cover, strain, add sugar and lemon juice, then bring again to a boil. So great is the thickening quality of the moss that it is estimated that one quarter pound moss will make a gallon of clear, transparent jelly that may be flavored to suit the taste.

PINE NEEDLES AND CONES.

Of course, every one who goes to the mountains brings back as many of the aromatic pine needles as possible for cushions. A still greater comfort in winter are the resinous pine cones for open grates. One enterprising woman last year shipped home barrels of the cones. These were subdivided later, and sent out in small quantities for greatly appreciated Christmas gifts.

MUSHROOM CATSUP.

A very superior article to that sold in the stores may be made at home with almost no expense. It is not necessary to peel the mushrooms; simply wash quickly, rubbing with a coarse flannel, then break into bits. Place in a stone jar, allowing an ounce and a half of salt to every quart of mushrooms. Sprinkle the salt evenly over the gills and in about three hours, when the salt has penetrated the mushrooms, mash with a wooden potato masher. Let them stand in a cool place for three days, stirring and mashing several times a day. On the third day put over the fire in a porcelain kettle and heat slowly. When the juice flows freely, which will be in about half an hour, strain through a hair sieve. Measure, and to every quart allow an inch of ginger root, a blade of mace, a bay leaf, a pinch of cayenne and an ounce each of whole allspice and black pepper. Boil down to half the quantity and pack in a bottle holding a close pint. Fill in the top of the bottle with olive oil and seal with corks dipped in resin. If kept in a cool, dry place this may be preserved for a long time, but if carelessly corked and kept where it is damp it will soon spoil. Examine from time to time by putting a strong light behind the neck of the bottle. If a scum appears about it boil up again with a few peppercorns. A tablespoonful of this catsup will season a half pint of sauce with the full flavor of fresh mushrooms.

PICKLED MUSHROOMS.

The small button mushrooms are best for this. They should be as freshly gathered as possible. Cut the stems off quite close and clean the mushrooms without peeling by rubbing with a bit of new flannel dipped in salt. Throw into cold water lightly salted, but drain quickly and pat dry, or the moisture will affect the pickle. For each quart of the prepared mushrooms allow a scant quart pale white wine vinegar. Add to it a heaped teaspoonful salt, one half ounce white pepper, one ounce ginger, ground or sliced, a quar saltspoonful cayenne tied in a cloth with a saltspoonful of grated nutmeg and two blades of mace. As soon as the pickle boils throw in the mushrooms and cook eight or ten minutes, according to size. If there is an appreciable difference in size throw in the larger ones first and let them cook two or three minutes before adding the others. As soon as tender pack in small jars, dividing the spices equally between them. When cold seal airtight and keep in a cold place.

ALL MAY BE BEAUTIFUL.

An English Doctor Says Health and Happiness Are the Prime Essentials.

[Dr. Oldfield in London Mail:] You ask me who are the beautiful. I answer that they only are beautiful who are healthy and happy.

The longer I live and the more I see of beautiful women the more am I struck with the fact that underneath them all there are traces of one or both of the two great factors—happiness and health—and that where both are combined you may get a beauty of the rarest type.

Beauty is not a thing of tiny feet, all hardened with corns, or a small waist covering an indented liver, or a layer of powder hiding sallowness and spots.

A beautiful woman is something far more real than laces and fripperies, and far more reliable than powder and paint.

Health is an essential of beauty—not the negative health, which is "not ill" today, but may demand smelling-salts and a cup of strong tea and a day in bed tomorrow—but the positive health, which is full of vitality, and instinct with life.

Every woman ought to be beautiful. It is a woman's duty to be beautiful, and an ugly woman is a blot upon the landscape of life.

I have come to the conclusion that women who are ugly are so entirely through their own fault, and the fault is generally either laziness or selfishness.

Beauty, like all other good things, is the reward and crown of goodness and toil, and it is only given to those who work as well as wait.

Dyspepsia is the curse of beauty, and a healthy stomach is the center point of a brilliant complexion.

I remember Lady Paget telling me once that her experience was that the most beautiful-complexioned women were those who ate no meat.

My observation lead me to the same conclusion, but I have learned to add that in order to obtain a healthy skin over the whole body a woman should not only eat fruit, but should avoid wearing flannel next to her.

A fruitarian dietary, rainwater to wash in, porous linen undergarments, fresh air, exercise, and sunshine will transform a woman's face so that the glimmer of the ruddy apple will begin to peep into the face and the soft richness of the velvet peach will come into the skin.

In my opinion so much beauty is within the reach of every woman who will work hard enough to secure it that ugly women should be banished from the land on the ground that they are either too lazy to try or too selfish to give up their hot teas and strong condiments and blood-heating meat dishes.

Happiness is a second essential. A woman should be beautiful to her maid and to her husband, who see her at her worst, or else she is not beautiful.

A bad-tempered, fretful woman soon creates lines and wrinkles and poses which are essentially ugly, and the aftener she gives way to her vice in private the sooner will she lose her apparent beauty which is only for public eyes.

A woman grows old sooner than a man, because she frets over trivialties, and every fret leaves its stab on her transient beauty.

If a woman wants to be beautiful let her conscientiously lay before herself some type of beauty which she thinks ideal—I don't mean "the Gibson Girl," which at the moment is every shopgirl's pose.

And sooner or later—sooner than most people think—the plainness will become instinct with charm, and the goddess of her ideal will emerge in growing beauty out of her ugliness, like the glorious butterfly out of the repulsive caterpillar.

AN ANTI-CORSET CAMPAIGN.

Long and Successful Dress Reform Movement Carried on in Germany.

[London Daily Mail:] For ten years, writes our Berlin correspondent, the women of Germany have been making a determined struggle to bring the "Reformkleid" (reform-dress) into general use in that country, and their labors have been largely successful.

Almost every German Suffragette champions reform-dress doctrines. At one of the earliest "woman's rights" congresses held in Berlin all the delegates appeared in reform-dress, consisting of black, high-fitting, shoulder-strapped skirts, and loose black silk blouses. Entertainments in aid of the reform-clothing movement are periodically held in various cities of Germany, when it is common for a competition to be held, prizes being awarded to the best designs for reform-dresses. Large associations push forward the cause in Berlin, Munich, and Dresden. That the movement, which is fundamentally intended to do away with the corset, is meeting with a large measure of success is evident from statistics recently compiled, which prove that a marked decline is taking place in the number of corsets manufactured yearly.

The following are the chief principles which the advocates of reform clothing set up:

1. Liberation from all pressure upon any part of the body.

2. Diminution of the weight of clothing worn, substituting one light warm garment for several heavy ones.

3. Transference of the weight of the clothing to shoulders and hips, leaving the waist unburdened.

4. Cultivation of individuality in dress, replacing study of fashion by study of the character and daily life of the wearer.

In Germany the movement as a whole is not without its determined opponents not only among conservative women who cling to the present style of dress, but among medical experts, who energetically oppose the principle of letting the weight of the garments rest entirely upon the shoulders. This principle, they claim, may easily be as vicious in its results as that by which the clothing depends from the waist. Specialists for lung diseases declare that where the weight of the clothes is borne by the shoulders the latter are exposed to continuous mechanical irritation, which in time has a markedly ill-effect upon the lungs. They also aver that the reform-dress has a harmful effect upon the muscles of the back, since it forces the vertebral column into an unnatural position.

The Anglo-American Medical Association of Berlin, a prominent body of English and American medical men, also took a stand some time ago against the shoulder-strap feature of the reform-dress movement, in so far as it tends to promote narrowing of the chest.

Edith's Heroes.

THEY ARE INVITED TO DINNER AND FALL FROM THEIR PEDESTALS.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

There was no doubt about it, Edith Bannering was distinctly sentimental. For a week after reading Janice Meredith, sixteen-year-old Edith, with a long brown curl over one shoulder, and the collar of her gown turned in, was Janice. For two weeks after the initial performance by the members of the Shakespearean Club, Edith in the spare room counterpane and the crimson piano cover, was Juliet. The family shrewdly suspected that during this period the iceman was unconsciously doing duty as Romeo; for on more than one occasion Edith was seen to gaze tenderly down upon him from the safe vantage of the flower box in the attic window, that being the nearest approach to a balcony that the house afforded.

The family bore up under all this, with commendable fortitude

Before September was over, Edith was Queen Elizabeth; in the spare room pillow-shams, Marie Antoinette in cornstarch and impossible heels, and even Charlotte Corday behind grimy bars of the family gridiron. She was Joan of Arc at noon, and her relatives would say good-night to Lady Jane Grey at bedtime, only to be confronted by Lucretia Borgia at the breakfast table.

Had this been all, the Bannerings might have borne up under it; but there was worse to come. Edith, wearying of solitary heroines, began to look about for heroes. What was Josephine without Napoleon, Isabella without Ferdinand, or Mary, Queen of Scots, without Rizzio?

The iceman, having vanished with the summer, was unavailable for romantic purposes; but the black-eyed peanut vender, whom Edith passed every morning on her way to school, made an admirable Napoleon; the tall young man in the florist's shop did very nicely as Ferdinand; and Edith's imagination was sufficiently elastic to clothe the grocer's assistant in the picturesque garb of Rizzio.

One day Dayton, Edith's older brother, who was about as sentimental as a lobster, rappened to walk home from school with his idealistic sister. He saw the peanut vender exchange glances, not with the Empress Josephine, but with his—Dayton's—precious sister Edith. He saw the florist's assistant touch his hat boldly, not to Isabella of Spain, but to Edith, of America. He heard the grocer's young man say, not "By your leave, Your Majesty," but "How do you do, Miss Edith?" and Dayton was not pleased.

"You seem," said Dayton, with the unqualified severity of an outraged elder brother, "to have a circle of acquaintances. Are you in the habit of exchanging bows with all the bootblacks and street fakirs you meet on your way to school?"

"I know those young men quite well," replied Edith, loftily, "and they are not bootblacks. I often buy things from them. They are very pleasant young men. Don't you think that young Italian looks wonderfully like Napoleon?"

"No, I don't," returned prosaic Dayton. "He looks more as if he needed a bath."

A few days later, Dayton discovered Edith with a bag of peanuts in one hand, a bunch of carnations in the other, standing upon the grocer's doorstep, conversing with the grocer's young man. When Dayton reached home he told his mother about it.

"She's such a dear, friendly little soul," said Mrs. Bannering, "that I hate to tell her that she mustn't make a bosom friend of every person she happens to meet, even if that person does chance to resemble royalty."

But when Edith's schoolmates began to tease her about her conquests, when the neighbors began to hint to Mrs. Bannering that the girl was not too particular in her choice of associates, and when the peanut vender, the florist's assistant or the grocer's young man was continually at hand to escort Edith to or from school, Mrs. Bannering realized that the time had come for interference.

"If she were my daughter," said Dayton, shaking a threatening fist at a bunch of violets presented by the young florist, "I'd lock her up in her room and keep her there. I'll thrash those three chaps if you say so. Shall I?"

"Certainly not," said Mrs. Bannering, quietly. "I want you to invite them here to dinner."

"What!" gasped Dayton.

"I've decided," said Mrs. Bannering, "to let Edith invite them all here to dinner, tomorrow night. I told her I wished to meet her friends."

"Is it a trap?"

"Well, ye-es," admitted Mrs. Bannering.

The following day, Edith, radiant with anticipation, made elaborate preparations for the coming event.

At 6 o'clock the door bell rang. The Empress Josephine went joyfully down the stairs to greet Napoleon.

But what ailed him? There was certainly something amiss. In his coarse flannel shirt carelessly fastened at the throat, with his ragged hat on the back of his head, he looked like an Italian water color.

"Good," said Mrs. Bannering, after a keen glance at her daughter's transparent countenance. "I think our poor Napoleon has met his Waterloo."

A moment later Rizzio appeared. Mary, Queen of Scots, advanced eagerly to meet him. But after all the hand she offered him was a listless one.

What had happened to Rizzio? Nothing except that he had forsaken his daily apron and was tightly buttoned into an undersized frock coat. There was something wrong, too—Edith could not decide what—with his collar. His face and hands looked coarse and red and he was guiltless of cuffs.

"Mother," said Edith, without enthusiasm, "this is Mr. Muggins."

"Rizzio," thought Mrs. Bannering, shaking hands pleasantly with Mr. Muggins, "is now represented only by a small brown stain on the floor of one of the rooms of Edinburgh castle."

A third ring at the door bell announced the arrival of Ferdinand. Isabella of Spain flushed at the sound. Would Ferdinand, too, fail her? But no. Ferdinand had rented evening clothes, and was outwardly irreproachable. Isabella gave a sigh of relief. Mrs. Bannering was conscious of a pang of disappointment; for which she was instantly ashamed.

"He may be a thoroughly nice boy," said the conscientious woman. "I ought to be glad if I've been mistaken in him."

The table manners of the deposed Emperor were frankly bad.

Thoroughly disenchanted with both Napoleon and Rizzio, Edith turned hopefully to Ferdinand. Surely Ferdinand, at least, was all that her fancy had painted him and would not disappoint her.

Horrors! What was her Spaniard thinking of? He had tied his napkin about his neck by the two corners, had covered the remainder of his rented dress suit with the end of the tablecloth, and, with elbows on the table, was taking huge bites from an unbroken slice of bread, which he firmly grasped with both hands, as if he feared it might be taken from him.

"This," said Ferdinand, with his mouth full, "is the best bread I've seen since I struck this town."

And this complacent, ill-mannered young man was Ferdinand of Spain!

"Ferdinand," decided Mrs. Bannering, glancing at her silent daughter's downcast eyes, "has just died a natural death."

The evening was over at last. Rizzio discovered with evident joy that he, too, had an appointment to keep; and without quite knowing how it happened, Ferdinand, who had intended to remain for another hour, found himself shaking hands with all around and saying good-night, much to the relief of the now thoroughly embarrassed Edith.

Dayton observed, with consummate glee, that his thoroughly disillusioned sister went to and from school the following day by a tortuous route. Afterwards, the memory of her first dinner party was sufficient to deter Edith from making any more undesirable acquaintances, or discovering any new heroes. While she sometimes reappeared as Queen Elizabeth or as Joan of Arc, it was noticed that never again did she pose as the Empress Josephine, Isabella of Spain, or Mary, Queen of Scots.

ROAST LAMB. SLICED CUCUMBER.

Remember that lamb, like all immature meat, should be well done. Wash and remove the outer skin; place the cut sides on a very hot pan to sear the surfaces and keep the juices in; then set the pan in the oven. If the meat is seared before placing in the oven the heat need not be so great as it must be if the searing is to be done by the heat of the oven.

Roast, or, more literally, bake the lamb at a moderate heat which will cook the meat thoroughly without burning. If the heat is so great as to cause smoke in the oven, then it is too hot for cooking the meat properly. A leg of lamb requires a little over an hour for roasting, and if the heat is not too intense will need little basting. Salt and water tends to extract the juices and meat is much better seared, then roasted in its own hot fat.

Pour off superfluous fat, add flour and cook smooth; thin with boiling water and season with salt. Never serve strong favored vegetables with lamb.

Cucumbers should be well chilled, pared thin and dropped in ice water before slicing. Arrange on a glass or salad dish and serve with French dressing.

VANILLA CREAM. FROSTED PEACHES.

Soak one-half box of gelatine in one-quarter cup of cold water for fifteen minutes. Heat one pint of milk in a double boiler. Beat the yolks of five eggs in a quart bowl, add seven-eighths of a cup of sugar and turn on the boiling milk gradually. Beat constantly, then turn back into the double boiler and cook until thick and smooth. Add the soaked gelatine and one teaspoonful vanilla flavoring; beat and turn into a brick mold that has been rinsed in cold water. Set away to cool and harden.

Beat the white of an egg stiff and fold into two level teaspoonfuls of powdered sugar. Put a spoonful of this meringue on halves of canned or cooked peach and set in a moderate oven for about eight minutes to brown slightly. Serve the peaches cold as a garnish to the cream.

Sometimes a gelatine mixture refuses to leave the mould without breaking. If the shape permits, run a thin knife around the edges, then if it refuses to come out wet a cloth in boiling water and lay over the mould for a minute or dip it quickly into hot water.

A melon mould and a ring mould are very useful, but for other shapes, square or round tins, common bowls of various sizes, and for individual service, cups and little patty pans are even better than fancy moulds with designs stamped in them.

A Red Serge Coat Is Stylish.

This coat suit is a fine example of dressiness combined with economy, says the September Delineator.

Made of serge, of a rich and attractive red, its coat lined with gay plaid silk showing a satin hair line of the same red, it presents the effect of a much more expensive suit. Looking at the neat finish, the careful workmanship and the particularly smart lines, no one would dream it is a home-made affair, or that it cost exactly $3.70.

The plaid lining was a remnant, and only enough for the body of the coat, and strong serge lining was used for the sleeves. The interlining used was selesia. For winter wear, an interlining of canton flannel would be better, or of some lightweight woolen goods, such as one is apt to find in the family piecebag.

The bretelles and armhole bands which add so much to the smartness of the skirt, may be finished, like the belt, with a double row of machine stitching. If preferred, feather-stitching might be used, or, prettier still, the outer edges might be embroidered with buttonholed scallops worked in self-color, in black or in white.

Other variations will, no doubt, suggest themselves. A line of hand embroidery wrought directly upon the bands, or a piping of silk or velvet such as the piecebag might provide, would be pretty. The cost of the model illustrated is herewith itemized:

5 yards of red serge at 32 cents..	$1.60
Remnant plaid silk lining	75
1½ yard of sleeve lining at 50 cents	75
Buttons	22
1½ spool of sewing silk	15
1 yard selesia interlining	08
Pattern 1322	15
Total	$3.70

Teach the Child Good Manners.

It is good for parents to have foresight and save their child from many embarrassments when he is older by giving him a careful training in table etiquette, says the September Delineator.

The only way to teach young people these fine points of custom, is as Lewis Carroll said, to begin at the beginning. As soon as a child is old enough to use a spoon, he should be taught to hold it correctly. It isn't necessary to scold or even to admonish. Put the spoon properly into the baby grasp, with the fingers supporting it and the thumb above, and guide it in that fashion to the little mouth. Every time the spoon works around, as it invariably will into the overhand grasp of the tiny fist, reverse it gently, as a matter of course. The baby will hardly notice the process; but he will soon grow accustomed to the touch of the spoon on his fingers and learn the correct way without knowing that there is any other. When the child is old enough to use a knife and fork, teach him to hold them properly from the first day. If he has no silver "pusher" let him use a bit of bread crust to assist the fork and spoon. He should not be excused from the table till he has placed his knife and fork parallel with each other on his place.

The Cocks' Comb Trade.

"A trade in cocks' combs is gradually springing up," said a chicken farmer. "A New York hotel pays me a good price for all the combs I can supply."

"But do people eat cocks' combs?"

"Epicures do. The French love them; they mix them with giblets, and serve them in a great many sorts of sauces. We Americans are adopting French cooking more and more, and a French cook without his cocks' combs is almost as badly handicapped as a sharpshooter without cartridges.

"We got our taste for frogs' legs from the French, and is there anything more delicious than the leg of a frog? Now we are learning from these people to eat cocks' combs, which taste like an ethereal kind of liver, and before long, mark my words, we shall be eating the rich escargot, or edible snail."

A Peer Who Starts Women's Fashions.

Entomologist, sportsman, agriculturist and politician, Lord Walsingham, who recently celebrated his sixty-fourth birthday, is "several single gentlemen rolled into one," and has a variety of interests denied to the average man. His collection of moths and butterflies is the largest and most important in the world, and, by his generosity, is the property of the nation, to whom it was conveyed by deed of gift in 1901. A large part of it is in the Natural History Museum at South Kensington, and it is a curious and little-known fact that women's fashions are directly indebted to Lord Walsingham and his collection. Dressmakers and designers of court gowns go to the drawers and cases of butterflies and moths to study new combinations and contrasts of color, subtle shades of nature and harmonies of tone, which are to be beheld and studied there, and there alone.—[Tit-Bits.

The Right and Wrong of Music.

The person who imagines that a musical composition endeavors to outline a narrative or describe a sunset is wholly mistaken in musical understanding. The things a composer tries to express are far greater—or at least far vaguer—than the elements of a concrete romance. Whatever the skeleton of its form or the mathematics of its details may be, the spirit of good music is Mood—Mood with a capital M; and you know what a vague thing a mood is. It is like a fog; you can breathe it, see it, feel it; indeed you may not be able to get out of it; yet you cannot begin to draw an outline of it, says Rupert Hughes in the August Delineator.

When good music is cheerful, it is not cheerful like a comic-paper joke. The cheerfulness of cheerful music is the strange essence of delight that sweetens a spring breeze. You drink it in, and say, "It is April!" and forget your troubles in a curious bewilderment of bliss that you do not even try to explain. Or it is like the contagious rapture of a child that seizes your hand and makes you run along the street, then pauses with beaming eyes and gasps, "aren't we having a good time!"

The grief of sad music is—just grief, just heart-sickness, pure, unalloyed regret. It is the world-agony, the Weltschmerz, the ache of living, ashes of old fires. It is nothing more definite than the emotion you feel at seeing crape on a stranger's door when you walk along the street.

A Prize-winning Quintette.

[Dallas News:] Sulphur, I. T., has had an ocular demonstration of what the Indian Territory can grow. Five sisters, still youthful, met here for a family reunion whose combined weight is 1166 pounds. They have resided in Indian Territory for the past eighteen years and assign their robust health and avoirdupois to the salubrious climate of the Indian Territory. Mrs. Joe Maddox of this city entertained the other four sisters. Mrs. Maddox's weight is 241. Mrs. R. G. Carter, also of Sulphur, tips the scales at 217, while Mrs. A. R. Edwards of Franks is the family lightweight. She can claim but a paltry 207 pounds. Mrs. Seth Perrin, however, of Franks makes up for her sister's deficit with a goodly 265 pounds to her credit. Mrs. S. W. Cope of Wewoka is well toward the bottom of the list, she weighing but 238. These ladies are in the prime of life, hale and hearty. All but one have children and Mrs. Cope boasts of twin boys as robust as herself. Their reunion is the first time the sisters have met in five years. There are two brothers in the family who were not present. They are daughters of Seward and Rebecca Hale and came to Sulphur from Lamar county, Texas, and to Texas from Virginia.

No Home Without Love.

Did you ever stop to ask yourself just what made your home? The dictionaries describe "home" as an inanimate creation by the hand of man, a composition of weatherboard and plaster and stone facade. The home is something more, says the September Delineator. It is a living breathing, moving thing which is a definite, tangible part of one's life.

To make a real home atmosphere it is not necessary to have a spacious mansion, with a Monet or a Sargent hung upon silken-covered walls. Neither is it indispensable that oriental rugs should be strewn upon highly polished floors, nor must Brussels lace curtain the windows. Material wealth may adorn a home, but it cannot make it.

Gaunt, struggling poverty may come in at the door, but it cannot destroy a home where love is fresh between a man and a woman and binds together with all-enduring chains of affection the hearts of these and theirs. "Home" and "love" are synonymous terms. Upon love home depends for its very existence, and both must ultimately fail when they do not exist together.

The New Neck Line.

A charming line of neck decolletage is the newest one, dropping front and back into a low circular line, that is just over the half-circle limit, and consequently rises well up on the shoulders. This line is often given to the tucker or guimpe of tulle, lace or mousseline as well, while the corsage does not always go higher than a corselet passing under the arms. When that happens the guimpe also fits low on the upper arm and becomes part of the short close sleeve drapery. On a lovely figure the effect is charming. When the corsage mounts up it also fits over the shoulder in a long drooping line and has lace net or chiffon for sleeve finishes. The bodice in both instances is much trimmed back and front, and opens, of course, in the back. All tapering lines vanish with these new short-waisted bodices, so one must be reconciled to that feature.—[From Vogue.

Mock Pate de Fois Gras.

Put into a stewpan a calf's liver, thickly larded, adding two green onions chopped fine; two bay leaves, two blades of mace, six pepper corns, six whole cloves, a tablespoonful of salt, lump of laof sugar and one pint of stock. Cover and cook gently for two and one-half hours; when done remove and cut in slices, place on a platter and strain liquor over it. Stand aside over night, and next day pound to a paste, adding one teaspoonful of salt, one saltspoonful of white peper, and half pound of melted butter. Mix thoroughly, then press through a sieve, and pack in jars with melted butter poured over the tops, to keep it until ready for use.—[Housekeeper.

Some Hints on Cooking.

A little rich, sweet cream spread over the top crust of a pie just before it is put into the oven will make it brown and flaky.

Adding a teaspoonful of molasses to buckwheat batter will make the cakes fry a delicate brown.

A little flour sprinkled over the top of a cake will prevent the icing from running.

Custards and cereals should always be cooked in a double boiler.

When beating eggs add a pinch of salt to hasten the process.

If when making coffee just a little salt is added before pouring on the boiling water it will be found to greatly improve the flavor.

The Hand Embroidered Hat a Novelty

SO FASCINATINGLY becoming and pretty are the hats shown for winter that the only means of keeping the pocketbook even comfortably filled is to remain away from all millinery shops.

It is impossible to define the reigning forms. While all have certain resembling characteristics, no one among them can be said to be like any other.

There are large hats, enormously large hats, medium-sized hats, and the very tiniest of small hats.

Every imaginable material and ornament seems to be employed in the trimming, the only stipulation being that the hat when finished will be picturesque and a bit unusual.

When it comes to enumerating the trimmings used many of the new hats are really plain.

There are a number of big-brimmed hats which measure twenty-eight inches from side to side, and which are trimmed solely with cock's plumes, or huge bows of taffeta, plain or shot.

These are made of the full width of the silk tied in a loosely knotted bow, having two loops and two hemstitched ends.

The latter are placed so that they point to the back, while the loops stretch out in wing-like stiffness quite to the edge of the wide brim.

These bows are placed directly in front of the crown and require at least two yards for the making.

Most of the hats must be worn quite far back on the head to allow plenty of hair showing in the front and on the sides, otherwise the line will be unbecoming.

There are still many evidences left of the wide-brimmed straw hats of the summer.

These hats, while narrow just in front, broaden out rapidly toward the back. With the hair arranged just right, with the requisite number of puffs and rolls in the exact places where they all belong, this style of hat is essentially smart.

The large tam-o'-shanter crowns promise to be popular in the early part of the season, but it is hardly probable that they will continue in favor during the entire season.

It is always deemed necessary to include a black picture hat in the outfit of every season. It is astonishing how often a becoming black hat will be just what is needed with a certain costume.

In a black hat, however, detail counts for little, as it is the effect that must be sought.

There is generally a touch of ribbon somewhere on the winter hats, even on the most severe hats, for ribbon plays an important part in the season's millinery.

Light facings in drooping brimmed dark hats and dark facings in light hats often render becoming a model which might otherwise be unbecoming, but contrast facings are by no means the rule.

Big velvet choux in contrasting colors, or several shades of one color, are a trimming much favored for wide-brimmed hats of moderately high crown and otherwise without trimming.

Great velvet pansies and morning-glories are used as they have been upon the last season's hats.

Feathers of all imaginable and unimaginable kinds and ribbons, however, will be given the preference in trimmings.

There is much individuality to be displayed in the smart adjustment of the hats, and at present there is ample opportunity afforded along that line.

Comparatively few hats can be placed flat on the head, and yet if the angle formed is the barest thousandth part of an inch too great the effect is totally wrong.

To put a hat on in just the right position and then to keep it there, no matter how fiercely the wind blows, is an art that can be acquired, but only through patient studying and unceasing practice.

EACH AND ALL SOCIETY

CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK, PRESIDENT

WHAT HAS EACH AND ALL DONE FOR YOU?

A WHILE ago I asked you girls what you had done for Each and All. I have not had time to receive very many answers from that inquiry yet. They will make interesting reading when they all come, and I hope there may be thousands of them.

I am going to ask you another question to which I would also like many replies. What has Each and All done for you?

Before I give you a chance to answer that, however, I am going to make a little acknowledgment on my own account, for the sake of example and also as a matter of justice.

I would like to tell a little of what Each and All has done for me.

May I have the first say?

Well, it has given me an idea I never had before of the girlhood and womanhood of this country.

I have always liked girls and women as a class, loved a good many of them individually, and had some very dear friends among them who stood for all that one woman can mean to another, and that is a good deal.

But never, until Each and All began did I have an appreciation of how many fine, noble-hearted, unselfish girls and women there are in the world.

Evidences of the possession of these qualities by women who, until I knew them by letter, had been entire strangers to me, have come to me from all over, and I have felt with delighted astonishment that I was knowing and valuing my own sex as never before.

Another characteristic of many of these women which has come to me in the course of my connection with Each and All has been their courage.

Courage of the highest sort, which works uncomplainingly in the midst of constant discouragement and with no applause to cheer on to renewed effort.

If Each and All had done no more for me than to show me how brave women could be I would have felt everlastingly grateful to it.

But this has not been all.

It has brought me friends who have been an inspiration. It has introduced me to different sides of life from any I had ever known before, and has made me feel strongly how interdependent we all are and how much any one of us can do to be of service to others.

GIVERS ARE THE GAINERS

It has shown me how much we may gain by this ourselves—much, much more than we give, I am sure.

These are some of the things that Each and All has done for me.

Do you wonder that it has helped me and made life better worth living?

It has raised my own personal standards, too. If I feel inclined to lower them, the thought of how the girls believe in me and look to me, as many of them have been good enough to say they do, inspires and strengthens me.

For there is nothing in the world, to my way of thinking, which so moves one to high effort as to believe that by your living or doing you are helping some one else.

Feeling this as I do, I am sure that many of you Each and All girls will make much the same sort of report I have turned in, of the work Each and All has done for you.

I know there are members who are working for others all the time and to whom there is granted in return a belief, a love, a confidence, which must be the most uplifting and helpful thing possible.

Don't you find it so, you girls who are all the time being told that you are giving help?

Doesn't every evidence that you are of service move you to a desire to do more for the girls individually and for the society as a whole?

But there are other girls I want to hear from.

I have already told you often of the help that is being given to our invalids and of the letters I receive from our sick and our shut-ins, brimming over with gratitude and with wishes that they could do something in return.

Bless their hearts! as if they were not doing something all the time!

But I wonder if I have told you as much as I should of the girls who have been actively helped, of those to whom Each and All in the person of its members or of its chapters has reached out helpful hands in dark and lonely hours.

There are many of these, and their testimony is full and fervent.

They tell me that they have gained new faith in the world and in humanity by the treatment they have received from Each and All girls; that before this they had not dreamed there could be so much disinterested kindness in the world.

OF PRACTICAL SERVICE

In more directly practical ways, too, Each and All has been of service.

I have never kept track of the girls who have sold their work through the efforts of our members, who have learned shorthand or typewriting, painting or music, who have been directed in their studies, advised as to their work, led into a trade or a profession or a business by means of Each and All girls; but I know there have been many of them.

Word has come to me from girls who have been helped in all these ways and others besides.

Some girls have been improved in their English, helped about their languages, assisted in their sewing, taught different varieties of needlework, have had situations indicated for them, while the number of those who have been aided in their housekeeping or in their care of their children or who have received silk patches or postage stamps or reading matter or help of other kinds is legion.

Yet I know there must be many from whom I have never heard, and who could tell me of other ways in which Each and All has helped them.

Perhaps some of them might write as did one girl and say, "The biggest thing the society ever did for me was to let me come into it."

You may guess if that pleased me.

I wish you would all go to work helping the girls you know to have the same blessing.

Another thing Each and All has done for many has been to open their eyes to the needs about them.

We are all of us too prone to go selfishly about our own affairs, thinking little of how the other half or the other three-quarters or the other nine-tenths live.

It is a good thing once in a while for us to be shaken out of our selfishness and ease and get some idea of how the rest of the world goes on.

Part of it may not be so fortunate as we are.

We may think that we have a monopoly of hard times, and it does us good once in a while to be shaken up and have pointed out to us the fact that there are others worse off than ourselves.

It makes us look at our own mercies and be more thankful. It also, if we are the right sort, arouses in us a desire to do something to better the condition of those less fortunate than we.

EACH AND ALL PANCOAST

That may be called the beginning of the Each and All spirit, and from such a beginning we are pretty likely to go on to a satisfactory accomplishment which makes life fuller and richer for us than it has ever been before.

Has Each and All done this for any of you girls?

What else has it done for you? Has some one of our girls cheered you when you were depressed or rested you when you were tired, or shared your sorrow or your joy, or given you her help?

Has she taught you shorthand, or offered you books, or written to you when you were lonely, or showed you a fancy work stitch you wished to know, or advised you what books to read, or supplied you with a shirtwaist pattern, or done some sewing for you, or sent you a holiday remembrance or an "unbirthday present" to tell you that she was thinking of you, or visited you when you were sick, or done any of the thousands of things that are found in our Each and All work?

What she has done for you, the society has done, since it is not only each for all, but all for each.

Let us hear what form this sisterly spirit has taken. We shall all be the better for knowing of it.

Christine Terhune Herrick

WHAT THE MANY WORKERS ARE DOING AND THINKING

An Each and All Missionary

I AM 25 years of age, and work in an office. During the winter I devote my evenings to elocution.

In a thickly settled neighborhood I found two frail children. They spend Saturday afternoons with me, and after a good, substantial meal I take them to the seashore or out in the woods. E. W. S. (Everett, Mass.).

It did me good to read the above letter.

I can imagine what pleasure such outings mean to the little ones, and I have no doubt that other girls could find similar opportunities for helping. "E. W. S." must be a very busy member.

An Interesting Letter

I would be very glad to send any magazine to any member who would like it. Maybe some of our shut-in members might enjoy them.

I can talk French, although I do not write it very well. I would be glad to correspond in that language, as well as in German.

I am very much interested in drawing, and intend to take it up next year. I would also like to correspond with some one who is fond of animals.

I have had ever so many of them, and, therefore, have had a good deal of experience. Please put my name on the Postal Exchange.

PURITAN MAID (Sherb, Cal.).

I was glad to hear from this old member again. Her magazines will be most acceptable, I am sure; and I trust she may secure both French and German correspondents.

She should make a valuable addition to our Animal Aid Chapter, which I have asked her to join.

Stenography, Languages and Offers

I am willing to help, by correspondence, beginners in shorthand, and beginners in or those desiring to learn French. I studied under a teacher from Paris.

Will some member help me with German or Spanish? I never studied these, but am desirous of doing so.

I have many magazines to pass on, and will send postcard views to invalids, shut-ins and those desiring cards but not in a position to return any.

ISTER (Philadelphia, Pa.).

These are most generous offers, and I hope that in return "Ister" may receive assistance in German and Spanish. I am sure she would make an interesting correspondent, and I will be glad to supply her full address on receipt of a stamped envelope.

Wanted—A Spanish Translator

I am 21 years old, and have lived most of my life in and around Boston, although I have lived a while in the South, and also in Maine.

I see that Spanish is spoken of quite a little in the columns. I wonder if some of the members would translate the following verse. I came across it the other day and wondered what it was:

Querido corazoncito mio, adios:
Novia mia adios;
La queria y la quiero, si, mas que la vida
Esperba el tiempo en que la podria llamer mi mujer,
Tenia confianza en Ud. querida, creyendola sincera,
Dando Solo a Ud. el amor de mi corazon.
Querido corazon mio, adios.

M. L. G. (Boston, Mass.).

Here is a chance for our Spanish girls.

I hope "M. L. G." will not be disappointed in hearing from at least one of them.

Reading, Comments and Quilts

Now for a hint or idea to the readers. I found much interest, along with historical facts, in Henty's "With Lee in Virginia."

It is mostly a story of the Civil War period. I should like a study of the English language, along with our history, so few speak the language properly. Who else would like this?

I want to say a word on the question of married women's working.

I think it is often this way: If a woman begins to do outside work, it is expected of her afterward, when she has more to do at home than she can properly attend to. Some husbands I have known are like this.

I am anxious to make a club quilt or spread. My idea is to get coarse linen in squares, any desired size; have the club flower in natural colors, a yellow bee near it, and the monogram of the worker's name in blue, also near the center of the square. How does this strike you, girls?

Later on I shall call on some of you to work me a square.

Here is another fancy work idea which may be new to some: If you have a pretty little picture to mount, cut it round or oblong and lay it face downward in a plate, saucer or platter, as the size demands.

Mix plaster of paris with water to a moderate stiffness, and pour over the picture until about an inch in thickness. Let it dry this way and then hang up with ribbons.

One of our members asked for a cornbread recipe. There are a great many ways in different sections of the South for making cornbread, but the way we make it down in Virginia to eat with vegetables is to mix meal and clear water to a stiff dough, make it into long, thick, round loaves, and bake an hour in a very hot oven, until a thick brown crust forms.

It is mostly the grinding of the meal that makes it good bread, though. Rapid grinding spoils the meal There are other ways of making with sour milk, eggs and soda.

Mrs. M. C. (Rondo, Va.).

This letter is full of helpful suggestions.

I hope the writer will be successful with the quilt she is planning to make. The cornbread recipe may not come amiss for some other members.

Quilt Patches Wanted

I would like very much to get some patches. I need them, as I have a number of quilts started. I will do anything in return that I can.

Mrs. A. N. (Parsons, Pa.).

Another quilt maker.

Who can help her out?

A Housekeeping Girl

I wonder if there are in the club girls who are keeping house for their fathers or brothers?

When I was 14 years of age (I am 21 now) the home cares were suddenly thrust upon my shoulders by the death of my grandmother, with whom I had lived. There was no one to keep house for grandpa after that except my own small self.

The family all looked to me to help them and take care of them at home, and with many fears I started out to do it.

I have succeeded, and my work in that line was done two years ago, when the dear grandfather died and the rest went to pleasant homes of their own.

But only those who have experienced the mistakes and disappointments can know what it cost me.

Now, I want to help these young housekeeping girls. I can send them many little helps along the way; also recipes, if they want them.

I am very much interested in art. Last winter I studied charcoal drawing and pen and ink work. I was born in Maine, and until two years ago lived there, so I am going to adopt the motto of my dear home state for my club name. DIRIGO (Cambridge, Mass.).

There is always great satisfaction in looking back upon duties well performed, and "Dirigo's" experiences have no doubt made her a most unselfish girl.

Who would like to receive the help she offers? Send me a stamped envelope for her address.

Suggestions for Fancy Work

I am going to try to help some of the girls in some way, if I can. I have a few suggestions to hand in which I learned in school this last winter.

One extremely pretty and useful article is a screen made of pongee. There are three leaves, each leaf having a design complete, or else the three leaves together, making a design. The design is drawn on paper and then cut out to make a stencil.

Stretch the pongee on a table, place the stencil on and draw around it. You can paint the design if you wish, or work it with silks of the same shades. We made our own frames and fastened the pongee on with fancy headed tacks.

Of course, the wood is painted or varnished or enameled. The screen can be made of linen or nearly any material. I also have a number of suggestions to make in regard to hammered brass or copper, which any one can have for the asking.

"Alice J." of Haverhill, Mass., wished to know how to mix paints for satin or silk. Just use a good quality of water color paints, and mix a grain darker than the colors wanted. By doing this I am quite sure she will have no trouble. M. D. (Megansett, Mass.).

A screen like the above should be most attractive when finished—and is not so very difficult to make, either.

I trust the last paragraph will meet the eyes of "Alice J."

Work Wanted

I would be glad to knit lace for flannel underskirts at a reasonable price, if any one cared for it.

I am one of the married girls living far from home and friends, and would be glad to do something to take up my time, as I get very lonely.

Mrs. G. W. H. (Auburn, Maine).

This member can probably do the work suggested in the preceding letter.

I trust the girls will give her so many more orders that she will forget her loneliness.

Orders Wanted for Painting

I would like to sell or exchange painted doilies or painted sofa cushion covers. The painting for the cushions is to represent embroidery, and is very pretty.

I would sell the painted cushion covers for $1, unfinished, and the doilies for reasonable prices.

Z. E. V. (Bakersfield, Cal.).

I am sure many members will wish to avail themselves of the above offer.

Such articles will make attractive holiday gifts, and for the girl who has many to remember at Christmas time, it is none too early to start planning now.

One of Our "Reading" Girls

I love to read stories of travel, history, college stories and some books of fiction.

Perhaps you would like an explanation of the name I have signed. There were at one time two great lords in England called the Duke of York and the Duke of Lancaster. Their struggle for the throne of England was called the War of Roses, because the symbol of the Duke of York was the white rose, while that of the Duke of Lancaster was the red rose.

So they were called "The White Rose of York" and "The Red Rose of Lancaster." Their disputes were finally settled by the son of the Duke of York marrying the daughter of the Duke of Lancaster.

I think this is correct, and if not I would like to be corrected.

I will do anything I can for the girls if they care to write to me.

I prefer correspondents between 14 and 16 years old, as I am 14 myself.

THE RED ROSE OF LANCASTER (Lancaster, Pa.).

Who wishes to correspond with this member?

I shall be glad to furnish her full address if return postage is sent.

Cannot Pay Postage or Express

I will send some things to any of the club girls if only they will pay mail charges or express, for I am not able to pay out the money. G. S. (Fall River, Mass.).

This is another cripple who needs that cheer and brightness Each and All can give her. I am not sure of what she has to offer the girls, but they can learn by writing to her, and I am sure she would be glad to get letters.

One of Our Grandmother Girls

I am sorry to say that I had to give up any thoughts of helping outside of my family, for soon after I joined Each and All a little stranger (my grandson) arrived and kept me busy sewing and working in every way, the mother of the little one not being strong.

Then I am also interested in church work, sewing and helping out here and there for a neighbor. I should like to send quilt patterns, or to exchange with the members.

A. M. (Cambridge, Mass.).

Some of our other grandmothers should write to this member and compare notes.

A Report, a Suggestion and a Request

You ask me to tell you what I am doing for Each and All. Every day I am giving a few minutes to some one that needs help, besides teaching a child who cannot afford to pay for lessons.

I wonder if the members who have automobiles or carriages ever realize how much pleasure they can give to less fortunate persons, especially convalescents, by taking them out? What if they are strangers! One meets many lovely persons by doing this, besides giving pleasure to those who cannot afford a vehicle and are unable to walk.

Any member interested in music, art or literature, especially Ben Jonson, who would like to correspond, may get my address from you.

I shall answer all promptly. I wish some member in Philadelphia, who belongs to an orchestra or musical society, would write to me. I think she could help me if she would do so. If some girl who would like to help another in harmony will write to me she can be of great assistance to me. I will return the favor in any way I can. TEMPO (Gloucester, Mass.).

The suggestions in this letter are all of value, and I hope they may be followed. I trust, too, that the desired correspondents may be found.

OBJECTS AND AIMS OF EACH AND ALL

PERHAPS some of you, seeing this page for the first time, wonder just what the Each and All Society really is; what there is about its aims and objects to create so widespread an interest among "young girls of all ages."

The society was founded in February, 1905, with Christine Terhune Herrick for its president, and with an almost instant membership of girls in nearly every state in the Union and in Canada.

Its object is to help girls help themselves by developing their talents into something the world wants; to solve difficult problems—the sort a girl wants a calm, unbiased, out-of-the-family opinion upon—and to promote the exchange of general help.

Any girl may belong. There is no red tape about it. The sending of your name for membership gives you the range of every opportunity the society boasts. And Mrs. Herrick stands ready to welcome, to advise and to help.

Cabbage Bags

I do some netting and I would gladly exchange one of my cabbage bags, of which I make quite a number for my friends, and which all housekeepers have found very useful. I am a nurse, but I do not confine myself to one city. M. M. C. HELPFUL (Brockton, Mass.).

I am sure some girls will be glad to make this exchange.

She Wishes Plants and Patterns

If there is any one who has a few plants or slips to give away, and any one who will give me a shirtwaist pattern, size 32 bust, and a skirt pattern, size 22 waist measure, I will be very grateful. I cannot pay postage on these. Mrs. W. H. B. (Newtonville, Mass.).

Can any member supply these wants?

A Kindly Spirit

There is not much I can do, but if there is any invalid that I can help I shall be glad to do so.

H. M. (East Boston, Mass.).

I hope there may be some invalid whom this member can help.

Chapter Reports

I am glad to have some interesting reports of different chapters to give today.

The Pansy Chapter

I am writing our first monthly report. There are now six girls in our club. One is to be away for the summer. We have had two meetings, so have just got started.

Our work is not fully established, but we have decided to send clippings to shut-ins, and are going to make a miscellaneous box for some home or hospital. Next meeting we will send off clippings and dress dolls. Each meeting we have a certain work to do, and we hope to do a little good.

A HOME GIRL,
Pres. Pansy Chapter (Ventura, Cal.).

The Utopian Chapter

On the afternoon and evening of June 26 and 27 the Utopian Club held a rummage sale. Ten dollars were realized after all expenses were paid. The proceeds are to be devoted to charity. The members worked hard to make the sale a success, and I think we can safely say that we did make a success of it, even if it was on a small scale.

We are now working for a fancy work sale to be held probably in October. We are also working for our Christmas tree for the poor children. We would be glad of any donations the girls may choose to make to either or both.

I have enjoyed the work of the club to a great extent; we are happy-hearted girls, doing our best "to make this world a little sweeter place to live in."

A. M. S., Sec. Utopian Chapter (Dorchester, Mass.).

These are gratifying reports, and I would like to have similar ones from our other chapters. They are of interest to us all.

Another Offer of Work

I will be glad to help any one who has fancy work for sale, if such girls will write to me.

Mrs. J. J. T. (San Francisco, Cal.).

I shall also expect many requests for this member's address. Enclose return postage when writing to me for it.

For Lovers of Antiques

Will you ask the girls, who are collecting things many years old if they would like to add to their collection a toaster, such as was used in open fireplaces years ago? I have one I would like to exchange for something useful.

FAITH (West Fitchburg, Mass.).

I know some one will be eager to make such an exchange. "Faith" has been successful in making other exchanges through Each and All.

Student Nurses

The Tulsa Hospital Association has vacancies for pupil nurses, and those wishing to apply can secure the name of the superintendent from Mrs. Herrick.

Miss H. C. C. Z. (Tulsa, Indian Ter.).

I have had many letters from would-be nurses, and perhaps some of them would like to accept the above offer. Send me a stamped envelope for the superintendent's name.

CHARITY

When you meet with one suspected
Of some secret deed of shame,
And for this by all rejected
As a thing of evil fame,
Guard thine every look and action,
Speak no word of heartless blame
For the sland'rer's vile detraction
Yet may soil thy goodly name.

When you meet with one pursuing
Ways the lost have entered in,
Working out his own undoing
With his recklessness and sin,
Think, if placed in his condition,
Would a kind word be in vain,
Or a look of cold suspicion
Win thee back to truth again?

There are spots that bear no flowers,
Not because the soil is bad,
But the summer's genial showers
Never made their bosoms glad.
Better have an act that's kindly
Treated sometimes with disdain,
Than, in judging others blindly,
Doom the innocent to pain!

CORRESPONDENCE AND POSTCARD EXCHANGE

ADDRESSES of correspondents and postcard collectors will be given only to other members of Each and All.

In order to secure these, the signature and place of residence as printed on the page should be sent to me, accompanied by a stamped and self-addressed envelope for reply.

I found your talk about postcard collectors very interesting and helpful. I have no fault to find with any of my correspondents, of whom I have fifteen.

They are most all prompt in answering.

My postal collection is steadily growing larger. Don't you think it a nice idea to make a large frame for our membership card of some of our prettiest postcards?

I do not object to leather cards, but want no comics.

FLORENCE E. (Los Angeles, Cal.).

Miss M. C., of Manayunk, Philadelphia, Pa., is a shut-in, whose hands are so swollen and sore that she cannot write herself. As her dearest friend, I ask the girls please to send her postcards; they come as messages of love to an invalid. SIDNEY (Manayunk, Philadelphia).

I should enjoy corresponding with a few nice young married ladies of about 22 years—my own age. I have been married six years and have one roguish little [illegible] of 5 years.

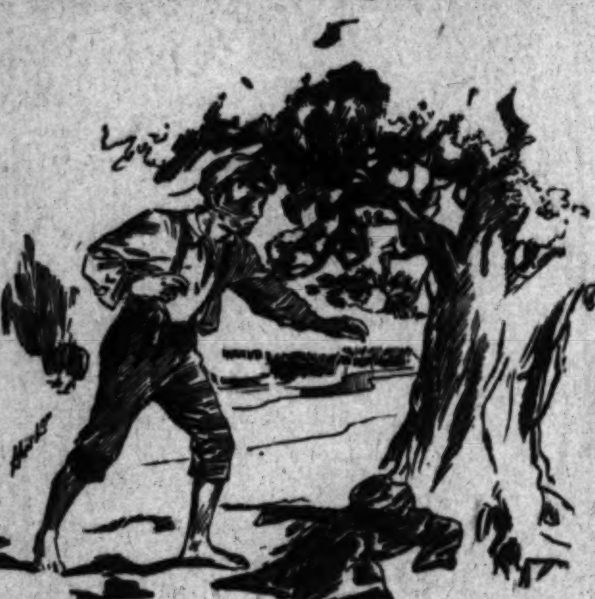
YE FA LCONER

POLLY EVANS' STORY PAGE FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

(Copyright, 1907, by The North American Company.)

The Succession of Billy



SURPRISED TO SEE SKINNY'S CLOTHES

IT HAD to come sooner or later. Skinny was a fine leader and all that—he could scheme like sixty and carry out his plans, too—but for impetuous daring and skill in battle he didn't hold a candle to Billy Mumford.

The only reason Billy hadn't captured the leadership in the beginning was because he had come to Homeville comparatively recently, when the "Bloody Robbers" were already well established.

Besides, Skinny had lost his gun. With it went a great deal of his influence. True, Skinny was quick to realize Billy's ability, and had made him his first lieutenant, but the job was becoming too small for him and he was looming up big as a future captain.

Naturally, Skinny did not like to step out of the position he had occupied so long and so ably. Bearing this in mind, one may well be surprised to learn that Skinny resigned of his own accord and opened the way for Billy to become captain. And "thereby hangs a tale."

"Let's take a whack at the Swimmin' Hole," urged Skinny, on this day of momentous happenings, as he and Billy were sitting, with legs dangling, on top of cracker boxes before Fowler's grocery store.

Billy, who was indulging in the gentle pastime of coaxing the grocery cat to him and then kicking it away, was not at first inclined to stir. But as Skinny insisted, he finally assented and dropped lazily to the ground.

Once at the Hole, the two took a dip and then seated themselves on the broad flat rock.

"Think I'll take a look in the tunnel," remarked Skinny.

Billy shook his head. "Don't you do it," said he; "water's high after yesterday's rain and the place must be about flooded out."

"Oh, it'll be all right after I get inside," returned Skinny. "I think I'll move along."

"Well, all right; I'm going up to the bend to see if I can't land a sunny," announced Billy, taking his lines and hooks from his pocket, and proceeding to look for a tree which would furnish him a fishing pole.

So they separated, going in opposite directions.

It is necessary to describe the tunnel rather carefully, since it had everything to do with the adventure that happened shortly afterward.

At the place where the tunnel was located the creek made a deep bend. Upon the river side of the bend there opened in the bank a cavern with a good-sized mouth. At the other end of the cavern was another mouth. As the cave ran in the same direction as the creek part of the creek flowed right through the cavern, going in at one mouth and out the other, to join the main body of the creek beyond.

The roof of the cavern was about eight feet high, and along the wall farthest away from the main part of the creek there was a sort of shelf. It was upon this shelf that the boys liked to sit watching the water flowing over the bed of the cave. In the roof of the cave there was a little hole, opening all the way upward. Whenever one boy wished to know if another chap was in the cavern he always shouted down this hole.

Now, as Billy had said, the water of the creek had risen until it was really above the mouth of the tunnel.

But Skinny knew he could dive through the opening under water. Once inside, he could climb on the shelf out of reach of the water, and the hole in the roof would give him enough air.

Skinny got through the opening all right, and was soon perched upon the shelf.

"This'll be a stunt to talk about," said he, for no "Bloody Robber" had as yet dared enter when the water rose above the entrance and the exit.

Skinny found it so comfortable that before he knew it he had fallen asleep.

Meanwhile another rain came. It was a frightful downpour. Billy ran from his place on the bank of the Bend to the old springhouse nearby, and remained sheltered there until the storm had passed.

Then he went in search of Skinny. Arriving at the cavern, he was surprised to see Skinny's clothes, thoroughly soaked, on the bank alongside.

"That's mighty funny," said he to himself; "wonder if Skinny's there and doesn't know it's been raining?"

"Hello, Skinny!" he shouted down the hole in the roof of the cavern.

"That's funny, too!" muttered Billy, beginning to grow uneasy.

"I'm goin' to see what's the matter," said he with decision.

Hastily stripping, he dived through the entrance of the cave, high above which the water now splashed. Once within, he rose to the surface, to find that the shelf was barely an inch above the water.

And there on the shelf lay Skinny, unconscious, a jagged cut in his head, from which blood was steadily flowing.

Billy was horrified. He was quickly at the side of his comrade. Raising his head, Billy shouted, "Skinny! Skinny! Wake up!"

The eyes half opened. Skinny looked around in a dazed, bewildered way, and then they closed and the head dropped weakly back again.

"Got to get out of here some way!" Billy muttered, between clinched teeth. "So here goes for it!"

Grasping the insensible lad in his arms he dived madly back through the cavern's entrance. He was swept back by the swift water, but he fought desperately on, until, with the water ringing in his ears and his head whirling, he at last rose to the surface outside. He struggled to the bank, where, exhausted, he flung himself on the ground.

"Come, this won't do," he gasped, rousing himself and donning his clothes. Glancing at Skinny, Billy found that although the blood had ceased flowing, he was cold and white and showed no signs of "coming to."

Half dragging, half carrying him, Billy at last got over the quarter of a mile that lay between the creek and the pike. Not a step further could he go. Sobbing, he threw himself down beside Skinny.

"I've done my best, Skinny, but I've just got to rest," he moaned; "soon's I can I'll go for some one—some one to take you home! Do you hear me, Skinny?"

Fortunately at this moment old Farmer Jones, the "Robbers'" deadliest enemy, drove along the pike.

"Hello! What's this?" he exclaimed.

"Why—why—" began Billy. Then he fainted.

Farmer Jones tenderly lifted the two into his spring wagon and drove with all speed to the office of Dr. Byers, thereby winning the eternal gratitude and friendship of the entire band of "Bloody Robbers" when they heard of it afterward.

Billy was on his feet in a day, but it was a week before Skinny recovered from his wound and exposure.

No sooner was he able to be out than he called a meeting of the "Bloody Robbers" at "Robbers' Cave."

There Skinny told of how he had tried to dive out through the cavern, but had struck his head severely against the rocks. Almost stunned, he was just able to pull himself back on the shelf when he fainted. Then he knew no more. From Farmer Jones Skinny had been able to gather the remaining information, and he proceeded to tell what a hero Billy had proved himself.

HALF DRAGGING, HALF CARRYING HIM

"Fellers," he said, in conclusion, "I don't want to be your captain any more. But I do want it to go to the fellow who earned it, and who saved my life," and he seized Billy's hand.

Billy then and there declared he wouldn't be captain, and wanted to know why "every one should make such a darn fuss over such a little thing, anyhow," but the "Robbers" insisted, and cast a unanimous vote for him.

And so Billy came into his own.

Toto, the Wicked Prince

PRINCE TOTO was probably the naughtiest little prince there ever was. He kicked and scratched and bit most every one who came near him, and became a terror to his nurse and others who waited upon him.

Of course, he was given nearly everything he wished. When he couldn't have what he desired, he became unusually vicious and disagreeable. During bad weather he was at his very worst. Then he would go up to the roof of the castle, where was always stationed a royal astronomer, and command that official to have good weather sent immediately. When the dignified gentleman would explain that that was impossible, the naughty prince would pull the astronomer's beard or throw away his cap.

Things came to such a pass, however, that complaints began to reach the king himself. The king was very much shocked at these reports of the prince's misbehavior.

He at once issued a proclamation offering a great reward to any one who would rid his son of such evil traits.

For a time no one appeared, but at last there came to the king an uncouth giant, with great long nails, tusks for teeth and long, pointed ears.

"I am a genie sent by the good fairy who watches over your kingdom," he explained, in answer to the look of wonderment upon the king's face. "Have no fear; I shall take good care of your son and return him to you completely cured."

So the king finally permitted the giant to take the prince with him. The prince wasn't the least bit willing to go, but whether he would or no, he was forced to seat himself upon the back of a great goose, the giant bestrode another, and in a second's time they were flying swiftly through the air. Toto hung on for dear life, fearful every moment that he would take a bad tumble.

"Don't feel so much like kicking and biting and scratching now, eh?" asked the genie.

After a while they landed near a great lake. Strange to say, across this lake there stretched a very narrow plank.

Toto was made to walk across the lake, the genie walking on the water beside him and pricking him with his sharp nails when he didn't move fast enough. To poor Toto that bridge seemed like a mere thread, and the distance he had to go more than 100 miles.

When this feat was accomplished the

giant announced:

"Now we shall pay the old magician a visit. He'll cut off your head and put another one on."

Prince Toto pleaded and cried and promised, but all in vain.

When they reached the cave of the magician, the old man came out in response to the genie's call.

"Yes, indeed," said he, "I have lots of boys' heads left; and this little boy is so naughty that he surely needs another one. I only give the very, very bad boys new heads, you know."

Down on his knees Toto begged to be allowed to keep his own head, promising that never more would he be naughty.

At last the magician listened to his entreaties and let him go.

The genie led Toto back to his father's castle. As they approached it he whispered into the prince's ear:

"Now, remember, if ever you should become bad again I shall call for you and take you to have your head cut off."

But Toto kept all his promises, and every one wondered at the delightful change which had taken place in the prince who was once so wicked.

A Short Story of Jenny Lind

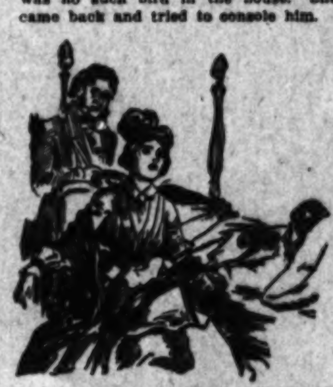
DO ANY of you young people know of this famous singer?

I do, and what a lovely, charming person she was! We read often of the beautiful songs and melodies she sang—not in concerts, but so often to cheer a sick-bed.

On one occasion a young man was very ill, and while he was lying suffering he heard, as he thought, a bird singing a beautiful song in the house.

He begged his mother to get the bird, for he knew it would help him to get well.

In making inquiries, she was told there was no such bird in the house. She came back and tried to console him.



THE MAN'S SURPRISE WAS GREAT

Again, later on, the same beautiful song! She hurried to where the sound came from, and, knocking at the door, begged the lady to lend her the bird, as her boy was so ill.

Her astonishment was great when the lady said she had been practicing for a concert, adding, "If I can do him any good, I will come and sing the songs to him."

The young man's surprise was great when he found the beautiful songstress was Jenny Lind.

Such a gift as hers had never been known before, and in a concert one could hear a pin drop when those delicious, bird-like trills were sung, ever sweeter than birds themselves!

E. K. O.

He Ate All Five

THE wandering minstrel paused outside the house of the great nobleman, for the savory smell of roasted fowls was borne to him on the air and he was hungry—very hungry, indeed.

To rest himself he calmly sat upon the steps of the nobleman's house, where the nobleman himself came across him a few moments later.

"What do you here, caitiff!" roughly demanded the great man.

"But resting, my lord, and dreaming of the fowls I smell in yonder kitchen," boldly replied the ragged minstrel, whose harp had already been sold to buy him bread.

The nobleman reflected. "Knave," said he, at last, "thou shalt have thy dream realized; thou shalt eat fowl, but unless thou makest way with the whole five of them I shall roast thee and have thee served for my dinner."

The five pullets were brought in and placed before the minstrel.

"May I give each a name, sir?" asked he.

"Thou mayest if thou dost so fancy," assented the nobleman.

"Then I christen the first Jonah's Stomach; the second, Jonah; the third, Whale's Stomach; the fourth, the Whale, and the fifth, the Sea." Whereupon the minstrel seized the fifth pullet, devoured it with the keenest relish, and calmly proceeded to walk away.

"Hold! thou hast not eaten the five pullets!" cried the nobleman.

The minstrel smiled. "Have I not swallowed the Sea," said he, "and the whale who hath swallowed Jonah and Jonah's Stomach hath in turn been swallowed, together with its stomach, by the Sea; therefore, in swallowing the Sea do I not swallow them all?"

The nobleman admitted that he had been outwitted, and presented the departing minstrel with a well-filled purse.

Confessing a Fault

IN THE first place, Beatrice was forbidden to look into that particular bureau drawer. So that when she drew forth the pretty inkstand, perhaps it was the guilty thought that made her hand shake so that the inkstand dropped to the floor and was shattered to pieces.

Beatrice was naturally very truthful, so she really was surprised at herself when she told her mother that Fluffy, the cat, had done the damage.

Mother merely shook her head, as though to say that cats didn't open bureau drawers, but she uttered never a word.

After thinking it all over, however, Beatrice just had to confess.

"Now that you've owned to your fault, I won't punish you further," said mother; "but you must wear the dress you have on when you go out to play."

Beatrice looked down at her dress, and there she saw for the first time a big ink spot. You can't imagine how bad she felt when each friend she met asked her about the spot. It reminded her always of her untruthfulness.

Deer-Hunting

MR. JONES never tells about the time he went out to hunt deer and was hunted himself.

He had an idea that if he wore a pair of antlers on his head, the deer would be unsuspecting, and he could readily stalk his game.

He really got along finely for a time. Having approached quite near the deer, he was just about to take a shot, when bang! rang out a shot not far from him, and a portion of his antlers were shot away.

A party of hunters, who had also come out to hunt, had seen the antlers and mistaken him for a deer. Mr. Jones had the narrowest escape of his life.

He still insists that antlers are the best thing to wear when hunting deer, but his friends all notice that he has never worn them again.

Just the Tail Moved.

Elizabeth was asked to go into the next room to see if the clock there was going. Shortly she returned with this information:

"Clock is standin' still, but the tail is waggin'!"

"Song of the Sea Shell"

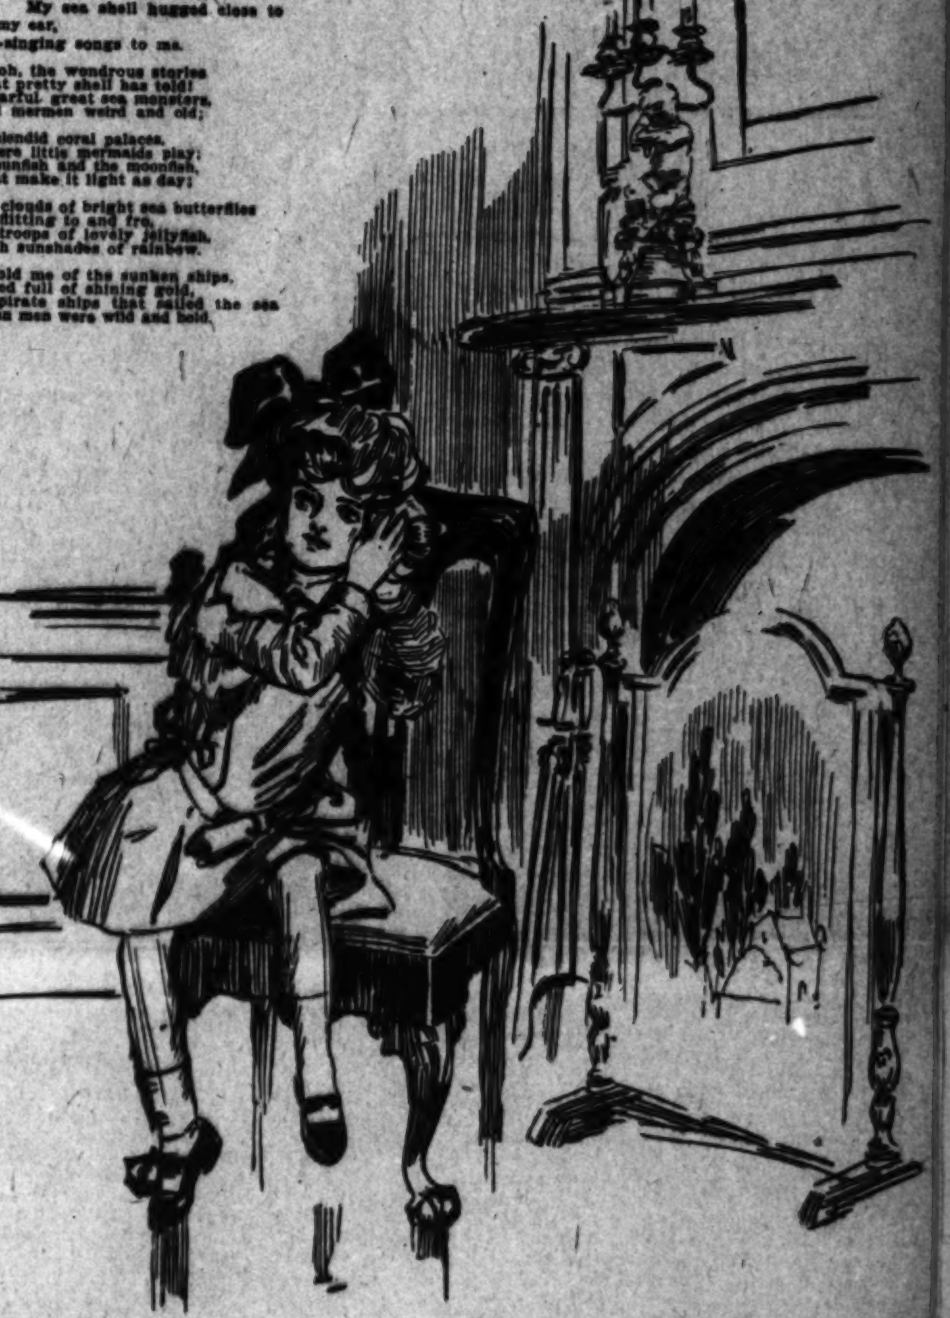
WHENEVER I am lonely,
I sit beneath a tree,
My sea shell hugged close to my ear,
A-singing songs to me.

And oh, the wondrous stories
That pretty shell has told!
Of fearful great sea monsters,
And mermen weird and old;

Of splendid coral palaces,
Where little mermaids play;
The sunfish and the moonfish,
That make it light as day;

How clouds of bright sea butterflies
Go flitting to and fro,
And troops of lovely jellyfish,
With sunshades of rainbow.

It's told me of the sunken ships,
Filled full of shining gold,
The pirate ships that sailed the sea
When men were wild and bold.



It's told me of the horses
That gallop through the sea,
With merry nymphs astride their back
All shouting, full of glee.

It's told me of the gardens
Where dainty seafans grow,
And plants of splendid colors
Wave gently to and fro.

Just think of all the pleasure
My shell has brought to me—
A little country maiden,
Who never saw the sea!

Won the Overcoat

GOVERNOR JOHN A. JOHNSON, of Minnesota, was employed as clerk in a drug store in his youth. He became so valuable that at the age of 16 he received as wages $75 a month.

As he had his mother and eight brothers and sisters to support, however, he denied himself everything except extreme necessities.

He secured his first overcoat under rather peculiar circumstances. It was in the month of December and his employer noticed that the lad had no other protection against the cold than a thin alpaca coat. So the druggist offered him a fine overcoat.

The boy thanked him and said that he did not need it, and if he did need one he could buy it.

His employer looked at him rather curiously for a moment. "I see," said he. "Now you take this coat or I'll discharge you. I guess you won't be able to wander down the street and buy another job, eh?"

John took the coat and kept his job.

Ballooning Adventure

MR. WIMBLEDON was an enthusiastic bather. Upon this day he had taken his customary morning dip and had returned to his bathhouse to dress. These little bathhouses along the English seacoast are just about big enough for one to turn around in.

Along came a balloon, with anchor dragging. Somehow, the anchor became fastened in the roof of the bathhouse, the house was lifted up and away went the balloon with the bathhouse at the end of the anchor. A good stiff wind had set in and the balloon was swept rapidly across the channel. Then the anchor became unloosened again, and the bathhouse was deposited gently on the shores of France.

Mr. Wimbledon, in the meantime, had been searching frantically on the floor of the bathhouse for a collar button. When finally dressed, he opened the door and stepped out.

You can imagine his surprise when he found himself in an unfamiliar country, and how it increased when he learned that he had been transported from England to France in a few minutes.

Concealed Them.

Joe came to school for the first time. In one hand he carried a cap and in the other a bunch of bananas.

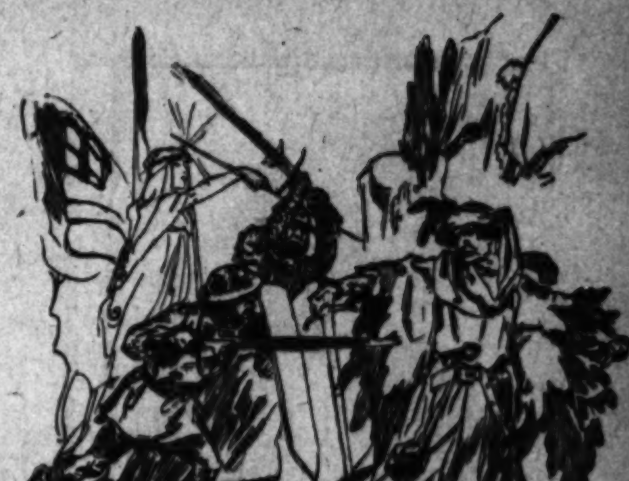
"You can't come in here with those bananas," warned the teacher.

Joe went out. In a few minutes he came back, walking slowly and painfully.

"Where did you put the bananas?" asked the teacher.

"Oh, I hid 'em all right," gasped Joe; "they're safe inside of me."

"Blossoms"



DROVE THE WICKED LOKI AWAY

THIS little story is told by an old Norway nurse—a story of fairies and blossoms.

Long ago, when this earth was ruled by fairies, a good and beautiful fairy named Iduna had charge of all the trees that bore blossoms. She watered and tended them every day, for the fairies made a delicious drink of blossoms steeped in dew, and those who drank of this never grew old nor lost their power of doing good. The apple blossom, especially, was considered the best from which to make this drink.

At this time there lived a very wicked fairy named Loki. He was always watching for an opportunity to do evil. One day he saw Iduna walking in the forest alone. He caught her and bore her away to a cave in the deep, dark forest. The good fairies searched everywhere for her, but could not find her, and then the trees began to wither, the blossoms fade and fall in showers.

Soon the good fairies missed their blossom wine and began to grow old and feeble. They walked about with bowed heads and sad hearts, looking for Iduna. All the festivals held in shady bowers ended, and the queen of the fairies called a meeting, for the mortals, having no one to look after them, fell into grievous ways; everything went wrong. Mortals were even known to lose their tempers and to kill one another.

One day, when things were very bad, a little fairy, who attended the great oak trees, told how she had seen Loki sitting at the entrance of a cave in the pine forest beyond the mountains. The queen called her subjects together, and they started for the deep forest of pines. It took them a long while to find the cave. There sat Loki guarding the entrance. By their united strength they drove the wicked Loki away and liberated Iduna. She came back to her trees, which blossomed anew and bore fruit, the fairies drank their delicious blossom wine, and they held a festival and there was great rejoicing.

Then mortals ate of the fresh fruits and dropped their evil ways, and for over 100 years things went smoothly.

QUEER STEP CHILDREN of UNCLE SAM

Some of the Strange Types Under the Stars and Stripes

UNCLE SAM is the stepfather of thousands upon thousands of children of all kinds, conditions and colors.

He has all kinds on his hands—white and black and red and yellow of skin; children docile, obedient and sweet of nature, others wild, warlike and savage. With some he must use the whip, others he must educate under the point of the gun. Some love their old uncle; but then, too, there are rebellious ones in this big family who chafe under the parental discipline.

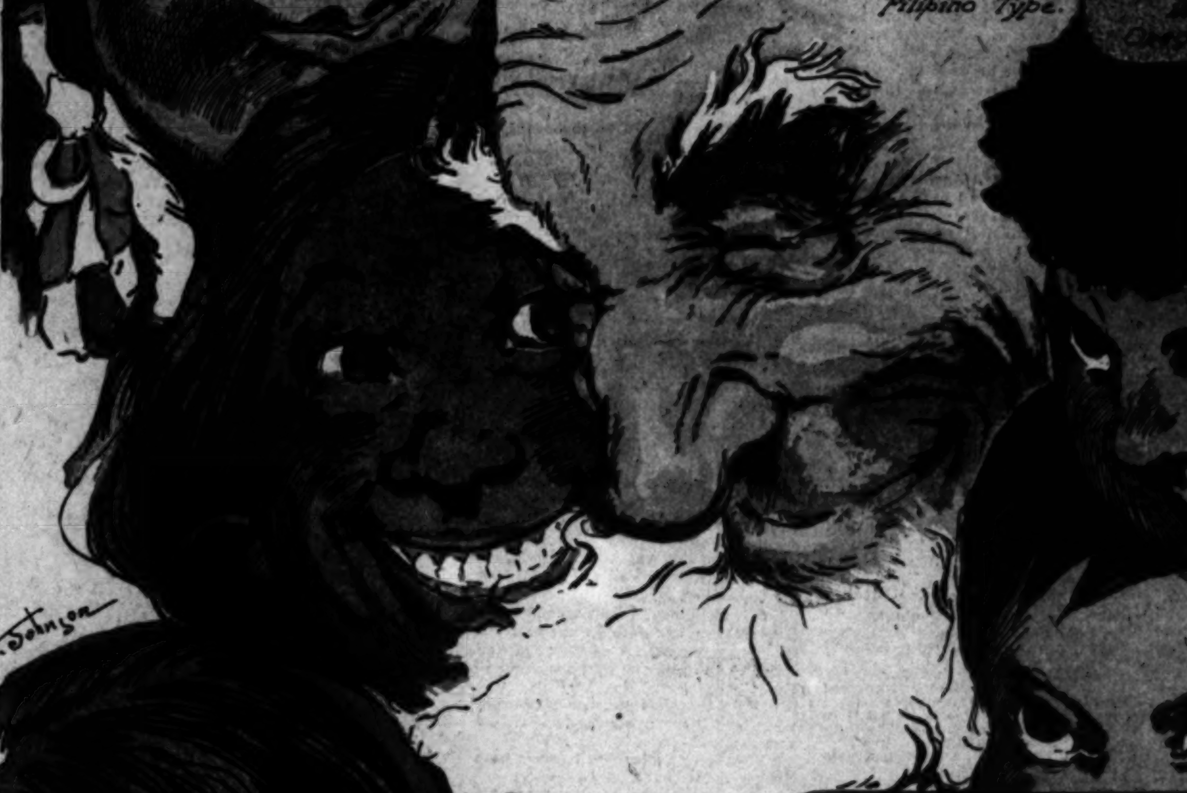
But it's an interesting family, for all that. Nowhere in the world will you find such a diverse and unique aggregation. From the millionaire, whose ancestors came to America in tattered knee breeches, to the Oregonian papoose; from the imported danseuse of the New York stage to the long-haired beauty of Hawaii, or the dog-eaters of the Philippines, you will find a wonderful, interesting, amazing array of faces and natures.

Look at the strange faces pictured here. Did you ever realize that you had these sisters and brothers under the flag?

An Unusual Filipino Type.

[illegible]

A Samoan Chief.



SOME of Uncle Sam's children tattoo their bodies, some lacerate and mar their faces, some wear barbaric apparel and others cannot be persuaded to dress at all.

Some eat dogs, others eat clay; many love to do nothing so much as to loaf; others delight in warfare and head-hunts—hunts for human heads, at that.

Uncle Sam is trying his best to get all to adopt proper civilized customs and manners, but when a man makes so many adoptions, what can he do?

Their names are fairly appalling. Suppose you were the teacher in this great school, before you your class.

There are Cagayuans, Negritos, Kaviamuts, Moros, Zuni Indians, Pueblo Indians Mindanao Babagos, Laguna and Moqui Indians, Antelope and Saboba Indians, Eskimos, Tagalas, Hawaiians, Porto Ricans and innumerable others.

Uncle Sam acquired most of his strange stepchildren within the last ten years. Nowhere, perhaps, is there such a varied assortment of human beings as in the Philippines.

There are in the Philippine archipelago about 1200 islands. The inhabitants exceed 7,600,000. Of these, more than 700,000 are wild, uncivilized. Back in the islands, in the jungles and mountains, they still carry on their secret warfares and delight in carnage.

In the Philippines are four distinct main races. The oldest—wizened savage creatures—live in the jungles, where they were driven years ago by Malayan invaders. Today there are about 30,000 of them in the islands. They include the remnants of the aboriginal tribes.

Head-hunting is the favorite pastime of the Igorrotes. There are about 200,000 of these in the mountains of northern Luzon.

"Little brown people," or the Filipinos, constitute such tribes as the Tagalogs, who dwell near Manila, the Viscayans, of the central islands, the Vicols, of the southern, and the Ilocanos, of northern Luzon. There are about 50 other tribes, and all have different manners of living and thinking.

Fanatical, fierce and bloodthirsty are the Moros, the Mohammedan Malays, who dwell in the Sulu islands and on the eastern shore of Mindanao. They number 500,000. They are terrible children, warlike and barbarous.

Would you care to meet him, this Moro warrior? One can see savagery bristling from him from the tips of his aggressive headgear to his feet. Crafty and cruel are his eyes, burning with Mohammedan fanaticism. Long and merciless is his sword, and prepared for defense is his ever alert shield. He is born for war and loves it.

The Moro is a slave-holder, and he holds the whip over his slaves.

Small, with grinning black faces, the Negritos are among the most unique of the tribes of the Philippines. They are a race of dwarfs, and reach not much higher than the height of an American's hip. They are as ugly as they are little. And not content with the ugliness which nature gave them, they file their teeth to a sharp point.

Peculiar superstitions prevail among many of the stepchildren of Uncle Sam, and even the Christianized Malays have not rid themselves of certain wild beliefs. All the Malays believe that the soul is absent from the body during sleep, and if death occurs at this time, the soul is lost. The most dreadful curse among them is, "May you die sleeping."

Old-time customs still prevail, and the crudest instruments are used for purpose of agriculture. Hay is cut with hand scythes; rice is winnowed by hand, and fields are plowed by means of water buffalo.

Strange to relate, among the Filipinos will be found many beautiful women, with clear-cut, softly curved faces, lovely eyes and long black hair. Beauty, however, is not a heritage of the men. No doubt, the savage creature, with the bristling tuft of hair about his head and beads on his forehead, thinks he is strikingly handsome. But his ideas of beauty are not so esthetic as ours.

But turn to Alaska—a sharp contrast. Bamboo huts are the homes of the children of the Philippines; in Alaska, Uncle Sam's stepchildren live in ice-incrusted houses and eat tallow and fat.

Here we introduce you to 4-year-old Ahweahgoodloo. She is a type of many of Uncle Sam's little ones of the frozen North. How cozy and snug and warm she looks in her great hood and fur coat!

But soon those soft red lips will be pierced, and labrets, or ivory buttons, will be fastened through the flesh. Perhaps her soft little body will be tattooed. For this is a widely spread custom.

No one knows how many Eskimos there are within the boundaries of the United States, but it is certain they are dwindling in number. Most numerous of the tribes are the Malemuts, formerly occupying the territory about Cape Nome and the upper part of the Anvik river. They have since dispersed to various parts of the northwestern country.

There is a group about Golfin bay known as the Kaviamuts. The men are tall and strong, with light hair and complexions. The Eskimos are hardy and do not mind the cold whatever.

INDIANS PRESERVE TRADITIONS

Among the Indians of the West there is a strong impulse toward preserving the old traditions, and often they deck the little heirs of the chiefs in garments similar to those worn before Columbus landed. A curious custom prevails among many of the Indians, that of painting their faces.

Every mark on an Indian's face is significant. Every figure is the same as a decoration on the coat of a diplomat. The birds, moons, whale-eyes, circles and various designs mark accomplishments of the Indian, and the little chief you see in the picture will soon receive marks as tokens of achievements.

In the sides of the mountains of New Mexico and Arizona, in the century-old cliffs where the cliff-dwellers lived before the dawn of history, the Pueblo Indians lead remarkable lives. Peaceful and industrious, they spend their days in making pottery, decorated with bold designs in gaudy colors, and in praying.

The land is arid and dry, and these queer people pray for rain—with dancing. Many live to extreme old age, often exceeding 100 years.

Dancing among aboriginal tribes is a chief part of religious worship. Striking, indeed, is the idea that seems to prevail in so many parts of the world. In Hawaii the aboriginal races are being superseded by a conglomerate race of Chinese, Japanese and Porto Ricans, who have moved there to work on the sugar plantations. Yet the ancient dances still prevail.

In picturesque garb the young men and women still dance to music, wearing and twining flowers about them. The men of Hawaii are strong and muscular, with beautiful physiques. The women are exceptionally pretty, with soft, dusky faces and slumbrous, dark eyes.

In the country districts the Porto Rican still follows a life of ease. He lives in a ramshackle hut, built of boards and covered with thatch. It is a dilapidated, a pitiful habitation. During the day he plays his guitar or fights cocks, and at night plays cards. See him at the door of his home with his wife. A child that needs training, you say.

The last Spanish census showed 530 schools, with an attendance of 22,965 pupils. It is said that at present the attendance exceeds 60,000.

I've seen such Maniactions I've become a trifle queer.

4.—"I've seen Tomatocangaroos go charging down the hill
Because a Pelicanopener came at them with his bill.

5.—"I've also heard figurgling sounds, and when I looked to see
I've found a gorgeous Necktieger entwined around a tree.

6.—"I've frolicked with Balloonatics and joined them in their flight
Until I felt like one of them, my head became so light!"

BEWARE!

Of the car that makes radical changes in its construction year after year after year—it's a confession of weakness.

There have been no changes in the Reo one and two-cylinder engines for FOUR YEARS—1905, 1906, 1907 and 1908.

Think of it! For four years the Reo engine has stood the tests of time, use and experiment, and try as we might we could not make it any better. We had to call it the best motor car engine going and let it go at that.

And here is pretty good evidence that there is nothing better in the market. The sales of Reo automobiles last year were greater than those of any other car. THE 1908 OUTPUT WAS SOLD BEFORE JULY, 1907.

Immediate Delivery

Now, don't worry. You need not be without a REO. They are hard to get because the demand is always greater than the supply; but we are always prepared for immediate delivery, as I always buy the cars in large quantities. I do not have to take what the eastern dealers don't want, as is true in the case of the majority of cars sold in Los Angeles.

YOU CAN HAVE YOUR CAR WHEN YOU WANT IT—NOW.

Reo cars are guaranteed for one year. If they were not good cars I could not afford to give the guaranty.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Oakland played another dopey game of ball at Recreation Park this afternoon and the Angels had no trouble in walking away with the long end of a 5-to-2 score.

Eli Cates started in to pitch like an American League star by fanning the first two men that faced him, but after that he did not seem to care whether he won or not. Neither did the balance of the team. Dashwood behind was simply awful, and his several attempts to throw runners out at the bases resulted in runs for the southerners. Capt. Van Haltren must have tired himself when he made two bases on an infield hit the day before, because he failed to run out two pretty hits and by so doing tossed away a couple of runs. For this he was given a roast by Willie Devereaux, which was much enjoyed by the crowd.

The Angels made their first tally in the third, when Bernard beat out a bunt; went to second on a passed ball and scored on a safety by Dillon. In the fifth a double by Bernard and a single by Carlisle gave them another. Some fierce baseball in the sixth added another to their score. A homer by Cravath in the eighth gave them the fourth run and a single, an error and another hit in the ninth made their total five for the day.

Oakland landed their first in the second on a single by Dashwood, his steal of second and a double by Devereaux. In the seventh Van started things going by hitting a safety to left and stealing the middle bag. A long single by Eagan that was almost out of the lot gave them their second and last tally. Things looked bright in the ninth for the Commuters when Hogan and Van Haltren made singles, but Haley, who had reached his base on a fielder's choice, tossed away all hopes of any runs by trying to score on a short passed ball.

IN NORTHERN WILDS.

HUNTERS SHOOT BEAR AND DEER.

ANGELENOS HAVE GREAT SPORT ON AMERICAN RIVER.

Northern California Proves Fine Shooting Ground—Plenty of Game Killed and Fishing Is Good—Picture Hunting Is Exciting for Graham.

Frank N. Drake, E. G. Wood, William Graham, C. N. Mellen and C. I. Parker have returned from a three weeks' hunting and fishing trip near Truckee, on the head waters of the American River, in Placer county, Northern California. They report big game in abundance and produced photographs showing the results of their trusty rifles. The party left Los Angeles August 31 and returned to Los Angeles last Sunday.

Wood and Parker tied for first honors with two large bucks and one cinnamon bear each, the heads and skins of which they are now having mounted as trophies. They brought down two five-pointers of the mule-ear variety, weighing nearly 300 pounds each.

Graham returned with two pair of antlers and an experience with an angry bear which he will not soon forget. While attempting to procure a good photograph of a wounded bear he ventured too near and only by great effort on his part and a well-directed bullet from another of the party did he escape without injury.

C. H. Mellen was the first lucky man in the camp. He succeeded in bagging two brown bear the first morning out.

Dr. Drake, while having only one buck's head to his credit, claims to have an interest in other heads and pelts now in possession of the other hunters, as it was his shots which finally felled other of the wounded game.

Joseph Gilmore of Los Angeles went along as cook and guide.

SNOWY HEIGHTS.

Snow rests upon the high peaks surrounding the American River country the year round. In the winter it reaches a depth of from fifteen to forty feet and remains upon the ground from October to the following August. During this interval all large game, excepting the bear, which hibernate through the winter, move to a lower altitude. This confines the hunting season to the latter part of August and all of September.

The party found no small game excepting mountain quail and grouse. The latter are plentiful, but protected by law until 1908.

County Auditor H. G. Dow accompanied the party to the hunting grounds but on account of sickness was compelled to return to civilization.

The hunters also report the trout fishing to be very good. "Too tame," was the way Parker characterized the fishing. "You could get a basket full

FALSE ALARM DON'T STRIKE.

BIG BLUFF SQUIRES KNOCKED OUT AGAIN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In the twenty-five round fight at Colma, this afternoon, between Bill Squires of Australia and Jack Twin Sullivan of Boston, Sullivan knocked out Squires in the early part of the nineteenth round. He dropped Squires three times with hard lefts and rights to the mouth and jaw, and the third time Squires's seconds threw up the sponge, as it was evident their man was all in.

The fight was one of the hardest seen here in many a day, and the betting came to even money just before the fight and considerable sums were wagered. Bob Ward, the fighting "Bob Evans" of the United States navy, and Jack Johnson challenged the winner.

Time was called at 3:16, both men being in fine condition, though Squires loomed up much larger than Jack Twin and had a considerably longer reach. The first round demonstrated that Squires had no class. He rushed his man, trying to land with awkward lefts to the body and rights to the head but Jack blocked him easily, although he seemed afraid of the Australian's superior strength. This timidity prevented Jack from seizing several good openings which Squires gave him.

Up to the seventh round honors were even, Squires landed several stiff blows to the body and drew blood from Sullivan's right eye in the seventh. Squires almost had Sullivan out in this round, but Jack rallied and recuperated and in the next round he had Squires groggy from leads to the mouth, which bled freely. The eighth and ninth were Squires's rounds, but he showed no generalship and failed to use his superior strength.

From this time to the end Sullivan had all the advantage. He showed great class in avoiding Squire's awkward rushes and he hammered the Australian mercilessly with hard lefts to the stomach and straight left jabs to the face. Squires occasionally showed spurts at the beginning of rounds, but Sullivan played for a knockout during several rounds, but was wary, as Squires had a dangerous punch.

Finally, at the beginning of the nineteenth, Jack landed a hard left-and-right to the face and Squires went down, taking the count. As soon as he came up Sullivan dropped him again and once again. Then Harry Foley threw up the sponge for Squires. Sullivan said Squires had a hard punch and his blows hurt, but he was not a boxer.

TENNIS EVENTS AT GLENDALE.

GOOD PROGRAMME DRAWS CROWD OF FAIR SPORTS.

Mrs. Tatum Wins First Honors in Ladies' Singles and Her Husband Captures the Men's Contest—Card Not Finished Owing to Darkness and Will Continue.

Society turned out yesterday afternoon to witness the tennis events at the Glendale Clubhouse. In the afternoon tea was served at the clubhouse by Mrs. Brand, assisted by the lady members of the club.

The matches began at 8 o'clock and lasted until darkness put an end to the playing. Some exceptionally good work was developed in all the games. Mr. and Mrs. Taturn did well in both single and double matches, Mrs. Taturn's victory in the finals of the ladies' singles, being virtually a walk-over. Miss Lucille Schulz and Mr. Kinkley did excellent team work in the mixed doubles.

The final events, which could not be pulled off yesterday, will be finished next Saturday afternoon, and the cups and other trophies will be awarded by the club's president, Mrs. Brand.

Monday at 1 o'clock the junior matches will be finished and the medals awarded. Yesterday's scores were as follows.

Ladies' singles: Miss Schulz beat Miss McMillan, 6-3, 8-6.

Mrs. Tatum beat Miss McLafferty by default.

Miss Cross beat Miss George, 6-4, 6-4.
Mrs. Tatum beat Miss Cross, 6-0, 6-0.
Mrs. Tatum beat Miss Schulz, 6-0, 6-0.

Men's singles: Kirby beat Boyd by default.

Blue beat Suesmihl by default.

McLafferty beat Whitaker by default.

Tatum beat Balthis, 2-6, 6-4, 6-3.

McMillan and Tatum beat George and Balthis, 4-6, 6-3, 6-4.

EDWARDS MAY COACH.

Leroy Edwards will probably assist Coach Norman Densham at Polytechnic in developing a Rugby team. Edwards is playing on the Castaway fifteen, and last year was a member of the Stanford 'varsity and went on the trip to Vancouver in the Christmas holidays, where he learned the British style of play.

Edwards has also signified his willingness to coach the Los Angeles High School track team next spring. He was asked to take the position of coach, yesterday, by Louis Bristol, manager of the team, and will probably accept the offer.

CARDINAL TRIUMPHS.

STANFORD WINS IN FIRST GAME.

Defeats Barbarians in Fast and Clever Contest.

Team Selected Shows Varsity Line-up First Time.

Same Players Probably Will Visit Los Angeles.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Sept. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Stanford, 10; Barbarians, 6.

The first fifteen picked for the Stanford 'varsity scored a victory over the San Francisco Barbarians this afternoon, by making two tries and two goals in the first half, allowing their opponents two unconverted tries in the second.

The showing made by Lanagan's pupils in their initial appearance is stamped with a better score than that made by California two weeks ago. On that occasion the Blue and Gold lost to the San Franciscans, 6 to 0, but in their second game downed the Englishmen, 9 to 0.

The Cardinal players put up a good game in streaks, but their work was far from being consistent, even for this stage of the season.

Interest in the day's game centered largely in the selection that would be made by the coaches of the first 'varsity line-up of the season, and in the first real trial of the new turf surface that has been given to Stanford field. The following men appeared in the line-up:

Forwards—W. Koerner, H. Rhyne, L. R. Minturn, D. P. Crawford, J. R. Pemberton, R. H. Reynolds, C. A. Thorpe; wing forward, John O. Miller; halfback, D. G. Heinley; five-eighths, S. M. Vail and C. F. Ganong; center, T. Vandervoort; wings, C. C. Owen and A. B. Cook; fullback, K. L. Fenton.

Pemberton, Thorpe, Heinley and Owen are from Los Angeles.

The players on both sides took kindly to the new surfacing of the field, and the complete lack of dust made the game pleasanter for both spectators and players.

With its new surface Stanford field proved by far the finest athletic stadium in the West.

Stanford took the kick-off in the first half, and sent the ball to the Barbarians' ten-yard line. The Englishmen worked hard, and by persistent dribbling and superior scrumm work managed to get it back into Stanford territory. Then Fenton booted it over the heads of the Barbarian backs and into touch with the thirty-five-yard line.

On the throw-out, Vail took the ball, advanced it ten yards, passed to Vandervoort, who shot it along to Cook. The latter shot passed the Barbarians' defense to within two yards of the coveted line, and by a quick pass, made while he was being tackled, Owen had an easy chance to make the Cardinals' first try. Fenton kicked an easy goal.

Stanford's second try was made by Vandervoort, after Heinley had covered half the length of the field, on a long run, and passed to him on the ten-yard line. The 'varsity slowed up in the second half, and only fine kicking and defensive work by Fenton prevented the Barbarians from overcoming the lead gained by Stanford in the first half. Two tries were made at the corners of the field, and the Barbarians failed to kick goals.

NO ASCOT RACING.

George Rose Again Denies That He Has Any Idea of Having the Ponies Run There.

As announced several weeks ago in The Times, there will not be any racing this winter at Ascot Park, unless the Supreme Court hands down a decision on the "shoestring" annexation that will be favorable to the racing interests. Such good luck is apparently not favored by George Rose, for he announced again last night that Ascot was out of the question. Some of the animals for Arcadia will be stabled and trained there and then shipped to Arcadia when the sport begins there.

Rose states that the work is going on satisfactorily at Arcadia and that Contractor Allen is now working all the teams that can be used to advantage. A larger number will be put on this week and there will be something doing on the grand stand Tuesday, and a permanent stand will be built, although it is not expected that it will be entirely completed by Thanksgiving Day, when the meeting will open. There are about 100 horses for Arcadia now at Ascot Park.

SPEEDY.

LIKE ARROW MOTOR FLIES.

Italian Racer Speeds Like Wild Hurricane.

Ten Miles in Ten Minutes Is Wonderful Record.

May Mean Boom in Southland Road Racing.

Ten miles in ten minutes, over the road from Ocean Park to Los Angeles, is the record made last night by an Isotta Fraschini car, in a test run from the sea. Over the roughest of routes, at a speed of sixty miles an hour, the Italian car flew, with the engine working like a watch, and the car swaying to the undulations of the road.

When the speedway along the Palisades at Santa Monica was reached on the down trip, the big four-cylinder car was let out, and a record of sixty-four miles an hour was made. Though running at such tremendous speed the car did not rack itself unnecessarily, and held to the road without skidding as the terrific clip was maintained for several miles.

The car was brought here by Dr. A. Wilehimy, recently of Milan, Italy. It weighs 3500 pounds. It is built for speed, and, like others of its kind, is designed especially for road racing. It was to test the merits of the splendid car that the run to the seashore was arranged. That the car would make sixty miles an hour was the hope of the owner. That it would exceed a mile a minute during the test Dr. Wilhelmy did not dare to hope.

The car was brought here recently from Milan, Italy, where the factory of the Isotta Fraschini is located. It had never been speeded over the roads until yesterday. When the Isotta Fraschini arrived it was placed on exhibition at the Lee Motor Car Company's garage, and many enthusiastic motorists examined the speedy-looking racer.

For the past month Dr. Wilhelmy has had machinists at work, preparing the car for the speed test. All the parts were working with precision, and everything was arranged to a nicety for the test yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Wilhelmy, with Dan Kuhl at the wheel, and a Times representative, left town at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and twenty minutes later were in Venice. On the run down a speed of almost a mile a minute was maintained over a part of the road, which is exceedingly rough. The presence of many hay wagons loaded with fodder made driving exceedingly dangerous, and Driver Kuhl was obliged to exercise great care. The big car answered to the slightest turn of the wheel, and the skill of the man in charge minimized the dangers along the way.

Like a great bird, the car swept into Venice, with the engine humming merrily. Kuhl cut his machine down to the required eight miles an hour, it being necessary to run on the low speed in order to keep within the requirements of the law. From Venice to Ocean Park, and on to Santa Monica, the motor was carefully driven.

Though the car had behaved well it was seen that more speed could be developed. The Isotta Fraschini is rated at sixty-five horse power, but even more than this can be developed by the big engine, which completely fills the long hood of the rangy car. It was the desire of Dr. Wilhelmy that a thorough test be made. He sent the car out toward the level stretch of roadway along the Palisades beyond Santa Monica.

Once on the splendid boulevard, which was forsaken of vehicles, the supreme test was made. Kuhl grasped the wheel more firmly, Wilhelmy and the Times man braced themselves in the big tonneau, and the test was on.

From twenty miles the speed gauge began to rise. Quickly it passed from thirty to forty miles an hour, and then to fifty. The car was humming along at that speed when, at a word from Wilhelmy, Kuhl let her out to the full. The gauge began to rise as the car leaped over the road. With the wind humming like a hurricane in the ears of the three occupants of the car, the speed rose to sixty, and then began slowly to creep beyond the coveted mark.

A car was recently sold in this city on condition that a speed of a mile a minute be maintained. The motor stood the test. The Italian car seemed a thing of life. It appeared to know what was demanded of it. With the gauge at sixty and the throttle wide open, the gauge went to sixty-three, then sixty-four, and hung a second between sixty-four and five.

With the car tearing along at a speed faster than that ever maintained by a touring car on a Los Angeles road, Dr. Wilhelmy was satisfied, and touched Kuhl on the shoulder. Like the easy swaying motion of a swing slowly stopping, the big car was eased down to a twenty-mile clip. It had done its work.

After leaving Venice, on the home run, the road was found to be perfectly safe for speeding. Once clear of the seaside town, and with the road free from vehicles, the big car was again let out. For ten miles it flew over the road, only using ten minutes for the distance. Two more miles, with a stiff grade, were finished in 2m. 15s. Then the city limits was reached, and the motorist brought his car down to the law requirement.

Dr. Wilhelmy purposes to bring a line of Italian cars to Los Angeles for road-racing purposes. He is enthusiastic over the prospects for endurance runs and speed tests in the Southland. He says Southern California is so much like Italy in that it affords opportunities for sport almost all the year round. He would introduce the Isotta Fraschini as a boom to road racing.

Locomobiles Out Early.

This year the Locomobile factory got ready its 1908 models months earlier than ever before and will have all its agents supplied with 1908 Demonstrators early in October, while most of the agents will begin delivering Locomobiles by the middle of October. The first cars will be delivered by the Success Auto Company local agents, on October 19, having already booked orders for seven 1908 Locomobiles. The most important changes in the Locomobile is four speeds forward on all models and some increase in power. The same lightness of construction typified in the 1907 models will continue and engines will be rated according to the uniform scale of the license association.

HORRIBLE DEATH UNDER HIS CAR.

LONDON OMNIBUS DRIVER IS BURNED TO CRISP.

While Trying to Stop a Gasoline Leak, William Swift Blown Up by Remarkable Accident, the Fluid Having Been Set Afire by a Street Lamp Thirty Feet Away.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 15.—Few men have met with a more horrible death than did William Swift, a London motor-omnibus driver, who was recently burned to death in a most remarkable manner. The details of the accident were brought out in a coroner's inquest, held yesterday. He was in the employ of the London General Omnibus Company, and was driving on the Liverpool Street-Barnes run. On his midnight trip, the last of his run, he was going down Sloane street, when his conductor thought he saw the radiator leaking. He warned Swift, who got down and found that the cock on the flasoline tap had been carried away by some obstruction. The gasoline was running out, and Swift crawled underneath the bus and stopped the flow with his thumb.

The conductor took a lamp and went back over the route of the car looking for the missing cock. He was gone about ten minutes. As he came back, he found that Swift was saturated with gasoline which he had been unable to keep in the tank, and that a little stream of the oil was running down the gutter. The conductor went on top of the car to ask passengers to alight. As he stood there, he saw a flash in the gutter about thirty feet behind the car, then there was a loud report, and Swift shot out from under the car a mass of flame. The oil running down the gutter had been ignited by a street lamp, the flame followed the little trickle of gasoline until it came to the car, when the vapor exploded. The conductor and two soldiers ran to Swift and succeeded in putting out the fire in his clothes, but he was so horribly burned that he died soon after. The bus was not badly injured.

The Six-Cylinders.

Although a leading factory last year claimed that the six-cylinder engine was but a fad and another big factory spent considerable money trying to convince the public of the same claim, most of the important cars are now being produced in six-cylinder as well as four-cylinder design.

Los Angeles is already using the Pierce-Arrow, Franklin, National, Stevens-Duryea, American, Napier, Ford and some others in the six-cylinder pattern with both satisfaction and unsatisfied demand, while the Peerless, Winton, Colt, Elmore, Gearless and Apperson will soon appear on our streets.

Road Change Needed.

About midway through Mint Cañon route from Saugus to Acton, a change in the road can be easily and cheaply made, saving one big climb and a mile or two in distance. Ranchers living at that point are willing to help in the work if the Supervisors or the Automobile Club will spend about $50 on the change. Since the Automobile Club signs were placed between this city and Bakersfield the Mint Cañon route has been traveled daily both ways by motor cars as this route avoids all the fords, the Soledad having fifty-eight and the San Francisquito sixty-seven fords.

Capistrano Needs Auto Hotel.

At San Juan Capistrano Mission is quite a village and this point is but sixty-two miles from Los Angeles over fair roads. Once there were two hotels at this point. Now there is one small tavern, open part of the time. The automobile traveling public demands a good hotel at this point if the coast route is to be used to go to San Diego. Capistrano is the only stopping place between Santa Ana and Oceanside, some fifty-two miles.

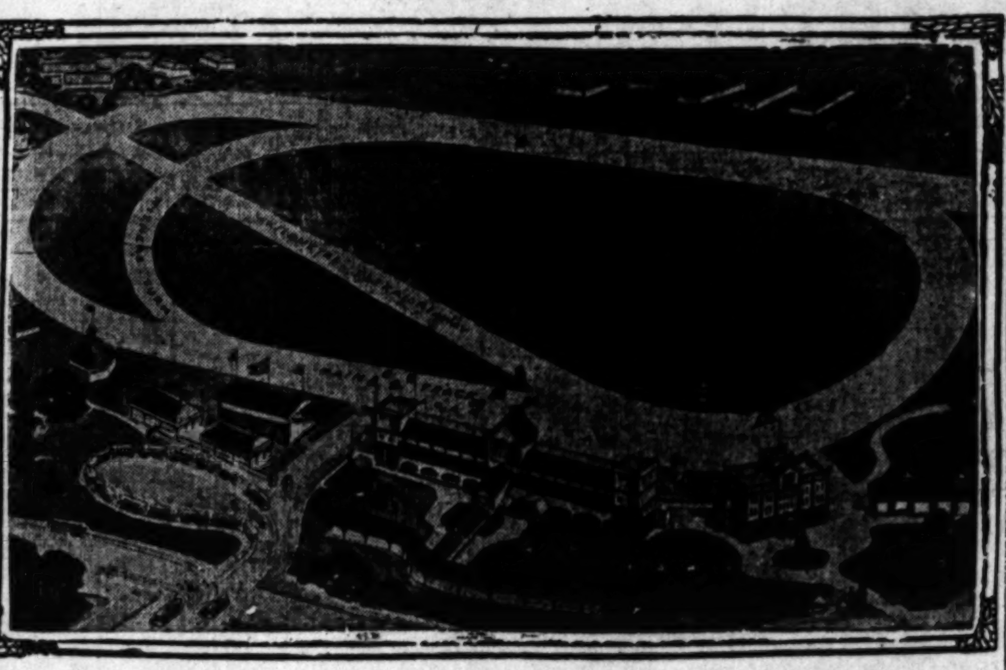
The Los Angeles Automobile Show.

Nothing has been said by the local forty automobile dealers about an automobile show. It was planned months ago to hold a show here about the last of this year. The eastern shows are to be held months earlier than ever before and all will occur in October and November to display the 1908 models. Local dealers are already getting in shape to start for the first show.

Self-Starter Smith Improves.

On Friday Andrew J. Smith, the Elmore sales manager, who had such a close call in the North Baldy road race, took his first automobile ride with a friend. Mr. Smith is still quite weak from his accident in the race and will not be able to resume business for some time yet. His worst injury was from the steering post, which struck him with force enough to bend the heavy brass standard when the car stopped so suddenly.

THE GREATEST MOTOR RACING TRACK IN AMERICA.



Birdseye view of the Morris Park track near New York, which has been adapted to automobile racing by banking the curves and tarring the surface. It is 1.39 miles in circuit, but the difficulty of the odd distance is more than balanced by the size and safety of the surface.

MADE IN LOS ANGELES.

LOCAL CAR IS NOW ON ROADS.

NEW AUTO FACTORY TURNING OUT FIVE A WEEK.

Durocar, Designed and Built Here, Is Made for California Roads—Selective Type Gear Used in Place of Gear Shown on Exhibition Car at Local Show.

There are now seventy-one men working at the Durocar factory and five Durocars a week are being turned out. This is the new automobile factory which is in operation on South Los Angeles street between Ninth and Tenth streets. The Durocar corporation was organized late last year and began business early this year, exhibiting a sample machine at the automobile show in January.

The Durocar factory has four floors 80x140 feet and as yet the plant is not being run to more than half capacity, as this make of car is new and parts and supplies cannot be obtained fast enough.

The Durocar has handsome lines and is built for our California roads. The wheel base is 102 inches, and though the touring car carries five people, the car weighs something less than a ton. The runabout, seating three, weighs 1750 pounds. Both models of the Durocar have the same engine, frame and wheel base, but the bodies and the seating are on different lines. Selective type gears are used in both models, a change from the sample machine exhibited at the show. Both internal expansion and external band brakes are used on rear wheels.

Seven of the Durocars have been delivered, some of the first going to Orange and Ventura counties on the early orders placed at the automobile show last January.

It may be interesting to know that the Durocar engine is all made in this city except carburetor and the electric timer, those being standard articles purchased by nearly all the automobile factories from the exclusive makers of carburetors and commutators.

The Durocar makers have the wooden bodies built in the East as is the case with the other local automobile factory. In fact, very few of the American automobile factories make their own bodies, while in Europe the best-known automobiles are sold in chassis, i.e., without body, special bodies being fitted by the aristocratic body factories.

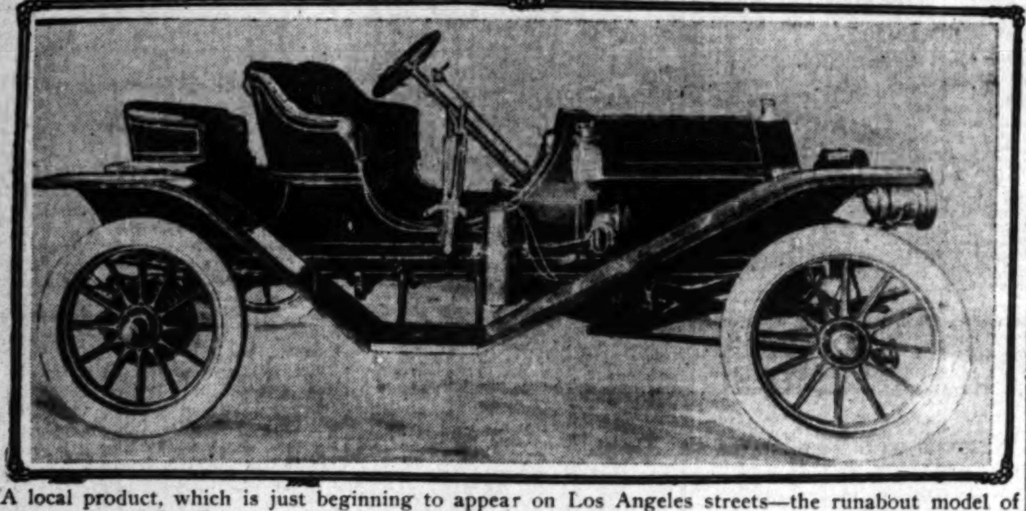
The power of the engine in this new local car is rated at twenty-six-horse-power at 600 revolutions per minute and is called a 26-28 engine, developing even as high as thirty-horse-power. As the Durocar is for California roads it is not intended to go over forty-five miles an hour, which it will do on about 750 revolutions per minute. The bore of cylinders is 5½ inches and stroke five inches.

The new factory like few others, manufactures its own tops and also makes many tops for other cars. There is also an extensive repair department, Watt Moreland, the promoter of the new concern, having formerly had charge of the repair department in the Tourist factory, and his old customers insisting on his continuing to look after their cars. In the paint department custom work is also done, so that the Durocar factory is an important addition to the Los Angeles automobile field.

Every day now the testers go out in the new Durocars to give each machine a day's hard work on the roads before going to body, upholster and paint departments. Engines are also run for some time on stands before being fitted to a chassis.

When you see a long low car with no cover over the engine, which is in front, with bright fan back of the brass-mounted radiator in front, you will know that it is a Durocar out on testing trip.

The designer of the Durocar is Watt Moreland, who has spent the last ten years in automobile factories and as a tester of new cars. He is still a young man and though he has produced an excellent car he is so modest about it that you would hardly find it out from him. The general manager of the new factory is George W. Shugars, who designed the Auburn car, made in Auburn, Ind., and still one of the three owners of the Auburn factory. Mr. Shugars's ideas are seen somewhat in the new car, though he credits Mr. Moreland with most of the lines and ideas. These two young men are the active heads of the Durocar factory.



A local product, which is just beginning to appear on Los Angeles streets—the runabout model of the Durocar, an automobile manufactured almost entirely in this city.

NOT PROOF OF COMPRESSION.

Starting on the Spark Not Sure Sign, Proved by Recent Trial of Lenoir Engine.

That the general supposition that the ability of an automobile motor to start on the spark is an evidence of good compression is a fallacy, was proven conclusively by the performance of the Ford-Lenoir engine in the recent test before the attorneys and experts in the Selden patent suit.

The Lenoir-cycle engine is a non-compression motor which takes its charge during the first half of the downward stroke of the piston. The inlet valve then closes and ignition takes place, the force of the explosion driving the piston the other half of the way. On return the gases are exhausted and the operation is repeated. There is an impulse every revolution as in a two-cycle engine.

It will be seen that the engine works on a half cylinder charge of non-compressed gas. It was because of this that the Selden experts claimed it would be impossible to develop sufficient power in a motor built along these lines to drive an automobile. In this recent public demonstration not only was their contention disproven, but, as if to show that it was capable of anything the more modern four-cycle motor can do, the "Lenoir" repeatedly started "on the spark" when the switch was closed.

IMPORTANCE OF RUBBER.

Brazilian Government Is Realizing the Value of the Trade, Says Visiting Expert.

M. H. Hansen, the South American representative of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, was in Los Angeles yesterday, visiting W. D. Newerf, the Coast agent.

Mr. Hansen makes his headquarters at Buenos Ayres, but on the trip up stopped to explore a portion of the Brazilian rubber fields.

"These rubber plantations show a great development," said Mr. Hansen. "Of late the Brazilian government has realized the importance of the rubber export, and is lending every aid. The market remains firm, with a steady demand. German capital is well intrenched in Brazil.

"Buenos Ayres is a wonderful city, wihch is growing steadily. There are many automobiles there, but most of the high-grade cars are from France and Germany. The American manufacturers have not made great efforts to get this existing business, but I look for more cars from this country during the next year."

Mr. Hansen will make the big Coast towns and then work East.

IT'S HERE TO STAY.

Auto Man Declares Motor Car Business Is Different from Bicycle Trade—Is Optimistic.

J. S. Conwell, manager of the San Francisco branch of the Auto Vehicle Company, is in Los Angeles for a few days. He is optimistic concerning the outlook for the automobile business. He is in constant touch with agencies up and down the Coast, and has traveled extensively in the East. Mr. Conwell is a former Los Angeles man, though his headquarters has been in the Bay City for some time.

"There is no need of concern among the auto men, as the business is here to stay," said Mr. Conwell yesterday. "There is no sense in comparing the auto trade with the bicycle business, as the two are totally different. I find the demand for autos is greater than ever. Business is particulary brisk just now in San Francisco. We are embarrassed to fill our orders.

"The enterprise of the Los Angeles men is such that there is no reason to be pessimistic. Sales are good with the Auto Vehicle Company here, and there is a demand for both runabouts and touring cars. What with the increase in business and the difficulty that is experienced in getting cars, the auto men will be kept busy for the next few months."

Motorcycle Run.

The Los Angeles Motorcycle Club will enjoy a pleasure run today to the top of Mt. Washington. The route will be by way of the San Fernando Road through Eagle Rock Valley. At the end of the run an 8-per-cent. grade will have to be climbed. The test is a severe one for the class of machines entered. Motor bikes of one and three-fourths, two, and three horse power will be entered by club members. The start will be made at 9 o'clock this morning from the clubhouse No. 120 West Twenty-third street. Motorcycle riders of the city are invited to join the run. A picnic lunch will be served.

Over Newhall Grade.

L. T. Shettler and Supervisor Patterson have recently been over the Newhall grade, inspecting it with a view to expending both county funds and the good roads fund of the dealers' association in making it less steep. They did not reach any definite conclusion, and will confer with the Highway Commission before making any announcement of plans. "I think I did Mr. Patterson an injustice," said Mr. Shettler yesterday. "He has been doing more work for the roads in that vicinity than I suspected, and I think we will be able to make some arrangements before very long."

New Supply House.

H. W. Bogen of San Francisco, has opened a branch house in this city to carry in stock motor car sundries, accessories and parts at 1038 South Main street. Mr. Bogen has also built a gas charging plant at San Pedro to fill the gas tanks carried on automobiles, this being with one exception the only acetylene gas charging plant west of Chicago. C. C. Coleman is in charge of both establishments.

Maxwells in Arizona.

President J. W. Willcox of the Maxwell-Briscoe-Willcox Company has just returned from a tour through Arizona, that Territory now being handled from Los Angeles instead of the factory. At Bisbee he found that ten of the thirteen automobiles used in that hilly town were Maxwells, and reports unexpected demand for Maxwells wherever he went.

Cripple Uses Auto.

L. V. Elliott, head of a telephone and electric company of Indianapolis, who has suffered for years from spinal trouble and has been compelled to use a hand-propelled tricycle, is now using a tiny electric automobile, so small that it can be run from the street into his place of business and up to the side of his desk. The little machine cost $600 to construct.

Getting Ready for Quails.

Hundreds of motor cars in Los Angeles are being turned up for October 14, when they will be rushed out for the opening of the quail season at daylight the next morning. One party of ten cars is going to one point in a bunch.

First in America.

Los Angeles was the first city in America to adopt the motorcycle for the collection of the mails, the little machines being fitted with two wheels in front and a frame to hold two mail bags and taking the place of horse and wagon for this work. Other cities are now copying this plan.

Swan Retires from Firm.

John W. Swan, founder of the Diamond Motor Car Company, agency of the Silent Northern, Orient cars and the Apperson, has disposed of his interest in the company to his partner, Vaughn, who will continue the business under the former name. Mr. Swan expects to engage in the oil business.

Motorcycle Hill-Climb Today.

The Los Angeles Motorcycle Club will have a hill-climbing contest out in the Glassell ranch back of Tropico today. The road is in the tract known as Berkshire Hills and is labeled on the summit with a big sign: "Mt. Washington."

Automobile Club Roadbook.

The Automobile Club of Southern California will soon distribute a handbook, describing the routes marked by their emblematic road signs, lists of official hotels, repair shops, gasoline stations, the State automobile law and other valuable information.

More Tire Houses.

Los Angeles now has more branch tire houses than any city in America outside of New York and Chicago, there being seven here, all American makes.

To Automobile Owners, Present and Future, and Intending Buyers

Just a Plain Talk, Lacking in the Usual Automobile Ebullition

As we have said to many of you in private conversation, we are now in a position to give you positive assurance of prompt delivery.

We know that we have disappointed "Maxwell" purchasers very considerably this season, having been so continuously oversold, yet we have overcome every probability of delay for the future with our magnificent new factory at New Castle, Indiana.

This mammoth factory, with its splendid site, constituting the largest automobile plant in the world, will be entirely completed during the coming fall.

It will have eight and a half acres of floor space; an equipment of $265,000.00 worth of the finest and most perfect automatic machinery obtainable, and a mile testing track. This factory's capacity is 10,000 automobiles per annum, large and small, and will place us in a position where we can confidently promise to "Maxwell" purchasers the best in all that makes a line worth the handling.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY

We recognize our moral responsibility towards our purchasers. We have done everything possible to bring our producing facilities up to that responsibility and to meet their demands. Within the past eighteen months we have put into this business three-quarters of a million dollars in cash to meet this responsibility.

We expect to be the largest automobile manufacturers in this or any other country, and why not? We have the experience, we have the capital, we have faith in the destiny of the business and our ability to meet the conditions imposed by any possible changes or necessities.

OUR POLICY

We operate this business on a settled policy—on the line of a set doctrine. The policy is this:

To make automobiles, popular in design and the best in material and workmanship, and to sell at a profit no greater than that usually returned in the manufacture of standard goods when made in large quantities.

It has never been our policy to design a car at a pre-set price, but to design a car that will be reliable, durable and satisfactory, and to set the price afterwards. Therefore, we have built our facilities so as to enable us to produce cars in the most economical manner possible, and to give the buyers—in the quality of the product—the benefit of such facilities and to sell at the lowest possible price based on large quantities.

It has always been our purpose, and always will be, to treat our customers in a fair and liberal spirit, with the idea that once a "Maxwell" driver, always so.

OUR PURPOSE

It is not our purpose to follow every passing fad. Neither is it our purpose to depend upon sensationalism either in price or in freakishness of design, to get business. But it is our purpose so to conduct this business that it will pay but a fair return on the investment, and that return one made possible only by reason of unequalled facilities and large sales.

THE "MAXWELL" LINE

Our line comprises a runabout, the popularity of which is well known; a double-cylinder touring car, certainly one of the most reliable cars ever produced; a new four-cylinder [illegible] h. p. touring car at a popular price, destined to be extremely popular, and our large 40 h. p. four-cylinder car, recognized as one of the best automobiles ever made.

We are told by the statisticians that we are, in point of automobiles sold, the second largest concern in the automobile business in this country. For our fiscal year we have sold about 4000 automobiles.

A FEW FACTS

In offering our new ELMORE to the public for the season of 1908, we place before the buying public the highest type of motor car construction. A car that is beautiful in design and finished with a manner that is superior to anything that has yet been built.

The Elmore Manufacturing Co. have had twenty years of experience in building a gasoline explosion engine that has no valves or small moving troublesome parts, a motor that runs indefinitely without trouble.

For 1908 we offer a car that has no valves, timer or coil, a car that the buying public have been waiting for, one that runs 365 days in the year and starts without cranking.

For the past five years the Elmore Manufacturing Co. have devoted their entire factory to the perfection of one type, making no radical changes in that time. Today the ELMORE is the only car that can boast that it needs no mechanic, being so simple that any lady or child can operate and care for it.. There has never been a 1907 ELMORE in the shop for anything more than adjustment. This may sound like strong talk, but we stand ready to prove that the ELMORE of today is not a car that needs a shop. How many agencies are there that sell as many cars as we do, but what operate large repair departments. We have on shop and we take care of 95 per cent. of all ELMORE cars.

We have two models for 1908, both of which are being sold at a price which puts a high-grade car in reach of all.

Model M 40 H. P. 114-Inch Wheel Base $2650.00
Model L 30 H. P. 102-Inch Wheel Base 1900.00

REMARKABLE VICTORIES.

ITALY WINS BOTH RACES.

Brescia Meet a Waterloo for French Motor Cars.

Italians and Germans Shine in Florio Cup.

Milan Automobile Club Also Wins Approval.

Italy has just added another to her remarkable series of automobile victories of the year, when Italian cars won both the Florio Cup and the Coupe de Vitesse at the Brescia meeting. Incidentally a new firm has leaped into racing honors, a new star has been added to the galaxy of fearless drivers, and perhaps not so incidentally, the French cars have sustained another crushing defeat.

As another feature of the meet, the Automobile Club of Milan covered itself with glory and pointed the way for some of our American organizations. Facing even worse conditions than we had in preparing for the Vanderbilt Cup race, the club triumphed over every disadvantage. The government refused its sanction for the race last year. This year the club got a sanction, but instead of the thousands of troops that other governments order to patrol the course, 300 gendarmes were all the men provided. The club organized a corps of 1100 cyclists, who patrolled the course and rendered efficient service. They were nearly all volunteers. The club tarred the entire course of thirty-eight miles, and built bridges over the road wherever it passed through a village.

The race for the Florio Cup was under the Kaiser Cup regulations, the chief of which is that the maximum cylinder capacity is limited to eight liters.

There were thirty-four cars to face the starter. The Fiats were not represented, and when Chevalier Vicenzio Florio brought to the start a car entered as a Panormitan, the Fiat representative protested that it was a Fiat which the company would enter and would not allow to race under another name. The car was excluded by the committee. Seven other entries did not start.

ITALAS THE FAVORITES.

The Italas were the favorites, with the Benz cars next. The Darracqs, driven by Demogeot and Huntley Walker, were also accorded a good place by the prognosticators. On the first round, however, the two Isotta-Fraschini cars made the circuit within a few seconds of each other and more than a minute faster than the next car, which was a Gaggeneau driven by the great German, Hieronymus. Cagno's Itala was in seventh place, and Demogeot was eleventh. In the succeeding rounds, Minoia on the Isotta-Fraschini continually made the fastest circuits up to the seventh, when he had tire trouble. Hemery on the Benz had been close up all the time, and made the fastest time on the seventh and eighth rounds, but Minoia had enough in hand to finish first by a margin of ten minutes.

The Italas had all gone out before the race was half over, and were not in the fighting. Besides Hemery, Hanriot on another Benz was well up all the time, and he finished third.

FINISH REMARKABLE.

The finishing order was somewhat remarkable. The winner was Minoia, on an Isotta-Franschini. Second and third were Hemery and Hanriot, on Benz cars. Fourth was Trucco, on the second Isotta-Fraschini. Fifth and sixth were Thieulen and Vitton on Rochet-Schneiders—cars and drivers not given much thought before the race, who drove well up on every circuit and made a very even performance. Seventh and eighth were Demogeot and Airoldi on Darracqs. Ninth place fell to Maserati, who drove the only Bianchi which finished. Erle took tenth place with his Benz. This gave the Benz cars the only entire team to finish, and also gave them second, third and tenth—a fine team performance in a very classy field. It was this perhaps that hurt France more than losing first place to the Italians—to see the old and somewhat despised German house take under harder conditions, the fame won by the team performance of the De Detriechs at the [illegible] race.

The course is just 301 miles in all, half-way hilly with bad turns, and ill fitted for speedy dashes. The winner took 4 hours 39 minutes and 53 seconds, making an average speed, including stops, of 64.7 miles per hour.

COUPE DE VITESSE.

The following day was run the Coupe de Vitesse, for cars complying with the Grand Prix regulations. In these no limit is placed on the engines, but gasoline consumption is limited to [illegible] liters per 100 kilometers (417.7 cubic inches per 62.5 miles.)

Fourteen cars started, of which seven were French and seven Italian. The rules were French, all the French factory had been bending their energies toward building cars to comply with them, and half the entries were French. It seemed as though a French victory was certain.

Anyway, the French can claim a [illegible] for only one Italian car finished. That car was, however, the winner of the race. With their customary [illegible], the Italians drove to win or break.

AMERICAN'S FAST TIME.

Our own Fitz Shepard on a Clement made fastest time in the first round. Cagno, on an Itala, lost eight minutes changing spark plugs. In the second round Fabry on an Itala was in the lead, Shepard second and Duray of Lorraine-Deutrich third. In the third round Duray and Shepard changed places, with Fabry still ahead and Cagno coming up from the rear in record time. At this time rain fell, and the Italians stopped to put on non-skids, while the French did not. This changed the lead over to Duray, followed by Shepard, with Fabry third, and the wonderful Cagno now in fourth, after a slashing circuit. The fifth circuit showed the wisdom of the Italians, for Shepard's car skidded and was injured when it turned over. Fabry went out with a bad engine, and Duray, using smooth tires, skidded on a bridge and lost much time. Cagno was now in the lead with a safe margin, and although Demogeot drove like a wild man, he could cut down the Italian's lead by only a minute and a half.

Cagno made the eight circuits in 4 hours 37 minutes and 36 seconds, an average speed of sixty-five miles an hour. Only six cars finished, those behind the winner being in their order Darracq (Demogeot,) Lorraine-Dietrich (Rougier,) Lorraine-Dietrich (Gabriel,) Bayard-Clement, (Alezy,) and Bayard-Clement (Garcet.)

Another triumph for Italy—Minoia, a new star in the automobile firmament, winning the Florida Cup at Brescia on an Isotta-Fraschini car. The photograph was taken just as he crossed the line and threw up his hand in token of victory.

NOVEL CONTEST PROPOSED.

Break-down Competition for Experts to Show Skill in Diagnosing Motor Car Ailments.

Automobile mechanics are naturally men of resource, never nonplussed by breakdowns or refusals of the motor to perform the duties for which it was called into the world, says a Parisian writer. At a smoker or any social gathering their skill in diagnosing and remedying the ills of the gasoline inspiring machine has been known to develop in a fantastic manner.

To know what a mechanic can do under mundane conditions, when a silent, stubborn, responseless automobile is at his feet, a Parisian automobile journal has proposed a breakdown competition. At one of the big automobile factories encircling Paris or on the quiet road around Longchamps race course, the candidates for the expert mechanic diploma will be lined up in front of a row of mechines, each one of which has the same secret malady. On the word of command each expert will rush to the machine reserved for him and endeavor to get it going in the shortest possible time.

In one series the magnetos will be tampered with, in another clutches will need tender care; in a third the carburetors will have been specially disarranged; a fourth heat will test the ability of the men to change a number of burst tires. Thus tests will succeed one another until only the best men are left to compete in the finals. Five francs a head will be charged as entrance fee, in order to keep out the joyous individuals more anxious to obtain a half-day vacation from their employers than to compete in the competition. An official diploma will reward the most skilful automobilist.

Alcohol It Must Be.

Referring to the report of the committee appointed by the Motor Union of Great Britain and Ireland to inquire into the question of the alarming rise in the price of gasoline and to suggest what steps, if any, can be taken to protect the interests of the private consumer, the London Times says the report represents a large number of sittings of the committee, examination of witnesses, experts, etc., and from information thus obtained the committee finds that a gasoline famine is certain to occur sooner or later. It asserts that while this shortage of gasoline is a certainty, the fact is not apparently appreciated by the manufacturers of motors. It sets out a list of fuels other than gasoline, and of the six named but one—alcohol—is unlimited in amount. Of the remaining five those capable of easy handling must all sooner or later come to an end. The committee believes that alcohol will necessarily be used for motor power in the future.

To Exhibit at Licensed Show.

The White Company announce that this year the White steamers will be exhibited at the show of the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers, to be held in the Madison Square Garden, November 2-9. The White Company, being entirely independent of, and indifferent to the Selden patent situation, have always been in a position to go with either the licensed or unlicensed group. For the last two years, the White steamers have been exhibited at the unlicensed show, but this year it was deemed advisable to exhibit with the licensed cars.

To Exhibit, at Hotel.

An exhibitor who will be missed from all of the New York shows this year, is the American Locomotive Automobile Company, which previously exhibited at the show of the Automobile Club. This company maintains a neutral attitude, and is not a member of either of the rival manufacturers' associations. For this reason it could not obtain preferred space, and, therefore, decided last week not to be a part of any show, but to hold a two weeks show of Berliet cars independently in the reception-room of the Waldorf-Astoria near the Thirty-third-street entrance, from October 24 to November 9.

Many Build Darracq-Sepolet Plant.

A distinguished visitor to this country is William Weir of the well-known firm of J. S. Weir, Ltd., of Glasgow, manufacturers of pumps and condensers, who arrived last week on the Lusitania. Mr. Weir is visiting this country for the dual purpose of watching the operation of the pumps, condensers, etc., which the firm installed in the new steamer and also to ascertain full particulars with regard to conditions and a field for the manufacture in this country of the Darracq-Serpolet trucks and buses of which a large number are in use abroad.

An Awful Offense.

Oscar Lewisohn, who married Edna May last June, has been fined $125 at Eastbourne, a village near London, for exceeding the speed limit in his automobile. The gravity of Mr. Lewisohn's offense is increased, according to the police, by the fact that when he was ordered to stop he contemptuously put his thumb to his nose, spread out his fingers and drove on.

For Fair Motorists.

It has been reported that beauty bags for fair automobilists have been brought out by enterprising shopkeepers in London. The bags are said to look like small dressing cases and the more elaborate ones are made of pink leather. They contain compartments for bandages and medicines, needles, thread, tape, pins, comb, brush, hairpins, powder puff and a mirror.

Strenuous Touring.

L. L. Benedict of New York, who has just returned from a European trip, is one of the most strenuous of amateur tourists. According to O. J. Beyers, his chauffeur, Mr. Benedict has a record of traveling nearly 15,000 miles in four months in his Berliet this summer, 5000 miles being done in England. Often the party were on the road from 9 a.m. till midnight, and 2000 miles were made in eleven days.

More Wild Than Ever.

W. R. Ruess, sometimes known as "Wild Bill," is now at the Pope-Toledo factory, and judging by his letters, he is wilder than ever. He promises to break every record in California and establish new ones where there aren't any now, when he returns with the new car. He is going to the Pope-Hartford factory and then will spend a short vacation in New York before returning to Los Angeles.

WAKE UP.

QUAKERS PLAY GREAT GAME.

HORDERN PREVENTS VISITORS FROM TALL SCORING.

Wynyard and Collins Make Centuries Against New York—Wood and Bohlen Pile up Runs for Quakers—Schwarz Carries Off Bowling Honors.

The Philadelphia cricketers displayed signal pertinacity in the first of their international fixtures against the visiting Marylebone eleven of England, holding their opponents down to 162 runs, and then responding with a score of 157, or only five runs short of the visitors' total.

Like the New York fixture, rain put an end to a definite conclusion being arrived at, which was a keen disappointment to the 18,000 enthusiasts who passed through the trunstiles when the Philadelphians were at the wicket.

The feature of the two days' play was the excellent bowling of Schwarz and Hordern. With the exception of four players, who all made creditable stands, the remaining batsmen on both sides found the bowling at every stage of the game most difficult to play. Schwarz of the M.C.C. was responsible for the downfall of eight batsmen and obtained the excellent anaylsis of 6.8 per wicket. Hordern, who toured England this summer with the University of Pennsylvania cricketers and who was responsible for the collapse of so many of the public school batsmen, took 5 wickets for 41 runs, at an average of 8.2 per wicket.

Great things were expected of Capt. Wynyard, Collins and Douglass, fresh from their sensational innings at Staten Island against All New York, but the Philadelphian bowlers kept such an excellent length throughout and were backed up by such superb fielding, that the visitors found it difficult to get the ball away to the boundary.

For Philadelphia, Wood played faultlessly for his 40 and seemed to be the only one, except Bohlen, to take any liberties with the tricky deliveries of Schwartz, whose off breaks and deceptive changes of pace caused the dismissal of so many of his side. Bohlen's innings was perhaps the more stylish, and in all probability he would have added very materially to his score, had he had any one to keep him company; as it was, he carried out his bat for 36 and with Wood and Hordern, shared the honors for his side.

This match, which ended so unsatisfactorily, was a great surprise to the visiting team, as they were not prepared for such stubborn tactics as the Quaker City representatives displayed. In their match against New York, Wynyard hit up 145 runs, which included one 6 and twenty-one 4's, and although he was twice missed, gave an exhibition of powerful hitting seldom seen in international matches on this side of the "pond." The hit which scored his 6, will ever be remembered as a masterstroke; the ball was not only knocked clean out of the ground, clear of the enclosure, but it crashed through a window of a three-story house overlooking the ground, smashing the glass to smithereens. Collins proved equally aggressive as did Douglas, and the All New York fielders will not forget for some time to come the leather hunting to which they were subjected.

The Philadelphians may well congratulate themselves on the result of their first match with the strong Marylebone eleven, and although the game had to be abandoned on account of the inclement weather, the second Test Match will be fought with even more stubborness. Following is the full score and bowling anaylsis of the two drawn games:

Auto Wins Political Post.

Prince Scipio Borghese, winner of the Peking-Paris race, has been chosen Mayor of Rome. For some time the office was vacant, rival factions being unable to agree upon a man, but the Prince's recent rise to fame made him popular with all parties.

Where There's an Auto, There's a Way.

It has remained for Hugo E. Bremer to find a way around the rule of the Swiss Council prohibiting motoring in the beautiful valley of the Engadine. Procuring four horses he drove his machine through the valley, despite the cantonal law.

"DEAD BIRD."

STILL LEADS FOR AVERAGE.

Fred B. Mills Has High Honors His Own Way.

Freaky Wind Plays Havoc in Professional Ranks.

Gottlieb in Good Form Again. How They Fared.

Fred B. Mills pegged a second spike into his hold on the high-average championship of the Western Gun Club's initial tournament yesterday at Sherman, by repeating his excellent performance of the first round, and breaking 185 out of the 200 birds programmed, for the excellent figure of 92½ per cent. Unless he goes to the bad utterly today, Mills seems certain to walk off with the highest honors of the shoot.

In the morning scores were good, and it was thought the work would read better on paper than that of the first day, but about lunch time the fun began. The trade wind had been flirting a little with the birds all along, but after shooting was resumed it came on to blow a moderate gale. Targets commenced to bounce like rubber balls, and one after another even the crack "pros" went down the line. Scores hovered around 14 and 15, and several quit in disgust. Then came the really good shot's time, and he proceeded to make use of it. At his usual steady gait, making but one straight, Mills traveled down the score sheet, and at the evening compilation figured quite a distance ahead of his nearest competitor for amateur honors. Chris Gottlieb, the Omaha professional, another crack duck shot, stayed in the hunt to the last and led the "birds only" class by a wide margin, breaking but one bird less than Mills for 92 per cent.

Aside from the wind, everything passed off smoothly, and about the same number of shooters was on hand as faced the traps the first day. This morning the crowd is expected, the $50 purse added to the last event for average chasers being the drawing card.

Most of the "pros" had hard sledding of it, and bad half hours were too common for comfort. Thomas A. Marshall in particular was unlucky, losing 53 out of 200.

KING'S GOOOD WORK.

D. W. King, Jr., was a good second to Gottlieb, with 189 breaks, for 90 per cent. He is an expert with the rifle as well as the scattergun. Dick Reed of San Francisco was in good form, and, in spite of the wind, let but 25 get away, his running mate, Hip. Justins being six behind.

Bill Hillis took something of a tumble from his exalted postion of the first day by looking the wrong way at 40, the changing traps and varying wind being his undoing.

Emil Holling, with 169, Clarence Haight, with 154; Harry Hoyt, with 145, are another trio which had its troubles. All are cracks, good for much better under ordinary circumstances, but yesterday had the best of 'em treed.

The amateurs, as a whole, acquitted themselves well. Varian lost but twenty-one during the day; Mark Lane missed but two more, as did Knight. The big San Bernardino artilleryman, with his long-eared gun and loaded-while-you wait" shells is working hard for second high amateur average, and bids fair to win it.

"Pop" Carr, the veteran from Monterey, who never misses a shoot, or admits that he is coming to the next one, also came through with a straight in one event.

R. M. Arnold of Hueneme dropped twenty-five; drew down $32.90. "Barracuda" Jim Gibson of Nordhoff treated his erstwhile good reputation shamefully during the day by sloughing off 43. "Barracuda" has a specialty; it is shooting for medals. If there were any around, he would be wearing 'em at the finish. At one of the L.A.G.C. tournaments Jim once won all of the three medals hung up, breaking better than 47 out of 50 each time.

VAUGHAN OFF WATCH.

Ed Vaughan was away below his form, and on the sick list, looking more like a candidate for the hospital than a crack trapshot competing for high average honors. In all, 27 got away from him.

E. Weatherhead, the Iowa amateur, missed 37. C. D. Hagerman, with 162, and Charles Van Valkenburg with one less, were around the 81 per cent. mark. Rhodes quit after the seventh event and gave it up for a bad job. Bungay got together better than on the first day and broke 175. He is still somewhat out of practice, but today probably will do better work, and run up to his form of two or three years ago.

"Pop" Carr broke 162; Charlie Julian scored 159, Delbert only shot in five events; E. C. Redman, J. H. Baker, Homer Kennedy and M. D. Towne took part in the last few events.

There were thirty-eight shooters. Treasurer and Manager Joe Wood was so busy that he had no time to do anything but pay out money and keep the books straight. Mills won $66.15 and Lane $58.75 on the day, which is not bad for any shoot.

On the whole, the shooters like the Chick system. Some say the three-money cut gives two or three fellows all the coin, but if the purses were cut four ways, the same fellows would complain, because there was nothing to go after and no money when one did make a good score.

Today's shooting begins at 9:30 o'clock, and will be put through speedily in order to finish early. Yesterday the shooters were away before 4 o'clock.

No. 1 trap was set so as to throw fair birds early in the morning, and there was no further trouble on that score; hitting 'em was the difficulty.

Big Striped Bass.

Walter A. Geft caught a fifteen-pound striped bass upon light tackle as defined by the angling tournament rules of the Southern California Rod and Reel Club. The catch was made by Geft in San Francisco Bay during his vacation in the North. The tackle is up to grade, and the fish has been entered in the tournament. Whether the catch will be allowed to stand is up to the Light Tackle Committee of the club, the point being raised that inasmuch as the club is a Southern California organization, it is implied that fish taken in the waters of Southern California only are eligible to registration. The rules on the back of the blank do not expressly state so, however, and the committee will be called on to pass upon the point.

Tulare Duck Hunting.

Dr. H. G. McNeil and his father, J. H. McNeil, will hunt ducks on Tulare Lake for the first week of the season. They will leave Los Angeles today, in order to be on the grounds when the first ducks fly on Tuesday morning.

The Mitchell Model "I" touring car, selling for $2200, with full equipment of five lamps, horn and storage battery, is without doubt the finest car that will ever be produced at that price. This is not a small edition of the regular touring car, but a full-sized car, as large as any $2650 car, and embodying every quality, including speed, hill climbing, easy riding, ease of control, smooth running, etc., found in cars costing as much as twice its price.

We refer with pleasure to the many owners of 1906 and 1907 Mitchell automobiles for information as to the cost of up-keep of these cars and we know any inquirer will be surprised to find that not one of our many customers has had a repair bill of which he can justly complain.

DON'T BUY A 1907 CAR at this time of season, but get a 1908 Mitchell, delivery of which we can make about Oct. 5. Nine sold up to this date.

THREE SCHOOLS DISCUSS RULES.

Representatives Decide on Dual Agreements.

U.S.C., St. Vincent's and Whittier Affected.

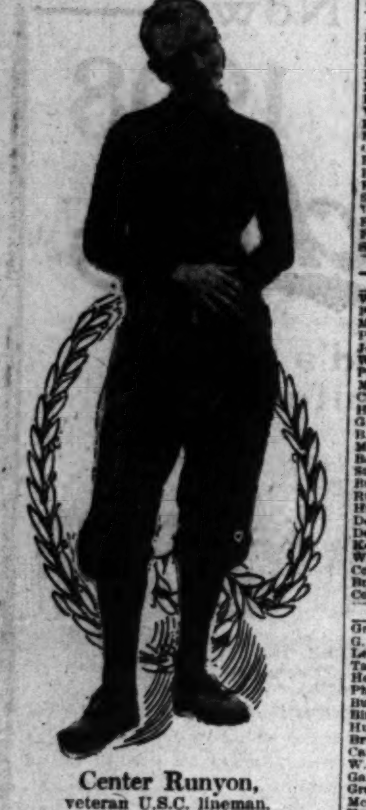
Conditions of Eligibility Cause of Contention.

St. Vincent's, U.S.C. and Whittier colleges were represented in the conference proposed by Coach Holmes, yesterday, and the three colleges decided to conduct the intercollegiate football games of this season on the basis of dual agreements between each of the contesting schools. Occidental and Pomona were not represented.

The conference agreement signed two years ago by Pomona, Occidental, and U.S.C., and supposedly still in force, was taken as the basis for the rules to govern intercollegiate games, but one clause was left out, as no settlement on the points involved could be arrived at. The objectionable clause reads:

"New students must be in residence at least one semester before they are eligible, unless regularly entered as freshmen in full standing for the first time from any high school or other preparatory school."

Walter Hempel, for St. Vincent's, and H. E. Tebbetts, for Whittier, both stated that their schools would be unable to agree to this clause, as it would mean the practical dissolution of their football elevens. They also objected to Occidental's contention to bar preparatory school men from the teams, and these matters were left unsettled. With these two provisions cut out, the agreement will be submitted to each of the colleges for ratification, and before each game is played by either of the three colleges, a separate agreement regarding what men may be played will be drawn up. Holmes has assured both St. Vincent's and Whittier that he will play them on this basis, and Occidental and Pomona will have to agree to do the same, or cancel the contests scheduled.



Center Runyon,
veteran U.S.C. lineman.

Important among the conditions of eligibility accepted by all three schools are the requirements following: The student must be above passing grade in at least twelve hours of work, and shall be ineligible until he receives credit for the required twelve hours in case of failure; attendance must begin within one month of the opening of the semester; participants must be amateurs; and none may compete more than four years after he is of college rank, or in the preparatory department playing on college teams elsewhere, to count the same as on the college teams in the agreement.

The meeting was held at the University Club, at 1 o'clock. U.S.C. was represented by Coach Holmes and Manager Hunt, of the football team; Whittier sent Tebbetts and Marshburn, both students; and Walter Hempel and Casey, a freshman aspirant for the St. Vincent's team, represented the Saints. All deplored the failure of Chairman Sumner of the old conference to call a meeting of the five colleges, and it was deemed best, in the absence of representatives from Occidental and Pomona, to form dual agreements between the three schools interested. The same proposal probably will be made to Pomona and Occidental within a few days.

MEETING CALLED.

REAL CONFERENCE MEETING.

CLAREMONT, Sept. 28.—Dr. George S. Sumner of Pomona College, head of the Intercollegiate Conference Committee, has called a meeting of representatives from the conference colleges. The date is set for Wednesday afternoon, October 2, at Occidental.

The meeting will be for the purpose of adopting suitable eligibility rules and some sort of an agreement will likely be arrived at.

President Himrod of the Associated Students will go as student delegate, while Dr. Sumner will represent the faculty. Notices of the proposed meeting were sent out today to the different institutions of the conference. Representatives of each college are expected to be present.

ONLY ONE GAME.

STANFORD REFUSES OFFER.

Stanford has declined the invitation of the San Bernardino High School to play a game at San Bernardino, Friday afternoon, October 4. Manager Knupp of the Cardinal team, wired a reply to the invitation of Leon Atwood, San Bernardino's captain, but yesterday a second telegram canceled the game. Lanagan's opposition to two games in two days is given as the cause of the cancelling of the San Bernardino contest.

Stanford will send twenty or twenty-one men, including coach and trainer, to Los Angeles. The team will arrive here Friday morning, and practice on the Fiesta Park field in the afternoon for the contest Saturday.

DOPE OF THE GRIDIRON.

FOOTBALL STATISTICS OF SOUTHERN TEAMS.

STATISTICS of the football teams of the important colleges, prep schools and athletic clubs of Southern California have been collected by The Times, and they enable a judgment of the comparative strength of the principal intercollegiate and high school rivals.

As no games have yet been played in Southern California, the selection of members of the first elevens or fifteens at this early date is impossible in most cases. In a few instances, in the small schools, the team which will represent the school has practically been chosen, but in the majority of the institutions no line-ups will be definitely made for a week at least, when the first practice games will be played between schools.

Many of the high schools will put out no football team this year. Among these are Glendale, Huntington Beach, Anaheim, Union High School of Santa Paula, Orange County High School, Fullerton and San Pedro. In most of these basketball and baseball are played, but not football. Fullerton probably will organize a Rugby team later in the season. Plenty of material exists, but at present no grounds are available. The statistics are:

OCCIDENTAL WINS.

TEAM SHOWS UP WELL.

Occidental College opened up its football season, yesterday afternoon, by defeating the Whittier State School eleven on the latter's gridiron by the score of 37 to 0. The feature of the game was a pretty goal from placement executed by Wieman from the thirty-yard line.

The school boys were no match for their opponents, and only on two or three occasions were the Presbyterians unable to make the necessary distance in three downs. The State School eleven was almost as heavy as the Occidental aggregation, but the Presbyterians displayed better team work and more experience at the game.

Occidental played straight football. Goheen will not pursue the radical system the Presbyterians employed last year, although several new plays have been devised and will be put into effect next week.

The Presbyterians scored a touchdown before the game had been under way three minutes. Wieman kicked off to Cotton on the State School's twenty-five-yard line. The home team tried to work a forward pass, but Occidental got the ball. B. Merrill and Wieman made heavy gains through the line and Merrill finally went through center for a touchdown. Wieman missed the goal.

Occidental scored two more touchdowns during the first half, on both of which Wieman kicked goals. The State line was totally unable to consistently stop the plunges of the Occidental backs and tackles, and with good interference the Presbyterians got away with several long end runs.

Both sides resorted to a great deal of punting in the second half.

Reid kicked off to Collins, who ran in twenty yards before he was downed. Occidental lost the ball on downs, but Whittier could not gain and Reid kicked out of bounds on Occidental's fifty-yard line. Wieman kicked on the first down and Reid returned the ball to Rush. On the next play B. Merrill got around right end, and with good interference by Kellogg ran sixty-five yards for a touchdown. Wieman kicked the goal.

In less than two minutes after the next kick-off the Presbyterians again crossed their opponents' line. Wieman kicked to Reid on the State School's fifteen-yard line. The home team tried to work a forward pass, but the Presbyterians got the ball. G. Merrill and Collins ploughed through for large gains and a touchdown. Wieman missed the goal. The Presbyterians scored one more touchdown, and Wieman kicked a goal from placement.

The State School team put up a plucky fight. Occidental's new material showed up beyond the expectations of the coaches. Willoughby, Johnson and Kellogg played good football for new men. Bruce Merrill could not be stopped by the State School boys, and every time he was given the ball went through for big gains.

The State School team is not as strong this year as it has been in the past, as boys over 16 years of age are no longer admitted to the institution, and therefore there is practically no new material to form a heavy team. Reid and Stanley put up a strong game for Whittier.

The line-up:

Occidental.		Whittier State.
McClung, Hillery	r.e.l.	Woodson
Crane (c)	r.t.l.	Carmichael
Willoughby Johnson	r.g.l.	Powers
Cort	c.	Kennedy

Rush	q.b.	Stanley (c.)
B. Merrill	l.h.r.	Cotton
G. Merrill	r.h.l.	Wyatt
Wieman, Collins	f.b.	Reid

Length of halves, 20 minutes. Touchdowns—B. Merrill, 4; G. Merrill, 1; Collins, 1. Goals from touchdowns—Wieman, 3. Goal from placement—Wieman. Referee—McLeod. Umpire—Edwards. Head linesman—Patterson. Times—Bird.

WHITTIER WINS.

SANTA ANA'S GAME FIGHT.

SANTA ANA, Sept. 28.—Whittier College won her second football game this afternoon at Santa Ana, defeating the strong High School team by the score of 6 to 0.

While the Quakers were unable to pile up as big a score as the coaches would have liked, their defensive play was of high-class order, and only once was their goal in danger.

N. B. Renneker, the Quakers' left halfback, was the bright particular star of the game. Time after time he went through Santa Ana's line for gains. Wilder and Waldron, Whittier's tackles, also played a star game, making gains nearly every time they were sent with the ball.

Santa Ana received the kick-off, Wells booting the ball scarcely 20 yards, where it was fallen on by Robinson. Whittier then held Santa Ana for two downs, when Tedford kicked. The ball was carried back and forth during the remainder of the half, neither side being able to score, the half ending with the ball in Whittier's territory.

In the second half the Quakers took a decided brace. On the kick-off N. W. Renneker received the ball on the 10-yard line, and carried it back 15 yards. Then by clean line bucking and end runs, the Quakers steadily carried it down the field to Santa Ana's 5-yard line, when N. B. Renneker plunged through the line for a touchdown. Radcliffe easily kicked goal.

On the next kick-off Feeler received the ball on the 10-yard line, and by a magnificent run, carried it back 50 yards. The Quakers lost the ball on an attempted forward pass, and Santa Ana kicked. Santa Ana recovered the ball on a fumble, on the Quakers' 20-yard line. Santa Ana tried a place kick, the ball striking the goal post and bounding back, being secured on Whittier's 15-yard line by Dubois. Whittier then held them for downs, and the half ended with the ball in Whittier's possession on her own 40-yard line.

That national greatness consists merely in wealth (stored up in the soil) and bulk (attracted here by the wealth.)

NEW PLAYERS ON THE ST. VINCENT'S GRIDIRON.

Coach Walter Hempel and His Huskies, football stars of prep. school who promise to become cracking good Saints under improved coaching.

CALL OF THE EAST.

HAGGERTY LOST TO OCCIDENTAL.

FORMER ST. VINCENT'S COACH GOES TO CHICAGO.

Windy City College Engages Erstwhile Colby Star to Conduct Athletics at Catholic Institution. Played on All Teams During School Career.

Frank Haggerty, former physical director and coach of athletic teams at St. Vincent's College, has accepted the position of physical director for St. Vincent's College, Chicago. He expects to leave Tuesday for the East, and has decided to remain at least a year in the Windy City. Later he proposes to return to Los Angeles to make his home and resume his law practice.

Haggerty was to have coached the Occidental baseball team next spring, and he has left unsigned a contract submitted by President Baer, calling for his services from January 1 to the close of the school year. In deciding to accept the Chicago offer, Haggerty has done so only because of the advantageous terms presented. St. Vincent's in Chicago is a school [illegible] to the Catholic institution [illegible], but is much wealthier, having [illegible] completed a six-story iron-frame [illegible] and a $325,000 theater. The [illegible] has a large number of students, and Haggerty is expected to cut a [illegible] with the various teams in Chicago athletics.

In the last fourten intercollegiate games while Haggerty was at St. Vincent's, the team lost but one game — basketball to Whittier.

Haggerty secured his athletic training at Exeter Academy and Colby University, Maine. At Colby he played on all the teams the college put out — football, baseball, basketball and track. For two years he captained the football team and was selected by [illegible] as an All-Maine end in 1900 and [illegible]. He was a crack baseball player four years.

During his athletic experience Haggerty has coached teams and acted as athletic director for nine years, assisting in the work at near-by schools while at college. He was coach at St. Vincent's for three years and scored [illegible] success.

HEMPEL HUMPING.

HOLDS MORNING PRACTICE.

With the Denver University game three weeks distant, the pigskin men of St. Vincent's have put in a [illegible] week of practice, and a [illegible] at the men as they run through the formations is convincing that the time has not been wasted. Now that the training table has become a factor, the daily grind has been lengthened and early morning signal practice added to the routine.

The Vincentian bunch is not overburdened with weight. The majority of the players are of the short, stocky type of football players that are capable of developing speed, which Hempel [illegible] will be one of their chief assets.

The second eleven has been pressed into service, with the result that hot scrimmages are held nightly. Hempel [illegible] ends, and all the members of the second squad are out for the job.

Pat Phillips will be back in school next week. He did yoeman service on last year's team, and his 185 pounds should strengthen the line of this year's eleven.

Hempel has been testing the ability of his men for the various positions, and at present it is hard to get a line on them. Holleran seems to be filling the center position with satisfaction, though he is light for the place. Burke and Taylor complete the central trio. Leffert and Brinkop have been playing the tackles, alternating with Binhoff, a likely candidate for the same positions. Grindel and Gus Nast are guarding the ends, and appear to be the men for the places. McGann and Gray are the subs for those positions.

DOUBLES THE BACKS.

In the back field all the positions are doubled, it being Hempel's intention to select the men for those positions prior to the games, and to substitute the others at the first signs of fatigue, so that the play may continue with speed without too great a strain on the men.

Huppert and Yabbarando are fighting it out for quarter. Both handle themselves well, and it will be hard to choose. Galt stands out for the place at full, with Brannen, Casey, Nast and Keim trying for the halves.

At present it looks as though the Grand-avenue school will be none too strong in the punting game. Huppert is first in line, and will probably do the booting, with Grindel trying the drop kicking and Keim directing the place kicks.

Some time during the early part of next week a meeting of the associated student body will be held. All the athletic matter will be gone over and managers will be elected for all of the teams. It is the intention of the faculty to have full student representation, and all questions of importance will be referred to that body; their decision will be final.

In meeting the Colorado team the Saints will find no easy pickings. The Denver boys are a fast, aggressive crowd, and last year were the masters of the new game in the mountain section, losing only to the heavier team from the School of Mines. It should prove to be good game, and afford an excellent opportunity for testing the Vincentians' strength.

HARD WORK COMING.

COACH PIERCE HUSTLES MEN.

CLAREMONT, Sept. 28.—Little actual football scrimmage has been done at Pomona this week, Coach Pierce deeming it advisable to break the men in slowly.

Of the veterans, Halladay is expected to return soon, but Eames will likely defer entering until October 15, which will debar him from the big games. Benner, for lack of time, and Birdsall, because of an injury, are also out of the game for 'varsity work.

Culver and Baird have not appeared on the gridiron yet, but will start in upon pigskin practice next week. Both have served as halfbacks for the Blue and White. Culver will try for an end position this season.

Metcalf has given up back-field playing, and will likely play tackle or guard. His kicking and punting will be supplemented by that of "Bob" Spurgeon, who is making a good try for quarter. Vaile will likely be sub quarter and have a chance at some of the big games.

The most difficulty seems to lie in filling Chisholm's place at full.

Ramney, the giant San Jacinto lad, is putting up a good try for center and passing well. Fuller is the only other candidate for the position.

Parker, Menges, Leeke and Shaw are all promising youngsters in the line and may make good. Metcalf is acting as captain until the new leader is elected, which will likely take place next week. Crawford, Taylor, Smith and Bryant are old men who are out again for positions in the line.

By October 12 Coach Pierce will have his bunch whipped into shape for the first practice game with Throop. A week later Los Angeles High will meet the collegians. These are the only practice games Pomona will have, and the team will have to rely much on the "scrub" eleven for training.

NO SECRET WORK.

HIGH SCHOOL PRACTICE.

Although Coach Sorenson of the Los Angeles High School has not yet given out the positions of his men, indications point to certain men for the line-up. The players are gradually getting into shape and are now working on the regular signal practice. There will be no secret practices this year, as the coach wishes his men to play the straight football.

Sorenson has given out that not a man is sure of his position and every one has to work to win. The coach is a disciplinarian, and would rather lose his best men than have them get the "swell-head" or not work in harmony with the others.

Chamberlin, a new man on the team, has been working hard for tackle and if he keeps up the good work he has been doing of late he should make it. Gissler, who did such good work last year as end, will hold the same position this year. Walker is an old man on the team and adds a great deal to its weight. He is playing in his old place as guard. He has done some good work in the last three years and appears to be in good condition at present.

Capt. Mitchell has decided to play half again, and he will do the punting for his team. Mitchell is the best player the High School has ever had. Powers, who played with Montgomery last year as half, is trying for that position again this year. He is a fast, active player and could make a good back. Hunter is proving slow and unless he adds speed to his weight will have a hard fight for the place at full, for Lull, the young full of last season, is working for that position. He did excellent playing last year, and the only thing he lacks is weight.

Cass, who with Berryman is trying out for quarter, is showing good judgment, and no doubt he would make a good quarter, but Berryman has the advantage of having played on the team before and always led the boys with a level head and a quick eye.

Cochran is a big fellow, and has been playing as tackle in the team for the last three years and he is the best man for that position the squad has ever had. A good many of the football enthusiasts fear that he intends to try for half. If this is so, the team will lose its best line man for a moderately slow half.

R. Van Cleve, secretary of the school, has announced that the treasury has not sufficient funds to pay the expenses of the team. Last year Principal Housh decided not to impose dues for athletics this season, thinking that there were sufficient funds on hand to support the squad, but this money was used for athletic improvements, thus leaving the team to its own resources.

When the track team went North last year a minstrel show was given by the school to cover their expenses. Manager Howard favors giving another entertainment of this kind and will do all in his power to bring this to action.

SELLEN AS COACH.

FOOTBALL AT HOLLYWOOD.

Rollin H. Sellen has been secured as physical culture teacher and football coach at Hollywood High this year. He takes the place of Charles A. Webster, who was injured this summer at his home in Michigan.

Sellen is a graduate of the Cumnock School of Oratory and of the Northwestern University. His physical-culture work will be of first importance to the school, but he has enthused the foothill boys with a football spirit to such an extent that he has two teams out for practice every night.

R. H. Sellen,
coach of Hollywood football team.

Although this is the first season, the first team has entered the County League for football, and will meet some of the strongest teams of the high schools. Sellen has been coached by both Hogan and Purdy, famous easterners. He captained the football team for three years in his college, and last year coached at Nashville University.

The girls' basketball team will be coached by Miss Keturah Paul, a regular teacher, who is a graduate of the University of California. The tennis will be under the direction of Miss Genevieve Decker, an alumnae of the University of Michigan.

CARLISLE'S NEW STARS.

Coach Glenn Warner Gathering Crack Team to Play Most Arduous Eastern Schedule.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

CARLISLE (Pa.) Sept. 25.—The new candidates who are showing promise of becoming eastern football stars are Peck, P. Houser, Payne and Lyon. Two McLeans, who are cousins, are attending the Carlisle school, and seem to be comers. Jordan and Round Stone are two new probabilities as line men, with G. Gardner, White, Penny, Long and Little-Old-Man, as former second team players, who will probably make the first team.

One cannot yet give an opinion on the comparative qualification of this year's Indian candidates, as the aborigines have not passed that point where individual work has begun to show. There is no doubt but that the Carlisle eleven will be up to the usual Carlisle standard.

Among the returned players are Capt. Antonio Lubo, Wasouka, Exendine, Gardner, Little Boy, Mount Pleasant, Scheuchuk, Island, Little-Old-Man, Winney, Balenti and Long. Bowen, who was not a regular last year, may possibly make a strong candidate for a guard position. Both Wheeler and Schuchuk, the Esquimo, are light for center, to which each aspires, and Coach Warner may possibly be compelled to utilize his heaviest players without regard for their experience.

AWKWARD SQUAD.

CARDINAL TEAM IS EMBRYONIC.

COACHES UNCERTAIN OF PLAYERS FOR 'VARSITY FIFTEEN.

One Hundred and Fifty Men Trying for Places and Coaches Are Sifting Out Best Material—Class Teams Have Served as Convenient Early Subdivision.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Sept. 27.—There has been no opportunity for getting a line on 'varsity prospects, for the reason that the big squad of 150 men has been divided into class teams, and not a single 'varsity line-up appeared during the first three weeks, the fifteen chosen to meet the Barbarians in Saturday's game being the first chosen as a 'varsity squad.

The class division has merely served as a convenient subdivision, for the coaches to handle the squad in getting over the preliminary work. After all the class team practice, the inter-class series came dangerously near being called off because three freshmen were five minutes late on arriving on the field. Lanagan called the contests off, but afterwards relented and they were held Wednesday and Thursday.

The following men have been put on the subbing list by the coaches: Koerner, Thorpe, Pemberton, Owen, Vandervoort, Crawford, Fenton, Hernley, Miller, Rhyne, Cadwallader, Minturn, Reed, Cline, Little and Vail. Reed of Portland and Cline of Los Angeles are the only freshmen on the list and are the only first-year men who show 'varsity possibilities.

In Crawford, who returns this year after a year's absence from college, Stanford will have a powerful addition to her scrum. Crawford played guard on the 1905 'varsity game, and the Cardinal made her best gains through him. Vandervoort also is a veteran from the 1905 team and will be the fastest man in the back field this year, as he was then.

Only two weeks remain before the date of the intercollegiate freshman contest on California Field, October 12. St. Mary's College and Santa Clara College have adopted Rugby this season and the freshmen will play one or two more games with both of them. Two games have been scheduled with Santa Clara, one on October 2 and one on October 9, and a game has been scheduled for Saturday, October 4, with St. Mary's.

Reed promises to develop into a first-class 'varsity player, and Cline will, in all probability, make a fast man, but the rest of the material has failed to show any great promise.

The games that had been scheduled with the University of Nevada have been called off on account of a conflict of dates and a failure of the two student managers to fix on any one date agreeable to both sides. Nevada will play California, and it is possible that the Sagebrushers will extend their trip so as to get on a game with the Stanford team. The Vancouver team, the San Francisco Barbarians, the Los Angeles Rugby club, and possibly St. Mary's and Santa Clara, will be all that the Cardinal will include in her schedule of 'varsity games.

Two Tourists Entered---Two Perfect Scores

The run was the most exacting in points of roads, grades and time limit. The route included negotiation of the famous San Juan 10 per cent. and 15 per cent. grades. Twelve high grade gasoline cars, all autocrats in motordom, were in competion, with powers ranging from 24 to 60 H. P. Average price was over $3400. But all were defeated by the TOURISTS.

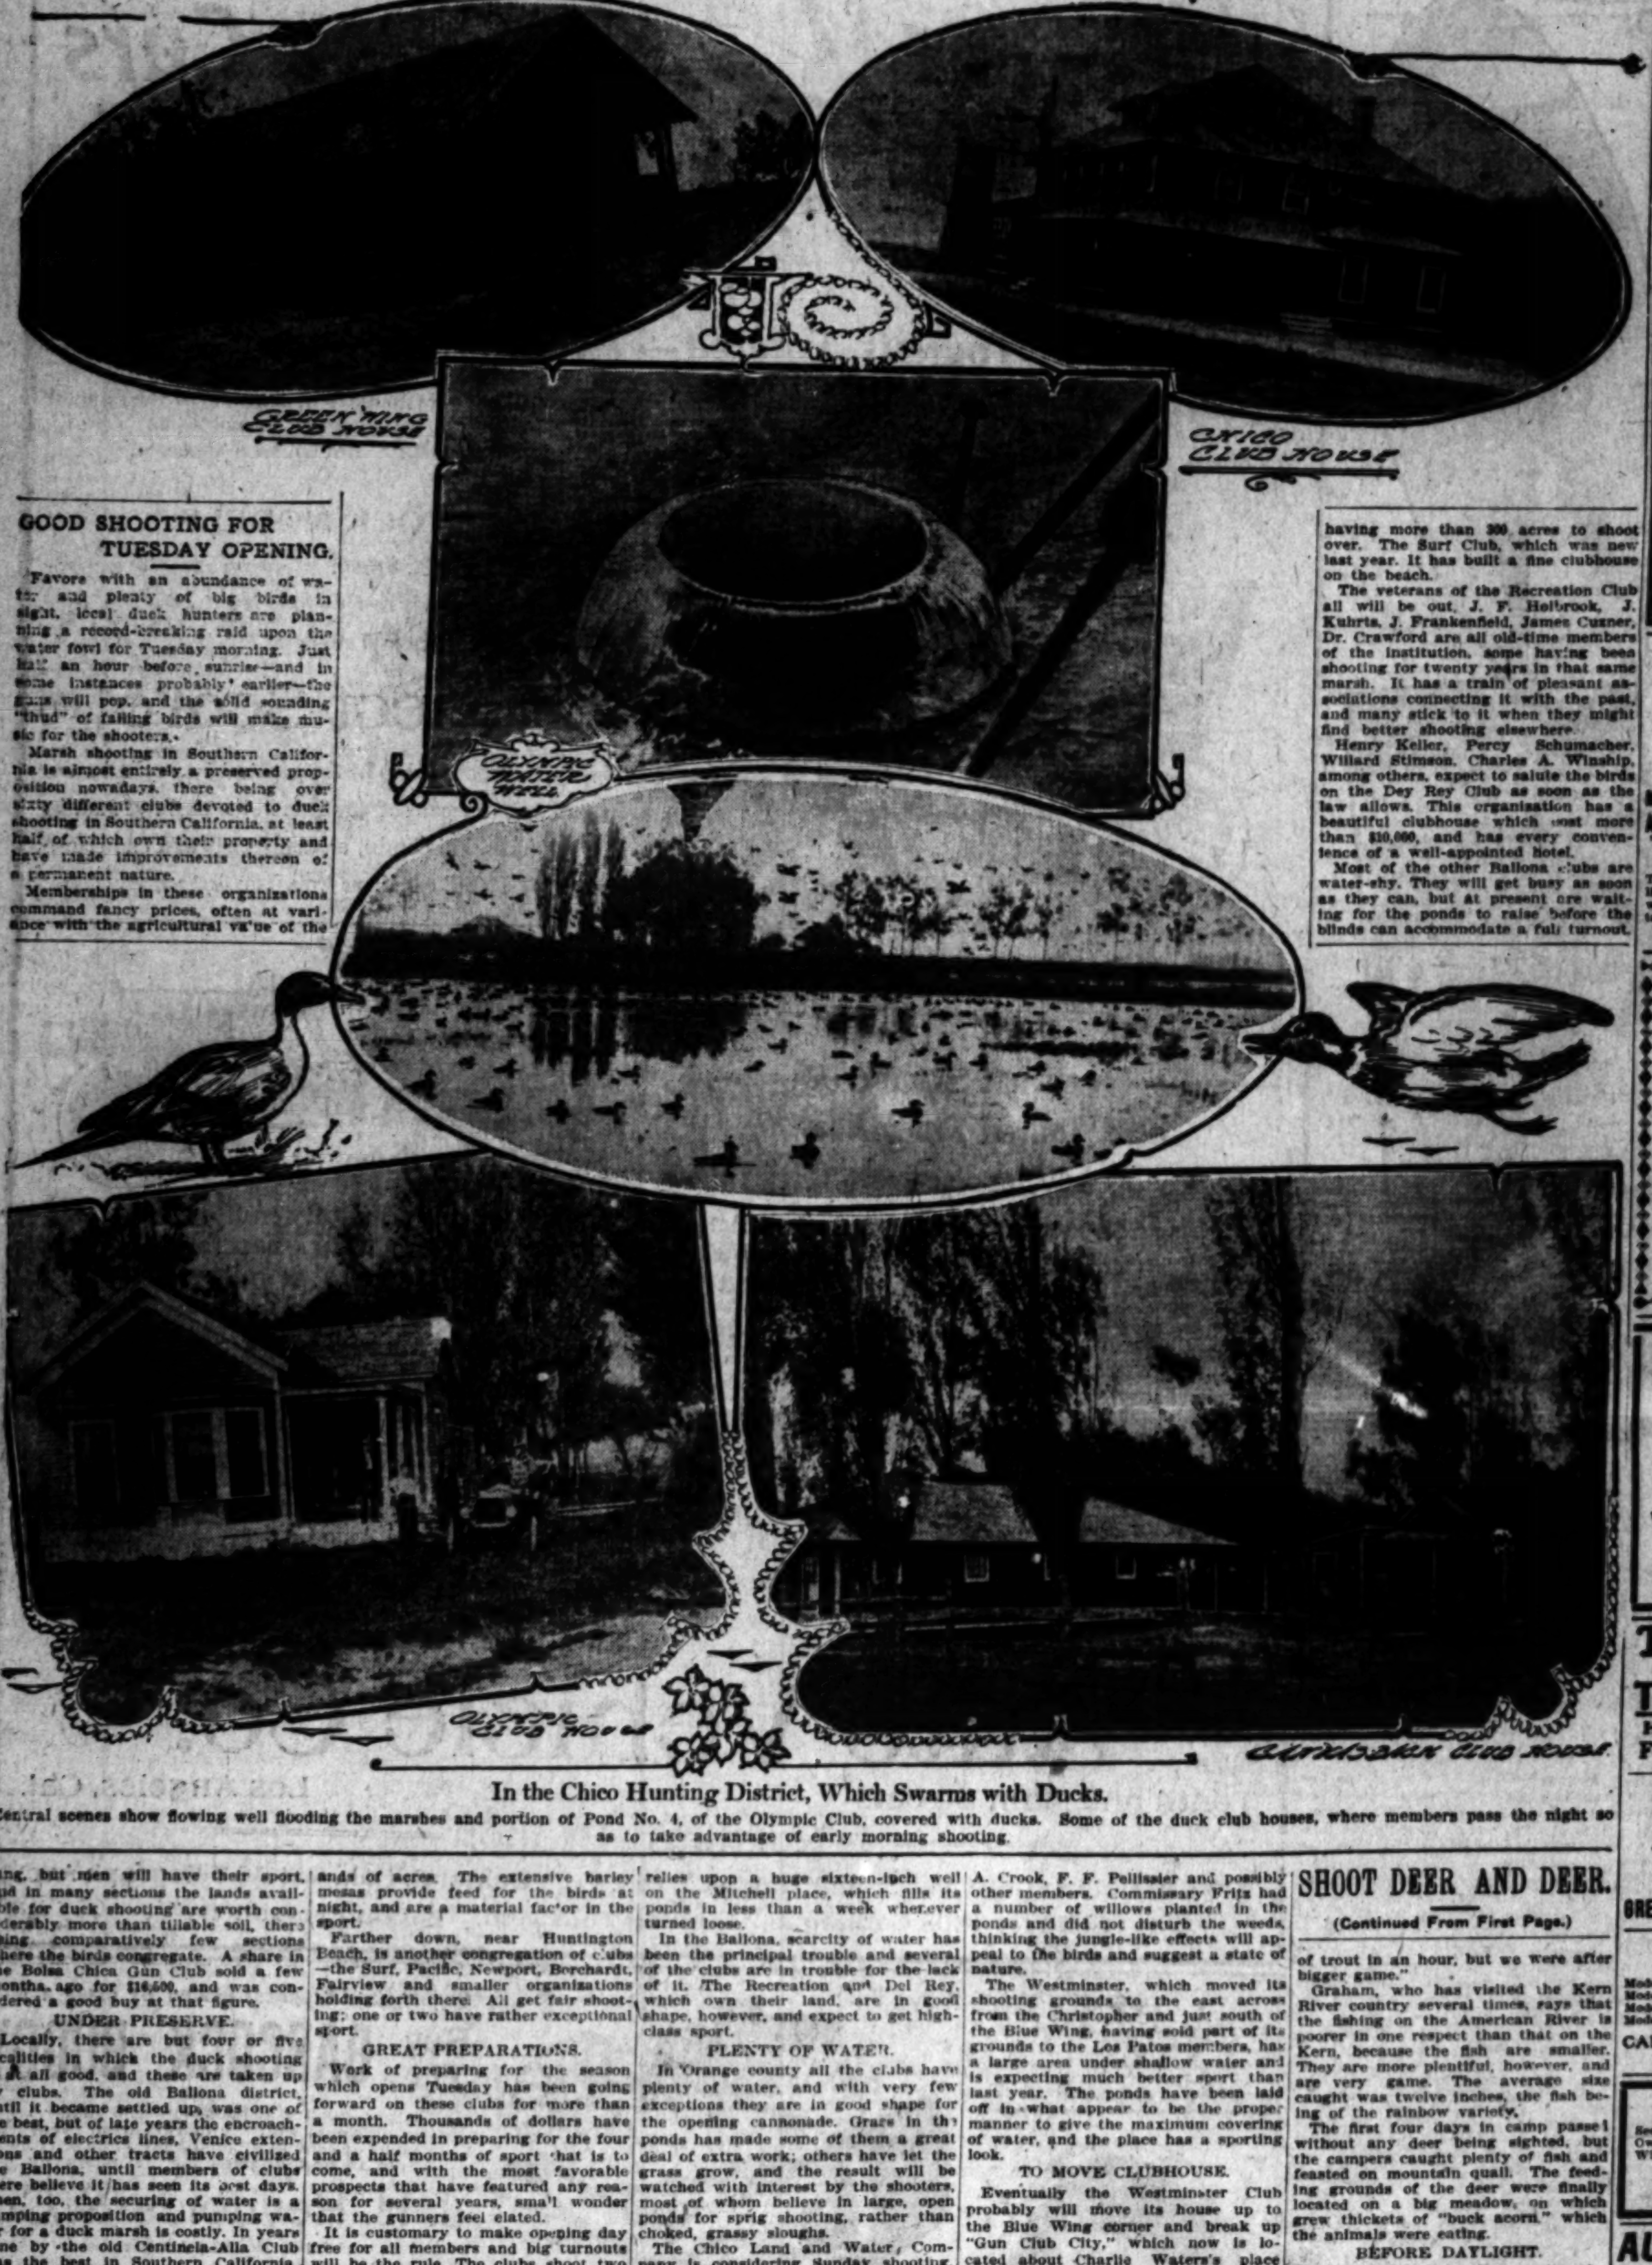
Duck Club Where Season's Shooting Begins Tuesday.



In the Chico Hunting District, Which Swarms with Ducks.

Central scenes show flowing well flooding the marshes and portion of Pond No. 4, of the Olympic Club, covered with ducks. Some of the duck club houses, where members pass the night so as to take advantage of early morning shooting.

GOOD SHOOTING FOR TUESDAY OPENING.

Favore with an abundance of water and plenty of big birds in sight, local duck hunters are planning a record-breaking raid upon the water fowl for Tuesday morning. Just half an hour before sunrise—and in some instances probably earlier—the guns will pop, and the solid sounding "thud" of falling birds will make music for the shooters.

Marsh shooting in Southern California is almost entirely a preserved proposition nowadays, there being over sixty different clubs devoted to duck shooting in Southern California, at least half of which own their property and have made improvements thereon of a permanent nature.

Memberships in these organizations command fancy prices, often at variance with the agricultural value of the land, but men will have their sport, and in many sections the lands available for duck shooting are worth considerably more than tillable soil, there being comparatively few sections where the birds congregate. A share in the Bolsa Chica Gun Club sold a few months ago for $16,500, and was considered a good buy at that figure.

UNDER PRESERVE.

Locally, there are but four or five localities in which the duck shooting is at all good, and these are taken up by clubs. The old Ballona district, until it became settled up, was one of the best, but of late years the encroachments of electrics lines, Venice extensions and other tracts have civilized the Ballona, until members of clubs there believe it has seen its best days. Then, too, the securing of water is a pumping proposition and pumping water for a duck marsh is costly. In years gone by the old Centinela-Alla Club was the best in Southern California, and some fabulous bags were made there.

Below Clearwater is another stretch of marshy ground which has yielded some great shooting in the past. The Green Wing, Cerritos and Pasadena clubs have most of the available shooting under lease now, and the sport hardly can be regarded as of a permanent nature on account of the clubs being merely tenants.

Realizing this fact, a number of members of clubs in this district went into the sparsely-settled western portion of Orange county several years ago and looked up duck marsh with such satisfactory results that there now are something like two dozen clubs in that commonwealth, nearly all of which are owners of their shooting grounds in fee simple, and are incorporated as land and water companies.

CONTROL BIG MARSH.

The seekers after shooting in nearly all cases bought tracts of land adjoining each other, until there now is one section, the Chico district, which contains seventeen clubs, an area roughly eight miles long by half as wide, which is owned and controlled by the duck clubs. In this country are the famed Chico, Green Wang, Blue Wing, Christopher, Canvasback, Olympic, the new Creedmoor, Westminster, Golden West, Algonquin, Los Patos, Center, Sunset, San Pedro, Lomita and Bolsa Chica clubs, containing not far from 300 shooters, who enjoy their portion of what no doubt is the largest artificial duck marsh in the world today.

On most of this land ten years ago there was neither water nor ducks. The transformation was effected by throwing up dikes and boring wells to fill shallow ponds such as the shoal water ducks of the sprig type love. In this section the ponds in area cover thousands of acres. The extensive barley means provide feed for the birds at night, and are a material factor in the sport.

Farther down, near Huntington Beach, is another congregation of clubs—the Surf, Pacific, Newport, Berchardt, Fairview and smaller organizations holding forth there. All get fair shooting; one or two have rather exceptional sport.

GREAT PREPARATIONS.

Work of preparing for the season which opens Tuesday has been going forward on these clubs for more than a month. Thousands of dollars have been expended in preparing for the four and a half months of sport that is to come, and with the most favorable prospects that have featured any reason for several years, small wonder that the gunners feel elated.

It is customary to make opening day free for all members and big turnouts will be the rule. The clubs shoot two days a week, one squad taking the midweek hunt, and the other shooting at the end of the week whether that be Saturday or Sunday. On opening and closing days the enthusiasm of the sportsmen knows no such bounds, and the blinds are likely to be taxed to their utmost.

Automobile parties will be all the rage. After the rains come and the sharp mornings cast the ruts into adamantine firmness, the interurban electric cars will be good enough for the scatter-gunners, but at present the popularity of the big touring car cannot be questioned. Every club has at least one party coming by automobile. The Ballona institutions as a rule are reached that way, the distance being short, and more easilly covered by the machine. In Orange county a forty-mile run separates the Los Angeles shooter from his club, and a three-hour jaunt is involved, but the roads are at their best now, and many will combine the pleasures of motoring and shooting in consequence.

ONLY BIG DUCKS.

Only big ducks are in evidence on the ponds thus far. Birds are not very plentiful in the Ballona, although limits seem in prospect the first day. On the Cerritos the sprigs are beginning to come in better. The Orange county clubs, however, have had them for a month, and a leading authority predicted Thursday that he would get the limit of thirty-five before 7 o'clock in the morning.

Nearly all the southern clubs are in good shape. The Cerritos Club always has plenty of water from its artesian supply and thanks to Bouton Lake. The Greenwing, its neighbor (there is another of the same name in Orange county, although the latter is incorporated as a land and water company,) relies upon a huge sixteen-inch well on the Mitchell place, which fills its ponds in less than a week wherever turned loose.

In the Ballona, scarcity of water has been the principal trouble and several of the clubs are in trouble for the lack of it. The Recreation and Del Rey, which own their land, are in good shape, however, and expect to get high-class sport.

PLENTY OF WATER.

In Orange county all the clubs have plenty of water, and with very few exceptions they are in good shape for the opening cannonade. Grass in the ponds has made some of them a great deal of extra work; others have let the grass grow, and the result will be watched with interest by the shooters, most of whom believe in large, open ponds for sprig shooting, rather than choked, grassy sloughs.

The Chico Land and Water, Company is considering Sunday shooting, as are a number of neighboring clubs. Most of its members, including the Maier brothers, Harry Graham, Joe Gioia, Frank Huebsch, Ed Golter, Henry Koch, Chris Krempel, will leave on one of the afternoon cars tomorrow for Bay City, where they will be met by their rig and hauled to the clubhouse, as will Gen. C. F. A. Last, Jacob Fieber, Jacob Adloff and August Winstel of the neighboring Green Wing on the east, while the full membership of the Olympic Club, excepting Mel Nordlinger and Bob Levy, will be afield on that preserve. Nordlinger is in the East and that is his only reason for not appearing. Frank Bowles, Jake Baum, Irving Smith, Harry Van Vorst, R. A. Chipron, Walter J. Wren, Harry Baum and William Mackie are a few of them who expect to be "on the job."

Ed Featherstone of the Canvasback will take a party of members of that institution to the grounds in his automobile leaving town Monday afternoon. Among others, W. F. Chandler, A. E. Morro, George S. Hupp, Edwin L. Hedderly, Samuel C. Hall, Louis A. Denker and H. T. Rudisill expect to be on hand for the opening of the season Tuesday morning. This club put down another ten-inch well and made some extensive improvements during the summer, having had plenty of ducks for a month, as has been the rule with most of its neighbors, also.

BLUE WING PARTY.

The Blue Wing will be manned by the Stephens brothers, Dr. C. B. Jones, George P. Adams, Dr. O. P. Steen, Dr. Schiffman, the Glassell brothers, E. L. Allen and possibly others. It has plenty of water and has been feeding several weeks to very good purpose.

On the Christopher will be Godfrey Fritz, J. W. Morrison, A. W. Eager, J. A. Crook, F. F. Pellissier and possibly other members. Commissary Frits had a number of willows planted in the ponds and did not disturb the weeds, thinking the jungle-like effects will appeal to the birds and suggest a state of nature.

The Westminster, which moved its shooting grounds to the east across from the Christopher and just south of the Blue Wing, having sold part of its grounds to the Los Patos members, has a large area under shallow water and is expecting much better sport than last year. The ponds have been laid off in what appear to be the proper manner to give the maximum covering of water, and the place has a sporting look.

TO MOVE CLUBHOUSE.

Eventually the Westminster Club probably will move its house up to the Blue Wing corner and break up "Gun Club City," which now is located about Charlie Waters's place where the Golden West, Algonquin and Los Patos now have their houses alongside the Westminster quarters. Among the members are C. C. Carpenter, Walter R. Leeds, Adolf Swartz, J. M. Elliott, F. E. Browne and Stoddard Jess, most of whom will be busy Tuesday morning bright and early.

The Golden West ponds are in their usual good shape, and Manager E. A. Curtis, Frank Barnes, H. S. Hazeltine, Charles Malcom, and perhaps others of the dozen members will be talking the prospects over in the clubhouse tomorrow evening.

The Los Patos is a newly-formed club, Asa Casner of El Monte being president. There are but six members.

A. T. Jergins, E. Paggi, Dr. C. G. Stivers, R. Mausard and several others of the fifteen members of the Sunset Club will shoot at that preserve the opening day.

The Lomita numbers three dozen members and among others the Amestoy brothers, George Dotter, Dr. Roller, H. W. Lewis, M. P. Snyder, Fred Johnson, J. W. A. Off, expect to celebrate the coming of the season tomorrow night.

Of the forty members of the Bolsa Chica, nearly half expect to be on hand. Count Von Schmidt, M. J. Connell, Col. Morehous, J. S. Torrance are a few who seldom miss a shoot. This preserve always is in the best of shape, and many birds have been seen upon it this month. It is one of the most convenient, being on the car line.

The clubs below Huntington Beach will have a busy evening also. There is the Pacific with a dozen members, among them W. H. Holmes, F. G. Schumacher, F. M. Notman, E. B. Tufts, who expect to open the season; the Newport, of which James Matfield, Irving Ingraham and E. W. Murphy, Jr., are three of the four members, having more than 300 acres to shoot over. The Surf Club, which was new last year. It has built a fine clubhouse on the beach.

The veterans of the Recreation Club all will be out. J. F. Holbrook, J. Kuhrts, J. Frankenfield, James Cuzner, Dr. Crawford are all old-time members of the institution, some having been shooting for twenty years in that same marsh. It has a train of pleasant associations connecting it with the past, and many stick to it when they might find better shooting elsewhere.

Henry Keller, Percy Schumacher, Willard Stimson, Charles A. Winship, among others, expect to salute the birds on the Dey Rey Club as soon as the law allows. This organization has a beautiful clubhouse which cost more than $10,000, and has every convenience of a well-appointed hotel.

Most of the other Ballona clubs are water-shy. They will get busy as soon as they can, but at present are waiting for the ponds to raise before the blinds can accommodate a full turnout.

SHOOT DEER AND DEER.

of trout in an hour, but we were after bigger game."

Graham, who has visited the Kern River country several times, says that the fishing on the American River is poorer in one respect than that on the Kern, because the fish are smaller. They are more plentiful, however, and are very game. The average size caught was twelve inches, the fish being of the rainbow variety.

The first four days in camp passed without any deer being sighted, but the campers caught plenty of fish and feasted on mountain quail. The feeding grounds of the deer were finally located on a big meadow, on which grew thickets of "buck acorn," which the animals were eating.

BEFORE DAYLIGHT.

Before 4 o'clock in the morning the hunters would roll out of their blankets and, after eating a hasty breakfast, hit the trail for the feeding ground of the deer, guided by bicycle lamps, which they found very handy for prowling about in the darkness. An hour's walk took them to the hunting grounds, where each one would station himself where he could command a view of the meadow below him. Thus they would quietly wait for daylight and the sight of deer, maintaining their positions until about an hour after sunrise, when, if no game had been killed, they would beat the thickets and thus start up their quarry.

It was in this manner that the two 300-pound bucks were killed. When jumped, the two five-pointers, which were together, ran directly toward the sun, and a good many shots were fired by the hunters who started them, before they were downed.

A bear was surrounded in a brush patch. This animal was wounded by the first shot, but scampered away and hid in the roots of an overturned tree. When finally brought to bay, it took several shots to bring him down. This bear died without a whimper but another one, wounded in a willow patch, seized a piece of timber and clawed it furiously, growling and snapping in his rage.

Bears were very numerous where the party camped and their presence was attributed to the fact that three cows had recently died from eating a poisonous weed and the bears had gathered for a feast. Six bears in all were seen, and four killed.

Rattlesnakes abounded, and because they in most cases unable to rattle, were doubly dangerous. Eight of them were killed and but one of these was able to make a noise with his tail when attacked.

FISHERMAN'S LUCK.

POOR SEASON, SAY ANGLERS.

Rod and Reel Clubmen Believe Fish Grow Scarcer.

Need of Legislation Shown by Present Season.

Summer Tournament Closes by Tomorrow Night.

Today and tomorrow mark the winding up of the Southern California Rod and Reel Club's first angling tournament, and in view of the rather small size of some of the prospective prize winners, which seem on paper beatable enough, the angling enthusiasts who compose the organization are leaving no likely spots unprospected today, and will attempt to raise the limits in the alongshore and deep-water classes before it is officially declared "too late."

Lively interest has been manifested in the tournament throughout, although the exceptionally poor fishing season has militated against the entry. In no branch has the marine angling been up to average grade this summer, and in consequence fishermen, who are of an inquiring turn of mind, as a class, have searched faithfully for the cause, but in vain. Many theories exist, most of which are entirely speculative, and with no substantial foundation in fact whatever. The advance indications were, in the main, more favorable than usual, but the sport was late in starting alongshore, and never really began outside.

At Catalina the same experience was the portion of the hundreds of anglers who annually pass their midsummer vacation with the yellowtail and jewfish around the island. The tuna crop was almost a compleet failure in both varieties, the smaller yellow-finned variety being present apparently in goodly numbers, and often being seen in the depths with schools of albicore, but nothing the anglers have had in stock seemed to be of much value in tempting them to strike. The season's catches could be summed up on one's fingers.

Yellowtail at Catalina are like quail in the hills—always to be found if the angler strikes the right place. This year it was hard to locate, but during the month of July and part of August the heavy fishing was good around Catalina, jewfish, yellowtail, and albicore being sufficiently plentiful to assure fair sport, although hardly up to the average of the past. Early in the season the white sea bass ran quite well, and some splendid specimens were entered.

CAUSE OF SCARCITY.

The scarcity of fish is generally attributed to the inroads some of the market fishermen have been making, particularly in the supply of bait. Sardines have been scarce for several seasons; in fact, ever since the peredinium plague of a few years ago, and were it possible to regulate the traffic in accordance with the supply, fishing for bait could have been stopped three years ago with great benefit, for a time, to the concerns that pack the fish. Constituting, with the anchovy, the chief source of food supply of the large marine game fishes, the scarcity of sardines reasonably accounts for the rarity of yellowtail and bass as compared with previous years. These fish are predaceous and migratory in the highest degree, and will go where they find the conditions that suit them best, thinking no more of a swim of several hundred miles than the birds do of flying that distance, although such testimony as is available indicates the fish travel more slowly, and take more frequent rests.

That the time for intelligent and efficient protection for sea fish has arrived, and that legislation of a drastic character, rigidly enforced, is the only salvation for the remnant of coastwise fish, is the belief of Southern California sportsmen. A few of the market men are long-headed enough to see where the indiscriminate seining of all sizes and kinds of fish will lead, and while it was never recorded that any such ever inaugurated needed reforms, a strong minority would favor any reasonable legislation caculated to improve the fish supply of the future. At times it has been impossible to get enough fish to meet the demand, and in times of plenty the concerns engaged in the business have ben freezing down fish in cold-storage to sell them during such market stringencies.

CASE OF LOBSTERS.

The lobster season, which opened September 15, thus far is a flat failure, and many boats have gone out of the business. Nothing better illustrates the [illegible] than the spiny lobster of this coast. A dozen years ago the markets fairly could give him away. The indiscriminate catching of the lobster exhausted the supply in many sections, and sent the price of the remaining [illegible] extremely high. The result is [illegible] boats now go from 50 to 100 miles [illegible] from 5 to 10 per cent. of the catch [illegible] could make within two hours' run [illegible] San Pedro a few years ago. The [illegible] law is the best yet, but is not [illegible] experts say.

Among other things that prompted the organization of the Southern California Rod and Reel Club was the knowledge that the fish supply soon would be a thing of the past unless steps were taken by a large and [illegible] body, looking toward their [illegible]. Next year it is assured [illegible] California will be represented [illegible] State Board of Fish Commissioners, and a man familiar with the [illegible], with energy and force [illegible] to accomplish something, will [illegible] as candidate.

[illegible] upon the marauding of the [illegible] has been found necessary in the [illegible] and the pound-net fishery has [illegible] abolished in many sections of the [illegible] seaboard.

TARGET PRACTICE.

[illegible] Angeles and Northern Crack Shots to Attend Arizona Tourney at Douglas.

[illegible] view of the opening of the duck [illegible] Tuesday, a large attendance of scattergun cracks is expected at [illegible] final day of the Western Gun [illegible] bluerock tournament now in [illegible] at the Sherman grounds, being the last opportunity the experts [illegible] have for practice.

[illegible] the professional marksmen now [illegible] shoot, including Harry Hoyt, [illegible] Holling, J. Ed Vaughan, Billie [illegible] Chris. Gottlieb, D. W. King, Jr., [illegible] Reed, and Thomas A. Marshall [illegible] to participate in the Arizona [illegible]'s Association tournament to [illegible] place at Douglas, Ariz. October [illegible] and 12. The Douglas Gun Club [illegible] pull off the shoot, and has arranged for a percentage form of money [illegible] that has been popular in Arizona. Four classes are made and the [illegible] is cut into four equal parts, [illegible] dividing its pro-rata. Big [illegible] is added, however, figuring $20 [illegible] event.

[illegible] shoots are open to the Territory's sportsmen only. There are about [illegible] programmed each day on [illegible] average. In addition to the professional squad will be the celebrated amateurs, W. H. Varian, "Pop" Carr of Monterey, and Marcus G. Lane and Fred B. Mills of Southern California.

Marshall is making up a party to go to San Diego early in the week, proposing to show the Pastime Gun Club people a little sport by arranging an impromptu shoot. The Pastimers have not been heard from for some time.

From San Diego the scene of action will shift to the Arizona shoot. The fall is the great season for trap shooting in the Territory, and a chain of tournaments probably will be arranged by the time the Douglas shoot opens.

MEAN BUSINESS.

ANGLERS MEET IN NEW YORK.

DELEGATES TO GATHER TO FORM A NATIONAL CLUB.

Interests of Fishermen to Be Protected by Large Body Composed of Delegates from the Various Clubs. Local Men to Represent This Section.

All three of California's big sea angling clubs are to be represented by delegates at the conference of anglers to be held in New York City at the National History Museum on November 11. Subjects of discussion will be the pollution of angling waters, the vicious use of nets and spears, inadequate laws, unsportsmanlike tackle, etc.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke will preside and will read a paper, as will Prof. David Starr Jordan, Prof. Barton W. Evermann of the United States Fisheries Bureau; Prof. Charles Frederick Holder, president of the Tuna Club; Charles Hallock; Arthur Jerome Eddy, president of the Catalina Light Tackle Club, and others.

The formation of a strong central association is contemplated, with a view to bringing anglers everywhere closer together so national legislation may be secured on needed points by concerted action. Various peculiarities of each section will be set forth and explained. Anglers in general are invited to attend. F. L. Harding, corresponding secretary of the Tuna Club, Arcade building, Philadelphia, is in charge of preliminary arrangements.

Prof. Holder will represent the Tuna Club, President Eddy the Light Tackle Club, and F. C. Gay of Brooklyn the Southern California Rod and Reel Club. Gay is familiar with Catalina conditions from his last winter's experience there.

Among the prominent sea angling clubs supporting the movement are, besides the California organizations mentioned, the Aransas Pass Tarpon Club, which will be represented probably by its president, L. P. Streeter, or by A. W. Hooper of Boston; the Asbury Park Fishing Club of New Jersey; several State game and fish protective associations, and the National Association of Scientific Angling Clubs. In fact, the project may merge into the latter eventually.

Fishermen believe matters are coming to such a pass that unless the anglers get together upon some questions of national importance at once and compel the attention of the Federal authorities to the remedying of some glaring abuses, there will be no fish in a few more years. The wholesale pollution of streams by factories of various sorts is illegal, but few States seem able to cope with it, and a national law to the same effect is needed.

Sea anglers are not less affected than those who take their sport in fresh water. In many sections indiscriminate seining has ruined the fishing and almost exterminated fine varieties of food fish that were plentiful only a few years ago. The need of such legislation has been pointed out by Fred Mather and others, but only a strong centralized association can hope to compel action, it is believed.

MITTMEN BOX.

AMATEURS BUSY AT OCEAN PARK.

ATHLETIC CLUB EXPERTS ARE TO SPAR AT THE BEACH.

Five or Six Four-Round Bouts Programmed and Warm Sport Is in Prospect—Van Court Forms Moonlight Walking Club to Ascend Mount Wilson.

Boxing enthusiasts of the Los Angeles Athletic Club Thursday night will avail themselves of special invitations to witness a few bouts at the Country Club House at Ocean Park. The performance is strictly amateur, and four-round bouts will be the limit. No decisions will be rendered.

Secretary Force Parker has arranged a ring in one of the halls at the Country Club, and five or six bouts will be pulled off. The Los Angeles Athletic Club will be represented by Walla V. Wheeler and Gus Fratello, who will spar at 118 pounds; H. Brooker and H. Heizman, at the same weight; George Damron and Sam Coulter, at catch-weights; Ike Levy and Howard Kline, the latter a Van Doozer protégé, at 118, and J. Jacoby and R. Montgomery, at 135. Clifford Reuman will be on hand also, and an opponent may be found for him.

Damron and Coulter put up a red-hot engagement at the rowing reception of the Los Angeles Athletic Club last Tuesday night, showing speed, cleverness and strength unusual in amateurs. Damron has the best of the weight. Jacoby and Montgomery also go right to it when boxing. Ike Levy is one of the cleverest of little fellows, his bouts with Will Graham being marvels of speed and accuracy of footwork.

Wheeler and Fratello put up a good showing, the latter being quite a comer. He is young, and has more time to improve than his older opponents. All the lads have been training a little for their bouts, and are in good condition, fit to step quite a fast pace. A few Los Angeles Athletic Club boxing fans will accompany their favorites, arranging to take the same car.

DeWitt Van Court, the boxing instructor of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, has evolved a scheme to condition his men for their tussles. On the middle Saturday of October, he will gather as many of them as possible and set off for a walk to Mt. Wilson, arriving after dark and passing the night at the hotel, leaving for town Sunday afternoon. This method of training was very popular around the Olympic Club, San Francisco.

"FLUFFY RUFFLES," famous throughout the East, will make her appearance in Los Angeles on October 20.

FRANK G. CARPENTER'S letter in The Times Magazine the coming Sunday will tell how Egypt is irrigated by the Nile.

"Fluffy Ruffles," famous throughout the East, will make her appearance in Los Angeles on October 20.

SCREWING THE SCRUM.

CASTAWAYS WIN FIRST CONTEST.

BRITISH RUGBY MEN AND POLY BOYS PLAY FAIR BALL.

Pat Higgins Is Star of Game and Was in Thick of Every Play—English Team Will Put in Week of Hard Practice to Play Stanford Next Saturday at Fiesta.

Castaways, 17; Polytechnic, 8.

Rugby, with the scrum reduced to a minimum, was tried at Fiesta Park yesterday, the Castaways defeating Polytechnic by the score of 17 to 8. The newness of the style of play to many of the players spoiled the contest as an exhibition of clever Rugby, but the game was fiercely played from start to finish, and streaks of brilliant work served to redeem the ragged play.

Although the scrum was done away with, as far as possible, the game was not openly played, and much of the time, especially in the first half, the bleachers saw only a tangled mass of arms and legs, with the ball rolling around in the middle.

The second half developed better playing, and the Castaways scored four tries by good passing and kicking. Team work and open play characterized the last part of the game, after the Englishmen, who were playing together for the first time, had become acquainted with each other.

Polytechnic proved superior in the scrum, and heeled out the ball in almost every encounter. The speed and experience of several of the Castaway players more than made up for the inexperience of their scrum, and in the second half they carried the ball down the field in passing rushes, completely overwhelming Poly's fifteen.

Capt. Pat Higgins was the star of the game. Every time he got hold of the ball something happened, and it was he who kicked the only goal for the Castaways, after Caley had missed several times. Caley was fast, and hard to down, and Mitchell did some good work. Roy Edwards, a Stanford 'varsity man last year, showed the best head work, and his passing was fast and accurate.

Polytechnic scored five in the first half, on a try and a kicked goal; the Castaways scored a try, but missed the goal.

In the second half Poly scored another try, but the ball sailed wide of the goal posts on the kick. The Castaways ran up fourteen points in this half, on four tries and one goal.

The Castaways will practice hard during the week, and should be ready to put up a good game with Stanford next Saturday. If the team strengthens its scrum, and the players are drilled in fast passing rushes, a fast contest of good Rugby may be expected when Stanford arrives.

Following was the line-up yesterday:

Castaways	Position	Polytechnic
Sweet	fullback	Goodwin
Holmes	three-quarters	Strang
Coover	three-quarters	Lafferty
Edwards	three-quarters	O'Rourke
Caley	three-quarters	Seabrock
Tom Higgins	halfback	Hue
White	halfback	Rowe
Pat Higgins (c)	forward	Manning
Densham	forward	Price
Evans	forward	Rickerhauser (c)
Walton	forward	Thomas
Mitchell	forward	Hendrickson
McGrew	forward	Layman
Ward	forward	Porter
Lewin	forward	Lane

Kurrle, forward, Polytechnic.
Referee—A. Pierce; Purdy, timer.
Halves—15 minutes.
Time—One hour.

IMPORTANT IF TRUE.

BLACK CHAMP MAY RETIRE.

Gans Will Stop Fighting for Some Months.

Thinks Jimmy Burns Can Win from Nelson.

Joe Leaves for Baltimore on Monday Morning.

Joe Gans, champion lightweight fighter, has retired.

His battle Friday night with Jimmy Memsic Burns ended his career, according to his own story and he will leave tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock for Baltimore, where he is to go into the hotel business, unless some real charitable prize fight manager will offer Joe a big purse to beat some kid at the fighting game. The champion declares, however, that he is done, that is, almost done. There is no good money in sight.

Joe met a lot of newspaper men and Jimmy Burns on the street yesterday morning and the champion kindly offered to hand the title to Jimmy, if he would not bar any colored fighters. Of course, Jimmy was tickled to death to get such a valuable present and probably thinks now that he is the champion lightweight, but with Gans still alive, he is about as much a champion as Tommy Burns is of the heavyweights.

There is little doubt but that Jimmy gave Gans one of the stiffest fights of his career, the other hard ones being with Walcott and Nelson. Gans declares that Jimmy can beat Britt or Nelson without much effort, and Gans's manager, Selig, says he will bet money Jimmy can beat Nelson in ten rounds. Of course, all this is the "after-taking" talk that follows all fights, but in this case it is about true. Gans has retired, but as Selig says, "if duty calls Joe" in the next six months, he will turn that hotel in Baltimore over to his wife and rush back into the ring to show the aspiring lightweights a few things none of them have ever been able to learn.

Gans has entrusted his ring business to Selig and even if he had the right to give the lightweight title to any one, he would certainly come back and take it away, "if duty called him." In this case, $10,000, win, lose or draw, or 75 and 25 per cent. would make a noise like the word duty spoken in a commanding tone.

Just let Jimmy Burns beat Packy McFarland and Nelson and then have Manager Tom McCarey offer a $15,000 purse for Jimmy Burns and any one. If this ever happens, you will see Ben Selig sending back to Baltimore for a hotel-keeper to come out to Los Angeles and get a carload of bacon.

It was suggested to Gans yesterday that if he really meant to bet $5000 that Young Peter Jackson can beat Tommy Burns, he should put up about $500 as a deposit and let it remain until he left Monday morning. He was willing to do this, but as Selig said that Tommy Burns had refused to fight Jackson, there would be no sense in posting the money and none was posted.

Black Bad for Jimmy.

Black is a bad color for Jimmy Burns and he might now be the real lightweight champion if two dark brown streaks had not crossed his path last Friday. Down at his training quarters in Long Beach, he made the mistake of his career in running across the tail of a black cat in the morning, and on coming up to Los Angeles, he was so unfortunate as to run across another dark streak down at the Naud Junction fight house. Who could be a champion after going against two hoodoos in one day?

Mrs. Bridge Cancer Cure

Painful lumps in women's breasts usually are cancers. Sore spots on the face or neck which stubbornly refuse to heal often are cancers. If you are thus troubled do not lose a moment's time in having the spot or lump examined. If it isn't cancer you may be relieved from anxiety. If it is, you may be cured.

A rational remedy has been discovered and has been applied to hundreds of cases. The precentage of recorded cures is 7 out of every 8. It is a medicine applied either in liquid or powdered form. The secret of the preparation is known only to Mrs. S. J. Bridge of Los Angeles, and the remedy is prescribed and applied only under the direction of a licensed practitioner of medicine at the offices in the Chester, 454 South Spring street, one flight up.

This remedy cannot be obtained at any drug store. It is not sold to be self-applied. The skill required in its application and in treatment of the case makes for cure as well as the efficacy of the medicine's ingredients. Patients undergoing treatment are not detained from the ordinary pursuits of life, and are not required to undergo operations or to suffer pain which must be eased by anaesthetics.

454 S. Spring St. "THE CHESTER," One Flight Up.

For proofs of cure, call at the offices, 454 S. Spring St., where addresses and names of 100 cured patients will be given, with whom you may communicate to satisfy yourself this is a CURE. Mrs. Bridge may be seen daily at the offices from 10 to 4. Examinations free.

Unlike some alleged cures, this remedy is not worse than the disease. Surgical excision of a cancer or burning it out with caustic is not only cruel but ineffectual. Removal may not cure. Dozens of cases come to us where cancers have been cut out, but they grow again in the same place or elsewhere.

The length of treatment, to insure a cure, depends upon the inroad which the disease has wrought, and the measure of difficulty attending the application of medicine to the affected area because of its location. No cure is effective until the spot diseased is entirely healed and healthy flesh restored.

Imperfect cures by other methods are frequently brought here for inspection. Desperate cases which other doctors have given up sometimes come here as a last resort. The best advice that can be given is to COME HERE FIRST, and before the cancer has been neglected or mistreated.

If a cure can be made by the Mrs. Bridge remedy you will be told so, and if there is any doubt about it, you will frankly be told that, too. Never have we failed to cure every case which we promised to cure. Do not despair. This cure will avail where others fail.

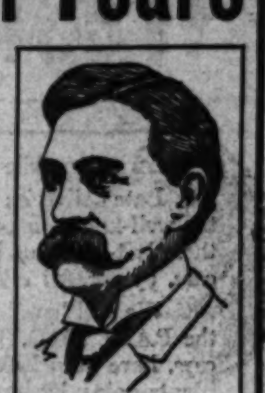
Live All Your Years

A Perfect MAN



DR. TAYLOR
The Leading Specialist

The human body is most wonderfully and perfectly constructed. Each part is built equal to its task. Unless overburdened or attacked by disease, no organ falters. Nature intended that every man should live all his years a perfect man. Few men do. Most men can.

All men make mistakes. Some make mistakes in youth. Others make mistakes after they have grown to be men. Still others are merely unfortunate. Practically all diseases and disorders are the result of mistakes or misfortune.

The problem of living a perfect man is simple. Undo the injury that mistakes or misfortune have wrought. Then avoid both—live as nature built you to live.

Undoing the Injury

I do not know how many thousands of men I have treated. I have been a specialist of men's diseases for seventeen years. During the most of these years my practice has been the largest of its kind upon the Pacific Coast. During the several years past it has been fully double that of any other specialist in the West treating men's diseases.

I have met with but few incurable cases. I have failed to cure in still fewer cases. In recent years I have failed in none. This is because I attempt to cure only those cases that I feel confident I can cure, and as my experience has grown I have become able to determine curable and incurable cases with certainty. It is also because my skill in curing has grown and my methods of treatment have been perfected.

The following mention of ailments that come through mistakes and misfortune is necessarily brief. I will gladly explain them further and tell of my original, scientific and certain methods of treating them to all who will call or write.

I Am Always Willing to Wait For My Fee Until a Cure Is Effected

Weakness

No matter in what form those functional derangements, commonly termed "weakness" may appear, the causative conditions are, in fully ninety-five per cent. of the cases, very similar. I have given the closest possible study to this remarkably prevalent ailment and find that in practically every case of prematureness, etc., there existed at some vital point of the pelvic system, a state of chronic tenderness, inflammation, or congestion. My first step is a thorough examination to ascertain the exact location and nature of the disorder, after which by a system of carefully directed local treatment, I restore the affected part to its normal condition, which promptly results in full and complete return of power. In perhaps less than five per cent. of the cases do I find general impoverishment, lack of nervous energy, or any other condition or complication requiring constitutional treatment. Therefore, I may safely assert that not more than one case in fifty can be permanently benefited by the use of tonics, stimulants, electrical or mechanical appliances, and that fully forty-nine cases in fifty will be aggravated by such methods of treatment.

My cures are positive, complete, thorough and permanent, because by my method the real and only cause of the functional weakness is totally removed. The knowledge gained, by close study and observation in thousands of cases enables me to recognize the exact requirements and treat accordingly, and in years, I have not failed in a single instance to accomplish the desired results.

Varicocele

Varicocele affects the veins of the spermatic cord. An average of one man in four suffer from the affliction. The muscular walls of the veins weaken and relax, the valves cease to perform their functions and local stagnation of the blood ensues. The first evidence of varicocele is usually a thickening, dilating, knotting and twisting of the veins on one or both sides, most frequently upon the left side, often accompanied by pains in the back, legs, thighs or chest, and a sense of dragging in the groin. Owing to the impaired circulation, a wasting away of the organs, accompanied by partial or complete loss of power almost without exception follows in severe cases where treatment is neglected, and even slightly developed cases cannot fail to have a damaging influence upon the organs involved as well as upon the general health. Safety in all instances demands a prompt cure, for varicocele is a disease that increase that increases in severity the longer it is neglected.

I cure varicocele without pain and without detaining the patient from business. I have cured over two thousand cases without a single failure or unpleasant result. My treatment is original and has been developed through seventeen years of practical experience. It restores the lost tone and elasticity to the weakened and dilated blood vessels, while results in normal circulation and re-establishes the natural processes of waste and repair throughout the vital system.

My special practice also includes Hydrocele, Stricture, Contracted Diseases, Contagious Blood Poison, Nervous Debility and all Reflex Ailments.

Consultation Free

To men whose years are being lived in physical imperfection as a result of mistakes or misfortune, whose lives are less than full and perfect lives and who yearn to be the man that nature meant them to be, I extend an earnest and sympathetic offer of consultation and advice. My experience among men in treating men's diseases places me in a position to be helpful to you. In consulting me you will be asked no foolish and embarrassing questions. All information given you will have a direct and vital bearing. If your symptoms are of no consequence I will tell you so. If treatment is needed, I tell you its cost, and the time that will in all probability be required to effect a complete cure. If I feel any doubt as to my ability to cure you, I will not take your case at all. I will not urge my services upon you. If you can see fit to place your case in my care, every promise I make shall be fulfilled. If you do not, you will be welcome to the information and suggestions given, and will be invited to call for further consultation absolutely free at any time.

Those finding it inconvenient or impossible to call in person are at liberty to write a full and complete description of their symptoms and their letters will receive my prompt and careful attention. All consultations strictly confidential.

Western Motor Car Company—1908 Announcement

An automobile must be very good or it is very bad. Buying a last season's automobile this season is like buying an overcoat in July—it's no use!

Late deliveries of 1907 cars on the part of some of the factories and the consequent inability to dispose of their output, together with unsettled financial conditions in the East, has caught some of the well-known manufacturers with a very large stock of 1907 cars still on hand. These will be hashed over, colors changed, etc., and will be slipped to the public as 1908 models. Then, in the spring, when these left-over cars have been disposed of, their 1908 car will make its appearance. No purchaser of this date should consider 1907 models, antiquated designs and "warmed over" cars when the latest type of cars, by careful selection, can be purchased, embodying the best results of the latest experiments.

We will handle no left-overs. Every 1908 car offered for sale by the Western Motor Car Company will be strictly a 1908 car and up-to-date. As to the lines which we will handle for the coming season, the PACKARD, THOMAS, STEVENS-DURYEA, four and six-cylinder, and the BUICK, all represent the highest type of cars of their respective classes that are manufactured. They are all standard cars, have been before the public for years, and have been uniformly successful and uniformly good. Furthermore, they are built by thoroughly equipped and organized factories, not "wild-cat" assembling plants doing business on a postage stamp.

When closing our contracts for 1908, rather than take up new cars which had been untried and which were largely experimental and unknown, we preferred to continue handling the standard and well-known makes with which we have always been connected.

Considering the quantity of hold-over cars and experiments which will be on the market for 1908, when you are buying an automobile, be sure you are getting a standard car, built by a factory with a reputation to maintain, and not one that has cars on hand and is now trying to get out from under.

AN AUTOMOBILE IS EITHER WORTH THE PRICE ASKED BY THE FACTORY FOR IT, OR IT IS NOT. A car listed at one price and sold for less is either overpriced or there is something wrong. Cutting prices invariably means inferior goods. Standard cars of high quality need no price cutting to sell them.

The 1908 season is on and we have arranged that our deliveries will be early. Demonstrators of the PACKARD and STEVENS-DURYEA are here now and the rest will follow in two or three weeks. The greater portion of our allotment of 1908 cars will be in Los Angeles and delivered before other factories have their demonstrators on the market.

To properly care for our 1908 business, we will this week be installed in our new garage and salesroom at 731 South Olive. This will be the finest equipped garage and salesroom in the West and our facilities for the care of our customers' cars will be unsurpassed. By a new arrangement with our factories, an even more liberal policy regrading replacement of parts will be adopted.

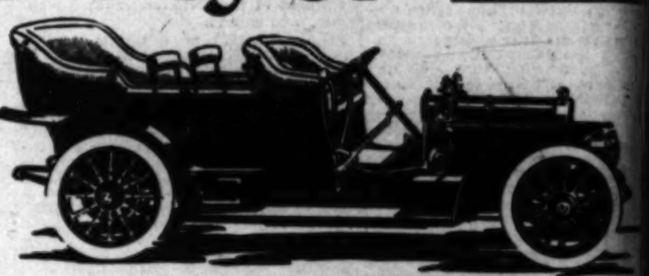
PACKARD "THIRTY"---1908

The long-established and well-known policy of the Packard Motor Car Company to make motor cars of but one model each year is continued for the season of 1908. The Packard car which is the object of the entire Packard endeavor is a new "Thirty." Like its antecedents, this latest model represents an evolution of preceding practice, rather than a departure from it. Packard "Thirty" is a type; it is the result of ten years of progressive adherence to a single purpose. In its design and general make-up the car shows improvement dictated by experience and a thorough and scrupulous refinement of detail in keeping with the spirit of its development. It is essentially a Packard. The well-known and proven features upon which has been builded the Packard success are its features.

Packard "Thirty" has the qualities which make it a successful country car in all manner of service, and is also, by its stylishness, luxurious appointment and other features, thoroughly a town car. In the different adaptations of the single model, such as touring car, limousine, runabout and landaulet, it fills every need of the purchaser of a high-class motor car. Packard "Thirty" is intended as a vehicle of such great utility as to meet the more widely varying demand that has arisen since motor cars have begun to take the place of horse-drawn vehicles.

Thomas Flyer 1908



The Thomas Flyer this year follows more closely than ever the lines of the foreign car. It shows the influence of the Foreign Department of design introduced last year to the Thomas Plant.

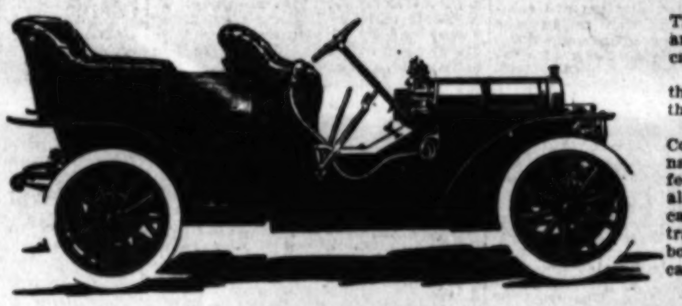
Two models are offered this year.

The Thomas Flyer and the Thomas De Luxe, 36-inch wheels, longer wheel base; aluminum straight line body, longer springs, easier riding; finer finish of body, upholstering, etc., simplification of engine, lightening weight, are some of the important improvements.

The Thomas Flyer, f. o. b. Los Angeles, $4250.00
The Thomas De Luxe, f. o. b. Los Angeles, $4750.00

Above is standard equipment, but does not include top.

1908 Thomas Detroit



The new Thomas Detroit shows a wonderful advance and improvement over last year's car, and over all cars of similar class this year.

The motor is designed by Herreshoff, designer of the motor boat "DEN," the fastest motor boat in the country.

The motor is built by the American & British Co., of Bridgeport (builders of U. S. government nance, torpedo boats, etc.). It is mechanically fect in design and structurally perfect as to als and workmanship. An increase of power, carburettor (designed for this car;) improved transmission and axle, together with improved body, larger steering past, etc., makes this an car.

"THE UNDER DOG."

A DISCUSSION took place here in Los Angeles within recent weeks between a newspaper writer and a minister of the gospel. The subject was the administration of justice as between the rich and the poor and the general equality of these two subdivisions of society before the laws, and the standing of the poor man before social, economic and industrial conditions prevailing in this country.

Unsuccessful in his efforts to prove that courts are biased, judges prejudiced, laws unequal in their bearing, society generally adverse and conditions cruelly unjust to the man of small means, the preacher took refuge in the general statement that he himself was irresistibly impelled to be always on the side of the "under dog in the fight."

This, of course, was setting up a claim on his own part to be a man of fine sensibilities, of compassionate feelings, of a merciful temperament which rises above abstract justice and wears an attribute of divinity. Is there any foundation for this claim? Does it amount to anything? Let us see.

To get at a true conception of the matter, we shall be obliged to get rid of a misleading phrase and set the question out in its own true light. The discussion was not about dogs, nor the bare bones about which dogs fight. Put into proper phrases, the minister meant that in every controversy and conflict, his sentiments were so fine that he felt compelled to take the weakest side. He did not trouble himself to weigh the merits of the case, to inquire what principle was at stake, on which side eternal justice lay, whether one side was radically wrong, whether it involved acts of criminality and violated all the rules of righteousness that the world has laid down for the guidance of our conduct, or any such secondary considerations as his philosophy teaches. It reduced itself to one bald, simple inquiry: "Which side is the stronger?"

Note, too, that the inquiry as to the strength on each side was to be narrowed down to one of mere wealth. On the side with whose cause this "teacher of righteousness" was driven to sympathize might be brute strength, against decrepit age and other physical weakness. Political influence and the moral effect of the sympathy of a powerful organization might be all allied in an unjust attack upon the opposite side. But youth, brute strength, politics, the influence of organization, were represented in the person of a man of small means. His contention might be founded on gross injustice. His methods of enforcing his views might be unjust, illegal, brutal, murderous. On the other side might be a person physically weak, perhaps a child, or a woman, standing for right principles, for eternal justice. Every consideration was to be swept aside excepting the simple question of money, and the preacher's sympathy, voice and influence were to go to the side of poverty, or at least the side where the bank account was smallest.

No inquiry was to be permitted as to why the one contestant was poor. He might have been an idler all his life, a spendthrift, a debauchee. He might never have earned an honest dollar. He might have had a fortune by fraud and squandered it in revelry. The other's wealth might have been the result of hard labor, small earnings and smaller economies in the beginning. It might all represent honest thrift. This is an unworthy consideration, too. In the present instance one is poor, the other rich. Stand on that platform and throw the weight of all you can do to help the impecunious get what he contends for.

The man of such fine sensibilities never had analyzed his views in this way. He had never reduced his rule of action to a system and inquired of his own mind where his teaching necessarily leads. His habit of mind was not to analyze, sift and reduce propositions to any severely logical deductions. His was rather to seize upon a fine phrase, to fill his heart with what he considered kind impulses and pretty sentiments and set these forth in catchy sentences and high-sounding periods duly sonorous. He is not to be taken as a type of the average pulpit teacher, but he is not an exceptional person in the pulpit either. He made loud complaint that successful business men, professional men of ability and such like members of the community do not attend his preaching. His congregation is uncongenial to him because made up of children, women, callow clerks and people generally of small mental caliber.

He never for a moment thought out the solution to this difficulty. It never occurred to him that the flabby sentimentalism which he mistook for deep-hearted sensibility could by no possibility appeal to men who are accustomed in the affairs of life to go beneath surface appearances and get at abiding facts. What patience can a man of affairs have with a teacher who publicly proclaims that in any conflict which may arise between him and the men in his employ, no question of abstract justice, no inquiry into the merits of the case, shall be made, but that public sentiment shall be against him for the simple but insufficient reason that he is in better circumstances than those who are arrayed against his interests?

In the scripture preachers are known as "elders." They were required to be men of mature years, and to have established a reputation for ripe wisdom by their generally discreet conduct. Discretion is not a leap in the dark at any conclusion. It includes a habit of careful thought, of profound analysis, of an ability first of all to discern between right and wrong. Discretion may go hand in hand with the softest, most compassionate heart. But it never is found in alliance with a weak, wabbling, confused and flabby mental habit.

THE LIMERICK CRAZE.

"London," said a tourist, "is crazy over limericks. You know what a limerick is—a five-line jingle? Well, in London everybody is limericking.

"It is a new way of advertising. Various papers started it. Now it has been taken up by tea dealers, soapmakers, and so on. In a number of cases $15 a week for life has been won by a successful limericker.

"The thing is worked like this. The advertiser supplies the first four lines of the limerick, and you, the contestant—you always number many thousands—supply the last line. It is for your one little last line that you win a life pension or $500 or so in cash.

"Here are a few limericks that won from $500 to $1000:

A tripper to Southend once went
To cut a great dash full intent,
But a thief with much stealth
Annexed all his wealth—
Rent his pocket to pocket his rent.

A pierrot who sang on a pier
Was feeling most lonesome and queer,
For all on the beach
Said his song was a screech;
He wondered if strychnine was dear.

MASS BY GRAPHOPHONE.

A novel method of saying mass has been adopted by the curé of La Martre, in the department of the Var, owing to the fact that he has neither precentor nor chorister in his church.

He has fitted up a gramophone in the chancel which not only makes the customary responses, but also sings the canticles.—[London Express.

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

FORCE OF NEGATIVE EXAMPLE.

MANY facts in biography and history, and, indeed, right around us, go to show that by a benevolently protective and conserving law of contrariety, effects result directly opposite to those which we might logically expect to flow in natural sequence from an individual's exposure to the contagion of a dangerously negative or atrocious example. Thus we have numerous exceptions to the rule: "Like father the son," or ample refutation of the supposed truth of the stereotyped pronouncement: "You cannot expect a human being to be better than his or her surroundings." The fact is, however, that in many localities rife with unchastity and profanity, human blossoms spring sweet and pure to warn us against the foregone conclusion that a negative example will invariably exert a bad or negative influence.

It is not within the scope of our present effort to enter upon a discussion of the factors of either heredity or environment in the formation of character, but simply to call attention to some important moral values to be obtained from the dispassionate observation of immoral types of humanity, and to lay stress upon the need of looking searchingly and discriminatingly upon both the negative and positive sides of life in order to insure sound ethical training and the power to resist moral evil.

In their zeal to train up the young in the ways of righteousness, both teachers and parents make the mistake of throwing a false glamor over the realities of life. They would guard their beloved flock so carefully that no breath of harm ever afloat in the great complex world shall touch them; to this end they would only apprise them of the good, the true and beautiful ways of life. They would let them hear, see, feel and know only the positive virtues, without ever an allusion to the grim monster Vice that lies in wait for them in shape of human wolves seeking to devour the tender lambs. And because the merry, unsuspecting youth or maiden strays afield unrestrained, unarmed, by either word of wisdom or of knowledge, that heinous beasts prowl for prey of innocence, the lambs are easily enticed to the lecherous lairs where they meet their ruin.

To extol virtue, does not imply the denial of the existence of vice! To hold up examples of purity and loveliness to young men and women does not mean that we are at the same time wilfully to close their eyes to facts that are unlovely, born of impurity. The teaching must be twofold; like night and day, love and hate, glory and ignominy, there is moral light and darkness; moral ascendency and decline; the transcendantly good and notoriously bad. Let us teach them above all else to respect, to admire, to imitate and emulate the noblest examples of positive virtue, but likewise to note the ugly, morally-misshapen examples of iniquity that may pass them in disguise, but which they must learn to discriminate from real probity and to shun as a seat of pestilence. Shall we then place the child's hand in the fire that it may feel and remember the smart? Shall we deliberately seek to come face to face with corruption and wrong the better to avoid it? Temptation and sin find their way all too readily to us, even to the best of us; hence they need not and should not be sought. But in our exulting consciousness of freedom from one or the other or from both, we must not forget that they still are, and that they may overtake us or ours at any moment unless we have paid heed to the proper fortification of our characters or the characters of those near and dear to us, against them. And such fortification is often best secured by causing a reflex action or recoil from the degrading condition of moral pollution or crime, by pointing to the victims of defiling passion and excesses of different sorts whenever a fitting opportunity offers.

Thus it is said that a foreign prince returning from a canter in the woods at twilight, observed a galloping steed in the road ahead of him without a rider. Quickening his horse's pace, he descried an object in the dim shadows like a human form. Another moment, and he had leaped from his horse, and was kneeling beside the seemingly lifeless figure by the roadside. He looked aghast at the blanched face of the young nobleman in official uniform, turning with a shudder of pity and disgust from the fumes of liquor that smote his nostrils. Removing the body of the unfortunate young man to a place of safety, the prince hastened to his castle, soon returning with attendants and a carriage from which alighted his two youthful sons. At request of their father, they stepped dutifully forward; when the prince flashing the light of a lantern across the unconscious form of one of the proudest heirs of titled nobility, said in a low, impressive voice: "Look you, my sons, to this has the unworthy heir to a princely estate come through his passion for drink. Thrice fallen indeed is he. May the name of your father never be thus dragged in the dust." It is said the lesson was never forgotten.

If it be true that men grow most like the persons and ideals which they most love and esteem, may we not hold that according to the same law we become most unlike, or different from the characters which we abhor, as moral examples or idéals repugnant to us? Hence, through the negative examples of rashness, of folly, of inebriety, of hypocrisy and falsehood, understood as such, we may learn to take greater heed of our own steps and to pursue more diligently the opposite course. If the beautiful souls in obscure places and the celebrated heroes of immortal deeds make their forceful appeal to us for the cultivation of positive virtues akin to theirs, so does an enlightened regard of negative examples of villainy, treachery, parsimony and fraud which we have learned to despise as forms of conduct debasing to manhood and to womanhood and as examples antagonistic to the best interests of society tend to send us in the contrary direction. The important point is finally, for both youth and adult, to recognize facts as they exist; to love moral beauty and to hate moral ugliness.

HOW EGYPT IS WATERED.

GREAT DAM AT ASSOUAN TO BE RAISED FIFTEEN FEET.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SHELLAI (Nubia.)—Within a mile or so of the red granite quarries, out of which Pompey's Pillar and the obelisks were taken by the ancient Egyptians, just below the Island of Philae, with its stone temples built ages ago to the goddess Iris, far up the Nile Valley, on the edge of Lower Nubia, I write these notes for my American readers. I am in the heart of the desert, 700 miles south of the Mediterranean Sea, at the point where the great river drops down over the first cataract. I have come here to describe the Assouan Dam, which the British have built to harness the Nile and thereby save Egypt from famine.

We all look upon this as the oldest of rivers, but the Nile god of 1907 has many new aspects. For ages he has been ramping and charging at his own sweet will, but he is now being harnessed and will have to work in the traces like an old plow mule. In the past he has been feeding his daughter Egypt or not, as he pleased. He has sometimes stuffed her to repletion, and at others has held back his supplies of water and mud, causing a famine. This was the case during the seven hungry years of Joseph's time, and the fat years of that day were undoubtedly produced by high Niles. Such changes have occurred in Egypt from time to time since the days of the Pyramids, and it is only within the past generation that man has attempted to control the old river and by a system of dams to hold back the waters and let them out over the farms as needed. Within the past twenty years something like $50,000,000 has been spent in this way, and there are now great barrages at Cairo, at Assiout, and more important than all, away up here at Assouan.

IRRIGATION SCENES IN EGYPT

I CROSSED THE DAM ON A CAR

VIEW FROM TOP OF THE DAM.

But first let me tell you in a nutshell how Egypt is watered. The country is almost rainless, and the Nile gives both land and people their food and drink. You have all heard of the wonders of the stream itself. It is, with the exception of the Mississippi, the longest river of the world, so long that if it were stretched out in one straight line it could reach from the great lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, and then turning, cross our country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It rises in Lake Victoria, in the heart of Central Africa, and drops a distance greater than the altitude of the highest of the Alleghenies before it flows into the Mediterranean Sea. During the upper part of its course it is known as the White Nile, and this should be called the main stream of the river. At Khartoum, 1350 miles from the Mediterranean, the Blue Nile, which rises in the Abyssinian mountains, comes in, and about 140 miles further north the Atbara, or Black Nile, which also is from Abyssinia, joins the main stream. From the mouth of the Atbara to the sea there is not a branch or stream of any kind connected with the river. It plows its way through the desert valley, in which it has built up Egypt, narrowing and widening, until a few miles below Cairo, where it divides into two great branches and flows off into the Mediterranean.

The Nile Flood.

The volume of the Nile is enormous. At flood times, here at Assouan, a billion tons of water go by every day. The river then rises twenty-five feet at Cairo, thirty-eight feet at Old Thebes, and almost fifty feet at the first cataract, where I now am. There is so much water then that no dam could hold it, and all of these great works have to be made so that the water can be let in and out and allowed to pass through at will.

It is at flood time that the Nile Valley gets its rich feed of Abyssinian mud. This is brought down in part by the Blue Nile, but more abundantly by the Atbara or Black Nile. It is carried by the floods all over Egypt and by means of irrigation canals and by various pumps, some worked by men, some by animals and some by machinery, it is conducted to nearly every farm. After the floods subside the waters grow clear again. The Blue Nile and the Black Nile become almost dry, and the white water of the main or Victoria Nile is about all that Egypt has. It is this white water that is stored up by the Assouan dam, and it feeds the country in much the same way as our irrigation canals do, with water only and not with a thick mixture of water and mud as in the times of the flood.

A Vast Series of Basins.

For thousands of years these rivers have been pouring down through this Nile Valley; but whenever the rains have been scanty in the highlands of Abyssinia and in Central Africa the main stream has not been high enough to reach the whole country. The most of the lands could be flooded only once a year, and if the Nile was especially low some could have no water at all. By the new system it is planned to give Egypt water all the year round, and to supply enough to make it produce two or three crops every year.

I have been much interested in the irrigation works of the past. The whole of the Nile Valley above Cairo is cut up into a series of basins. For 600 or 700 miles north of this point the valley slopes very gradually and in order to save the water, dikes have been made across it and embankments run parallel with the river, turning the whole country into a series of basin-like terraces. Each basin contains from 5000 to 15,000 acres, and the dikes are such that the water has to flow from basin to basin, between the Nile embankments and the walls of the desert so that none of it is lost. These basins are often subdivided, and they are so connected that the water flows from one to the other and finally passes out of the lower basin back into the Nile. When the floods come, the lowest basins are filled first and then those higher up, until at last all have become great ponds and Egypt is one vast inland sea cut up by the embankments and islands upon which the villages stand.

There are forty-five such systems of basins in upper Egypt, some large and some small. There are also basins higher up closer to the river wnich are filled with sakiyehs or shadoofs, rude irrigation pumps worked by animals and men. When I tell you that the fall of the valley from here to Cairo is only seven inches to the mile you will see how carefully these basins must be graduated in order to take advantage of the flow of the river. They have to be so made that the water can be drained off as rapidly as it is let on. The Abyssinian mud contains a great deal of salt, and it is just as bad to have too much of it as too little. If the land is over-watered the salts dissolve from the soil and the over-soaked land becomes wormy and the crops are [illegible] sown too late. The red water, or that containing the silt, is allowed to stand on the land just about [illegible] days. During this time it drops a great deal of sediment and furnishes enough moisture for the crops.

Egypt in Flood Time.

Few people have any idea of the work the Egyptians do in irrigating and taking care of their farms. The task of keeping the basins in order is herculean. As the Nile rushes in, the embankments are watched as the Dutch watch the dikes of Holland. They are patrolled by the village headmen, and the least break is filled with stalks of millet and earth. The village officials have the right to call out the people to help, and no one refuses. If the Nile gets too high it sometimes overflows into the villages, and the mud huts crumble. During the flood the people go about in boats from village to village. The donkeys, buffaloes and bullocks live on the dikes, as do also the goats, sheep and camels.

The people sow their crops as soon as the floods subside. Harvest comes on within a few months, and without they have some means of irrigation, other than the Nile floods, they must wait until the following year before they can plant again. If they can have a dam like this at Assouan, the Nile can be kept throughout the year and they can grow crops all the year round. This is already the condition in a great part of the delta, and it is aimed to extend it to the farms of upper Egypt.

The Assouan Dam.

The Assouan Dam is one of the wonders of modern Egypt. It is in full sight of me as I sit here on the left bank of the Nile, with the desert at my back. It looks like a great stone viaduct crossing the rocky bed of the river joining the stony hills which wall the Nile on both sides and holding back a portion of its mighty waters. It is a great granite wall, eighty-six feet wide at the bottom and twenty-six feet wide at the top, rising 120 feet above the bed of the river, being a mile and a quarter in length. There is now a roadway guarded by walls on its top, and there is a little car line, the wagons of which are pushed by men, which runs over it, from one side to the other. The dam serves as a bridge as well, and donkeys, camels and men are allowed to pass over it from bank to bank. I crossed on the car at a cost of 25 cents, my motive power being two Arab boys who came behind on the trot.

As I came over I stopped from time to time to examine the construction. The dam is made of great blocks of red granite as fine as that of any tombstone in the United States. They are beautifully cut and fitted as closely as the walls of a palace. On the upper side or north face the wall is perpendicular, forming a straight up and down barrier against the waters of the Nile. I climbed down a ladder on that side at one place almost to the river, and could see that the blocks are fitted so closely that the cement does not show. The wall seems almost one solid stone throughout, with the exception of where the great sluices are cut, to allow the river to flow through at the times of the flood, and as the floods subside to shut back the waters to form the great reservoir for the dry season.

One Billion Tons of Water.

There are 180 of these sluice gates in the dam, each of which has steel doors that can be raised and lowered to allow the whole river to flow through or to hold back as much or as little as the engineers will. The dam is thus a great stone wall pierced by these gates.

The Nile never flows over the top of the dam, but always through the gates and the canal at one side. When the gates are closed during the dry season, enough water is held back by this structure of steel and granite to form a lake 140 miles long, and this is let out as needed, to supplement the ordinary flow of the river and give the crops plenty of water all summer through.

In order to appreciate the strength of the structure it is necessary to know the enormous weight it supports. When the reservoir is full the water in it amounts to almost a quarter of a trillion gallons. It contains 234,000,000,000 gallons and weighs over 1,000,000,000 tons. It is so heavy that if it were all loaded upon wagons, it would take 2,000,000,000 horses to haul the load. We have in the United States something like 18,000,000 horses. One hundred times that many, all harnessed together and all pulling at once, could not carry the weight which this masonry is required to hold back.

If the water could be loaded on freight cars at 100 tons to the car, it would take 10,000,000 cars to carry it, and if each car were forty feet long, the train would reach 80,000 miles, or one-third of the distance from here to the moon.

There is water enough in the reservoir to give all the families of the United States all they could use for six or eight months, and enough to supply Great Britain and Ireland all the year round. If the water were loaded on two-horse wagons, each team being given a width of eight feet and a length of forty feet on a roadway, the line of teams required to carry it would be a half mile wide and would form a solid train of that width encircling the globe at the equator.

The weight is indeed stupendous, and the force inconceivable. Nevertheless, during the floods fully as much water runs through the dam every day as the whole supply kept back in the dry season; and the structure had to be made so that it would retain this huge lake and at flood time let a lake equal to it pass through every day.

Greater Than the Pyramids.

Talk about the Pyramids! The Assouan Dam is far more wonderful than they. The Pyramid of Cheops required 100,000 men and thirty years in its building. The Assouan Dam was constructed by about 11,000 men in four years. The Pyramid was made by forced labor, and it impoverished the people. The dam cost altogether about $12,000,000, and the men who worked upon it were better paid than any others who have ever labored in the Valley of the Nile.

Moreover, the dam has made Egypt the most prosperous country of the world. It has added to it more than 1,500,000 acres of tillable land and has increased its crops a value of more than $13,000,000 per annum. It has more than paid for its cost every year. Since it has been built the yearly taxes have increased $2,000,000, and the lands owned by the government have become worth $5,000,000 more. By the raising of the dam, as now planned, there will be an enormous additional increase. The scheme decided upon is to raise the dam fifteen feet. This will almost double the amount of water stored and double the benefit to Egypt.

A Wonder of Mechanics.

The Assouan Dam is more wonderful than the Pyramids in its mechanical construction. Old Cheops is built on the edge of the desert on a solid stone platform, and it is little more than the piling of one stone upon another. For the Assouan dam a trench a hundred feet wide and a hundred feet deep had to be excavated in the granite rock; it had to be bedded with concreted rubble, and it was upon such a substructure that the masonry was raised. The dam itself contains more than a million tons of granite and about 15,000 tons of steel, and the calculations of the engineers are such that they know just how much water every ounce of stone and steel will hold back. They know the exact weight of the river at every hour of the day, and they have telegraphic reports which tell them what the Nile is doing in Abyssinia, in Central Africa and the Soudan. They have dispatches as to every great rain, and they know to a ton just how much water lower Egypt is using, so that they can tell how much or how little to let out for the farms. They even estimate the force of the sun on the water and know how much it drinks up every day. When the reservoir is full. Old Sol takes 1,500,000 tons from it every twenty-four hours, and the engineers estimate the evaporation not only at Assouan, but all along the great stream and throughout its swamps to its source in Victoria Lake. I have had some talks here with Mr. MacDonald, the engineer-in-chief of the dam, and am surprised at the wonderful intelligence bureau which Egypt possesses.

What a Child Can Do.

I am also amazed at the strength and delicacy of the machinery of this remarkable structure. It is so arranged that a child can operate it. The great sluice gates are each as high as a two-story house, and so wide that you could drive a hay wagon through them without touching the walls. They are cut right through the granite dam, and are closed or opened by steel doors, which move up and down inside the wall on rollers. Upon the top of the dam there are machines for moving these gates, and they are so made that a child could operate them. They are so equipped that they can be moved by electricity, but they are now worked by hand, and this mighty force, so great that 2,000,000,000 horses would be required to move it, is now controlled at will by the muscular power of a single man.

This thought was impressive as I sat below the dam, right where the eight central sluices pressed onward by the millions of tons of water lying behind them pour forth their mighty flood. I had climbed down the steps at the north side of the center of the great structure to make a photograph of the streams flowing through. They come forth with a rush as great as that of Niagara and go foaming over the rocks with a force that might generate thousands of horse power. The noise is like thunder, and the streams fairly shake the earth. Each is about fifteen feet in height, and is as yellow as mud. There were eight such streams of golden foam at my right, and further over I could see the spray from others all dashing through the dam until they met in a yellow foaming mass several hundred feet below me and rolled onward down the rocks to Egypt. They flow out with such a force that they tear up the rocky bed of the Nile, lifting stones weighing many tons and carrying them some distance down stream. They have done so much damage of this nature that a cement foundation has now been made below the dam itself in order to prevent the gouging out of the bed and thus undermining the main structure.

Micky.

The Story of an Irish-American Friendship Made in Mexico.

By a Special Contributor.

IT was in the Alameda of Chihuahua, Mexico, that I first met Micky. I was sitting there with a friend enjoying the fragrance of many violets and the sunshine and balmy air of a Mexican January, when along came Micky with that delightful swinging limp of his.

All true love, I am told, is love at first sight. It was so I know with Micky and me. I recognized him instantly and he recognized me.

"Hello, Micky! my boy," said I, "and how's yourself today?"

It proved to be the right name and address, for over to me came Micky, rubbed that Irish face of his against my knee and wagged his tail, while I, taking his face in my hands, located Cork and Blarney, aye, even Armagh and Donegal.

Indeed, the whole map of Ireland was there enhanced by two side teeth which projected prominently. And to this that Micky had the skin of a bull terrier, the body of several kinds of dog, three whole legs and one lame one, and a long, long wisp of a tail that coiled like a pulled-out corkscrew, and you will know, without me telling you, that Micky was a first-class, blue-ribbon, thoroughbred, yellow cur—just dog he was, pure dog!

He looked so much like an Irish cartoon that it did my Irish heart good to see him, and I was just flattering myself that Micky had the same feeling in regard to me, when up he got.

"Bad cess to ye! It's only Frinch ye are, or ye wouldn't be taking Frinch leave of me!" said I, as he disappeared.

Half an hour later I was walking about when I felt something spring at my back, and lo! there was Micky, wagging his tail, an irresistible Irish smile illuminating the map, while the prints of two dusty paws adorned the back of my dark blue coat.

He came on home with me as a matter of course, and would not be turned away.

"All right, Micky," says I, "but there's my mother's cat!"

Now that cat is a good, everyday, alley cat, but when Micky appeared I concluded she was part Angora, for her tail grew as big as the best of them.

Said I to the dog:

"Micky, my boy, no shillelaghs on the cat! I'm thinking it's too fond ye are entirely of shillelaghs, or it's not a broken leg ye'd be havin!"

Micky winked his eye at that, and paid no more attention to the cat than you would to a fly that was sticking to the North Pole.

From then on, the cat reigned in the house, and Micky had the corr When I felt homesick for Erin, out to the corral I would go, and, taking Micky's wrinkled face in my hands I would trace the Shannon and the Banor—and feel much better.

But it was when the big circus came to town at Micky distinguished himself and revealed his past.

This circus was a real, live one, from the States, so of course every one went it, including Micky, though just how that happened I do not know. It is the one secret he keeps from me; but I have always suspected that our Celestial must have left the gate of the corral open.

Be that as it may, I was scarcely seated before Micky came limping along and crawled under my seat with a knowing smile, and from there he watched the performance in great contentment. We had a good view of it all as we were seated in front a little nearer one of the end rings than to be quite in the center.

It was getting near the e of the performance, in the furthest ring; the elephants were dancing; in the middle a most active contortionist in frog costume was tying and untying himself in all kinds of ways, the ugly frog face and wonder-provoking motions claiming my fascinated attention.

Suddenly, into the end ring came a white horse ridden by a poodle.

There was a bound and a flash by my side!

Instanter, the poodle sprawled on the ground, rose, and fled from the circus tent howling. While Micky—my Micky—was balancing himself nicely upon the horse, which, in obedience to the ringmaster, ever circled faster and faster!

It was the sensation of the whole affair, for the audience took it as a part of the show, and Micky's clever tricks won him tremendous applause.

At the close of the performance, the manager and some of the trainers came to me inquiring about Micky and offering to buy him.

Alas! just then my pocket-book contained three Mexican centavos! Could I consent to replenish it by selling Micky? Surely not!

While I was talking, music was started, and to my further astonishment Micky and ringmaster were performing to the empty benches!

Thus it seemed as if Micky had taken the responsibility off my shoulders and decided for himself.

I consoled myself for his desertion by reflecting that it was more from habit than from choice that he had deserted me and responded to the music; for, as a rule, circus dogs do not really like their duties.

And I left the tent, purse and heart heavier than when I entered, and my eyes full of tears. Not so full, though, that I could not see my faithful Micky jump into the coche after me, and, as he squatted down at my feet, signal to me with eyes and tail: "Now ye never were thinking I'd be leaving ye?"

Joyfully I returned the purchase price, and so Micky and I joy on together.

On occasions when I whistle some good Irish tunes for him, he will go through his tricks. But he does best for Yankee Doodle." So it's an Irish-American I'm thinking he is.

What does it matter, though, just what shade of Irish he is? He is Micky; furthermore, he is my Micky; and it is "Love me, love my dog," when you come to my casa.

And if you come you will be welcome; for do not Micky and I live in Mexico, where "Mi casa es su casa!" (My house is your house!)

TO THE PEPPER TREE.

O noble pepper tree,
The queen of trees and flowers,
Whose fairy symmetry
Is traced in beauty's bowers—
Where strength and grace
A matchless maze
Of leaves and buds are moulding,
And fragrant life,
Aloof from strife
Is radiantly unfolding.
Hail thee, O pepper tree!
As fragrant as a flower,
Whose outward harmony,
Is poised on inward power.

Oh, noble pepper tree,
How modest in thy glory,
How tranquil, strong and free
Thou tell'd thy beauty story;
Those drooping leaves,
Which fairies weave
Through zephyrs sweet caresses
All spread a calm,
Which like a balm
At once subdued and blesses.
Therefore, O pepper tree,
Thou queen of trailing splendor,
Accept as gift from me
The word of my surrender.

O noble pepper tree
In lands of sunsets glowing—
In lands where men are free
And riches overflowing;
Those blessed lands
Where sun-kissed sands
Enchain a mighty ocean,
And dizzy heights
Unravel sights
That stir to high emotions.
Hence, noble pepper tree,
Thou pride of vast dominions,
My heart here brings to thee
Its gift on rosy pinions.

To San Jacinto's Peak.

THE STORY OF AN "EXPEDITION DE LUXE" FROM IDYLLWILD.

By a Special Contributor.

WHITE with snow in winter, white with the sun glare on bare rock and lightning-struck trees in summer, rises the noble peak of San Jacinto, more than two miles into the blue of heaven. Here, 11,000 feet above the work and the worry and the turmoil, the hustle and bustle and fever of life men call civilization, the San Jacinto Mountains reach their climax.

And only to those who take the trip to this famous peak do the mountains reveal their greatest, most wondrous beauty. Nature has saved her coldest springs, her deepest pools, her choicest blossoms for the heights—the "silent places" of her perfection, and only to those who care enough to work for them will she give of her treasure store. But once the outer citadel of sun-hot trail and towering precipice is stormed the treasures of her mountain castle does she bestow with lavish hand and the memory of it remains with one always.

Three days are usually taken for the trip, though it may be made, as our party made it, in two days. A week would be none too long to enjoy the beauties of trail and lake, of peak and forest. There are two trails which one may take, and it is customary to go the new trail and return by the old one.

It was shortly after 8 one August morning when the expedition de luxe left the Idyllwild bungalow, with seven women, two men and a guide in its personnel. There had been other trips to the peak, there will continue to be other trips in the future, but there never was nor will there ever be a trip like this one, spelled in upper-case caps and underlined. This was no tinned-meat, baked-bean expedition; it was the expedition de luxe, silk-lined, eighteen-carat fine, superlatively everything that was desirable. Two-inch broiling steaks took the place of tinned roast beef, and several dozen fresh eggs made up in excellence for the multum in parvo of canned baked beans. Bacon, wafer thin, was substituted for that usually cut with a hatchet at the wood pile, and the sugar went in lumps. To be sure, the cream was canned, for it was not convenient to take a cow, and the pineapple and the peaches went in tins, as the Tauquitz peach orchard is not in bearing this year.

With laughter and merry jest the party started, and were soon lost to sight as the road dipped into the ravine, and there was only the muffled sound of many hoofs thumping the boards of the bridge over Strawberry Creek, or the echo of a girl's laugh borne back on the morning breeze. For a few miles, the trail pushes on through groves of pine and cedar, now traversing stretches of manzanita and buckthorn thicket, now plunging into the shadowy coolness and fragrance of the woodland where a fern-shaded spring offers long, cool draughts of pure mountain water. As the trail nears the top of Tauquitz or Devil Mountain the lower ranges drop away and looking back a view of wondrous beauty holds one in its spell. Down the wooded mountainsides, across the drowsy valleys the blue of Hemet Lake smiles up at one, and the Thomas Valley stretches out broadly between its bordering hills. Green hills in the middle-distance stretch out to meet other hills black shadowed in distance. Then beyond deep purple, then blue and finally the pale gray blue of yet other hills too far away to be more than shadows and outlines against the other blue of sky, are seen, row on row.

Higher and higher winds the trail, now in the full glare of the noontide sun, white rocks, white dust, dry twisted tree trunks from which the lightning has burned the sap and life. A huge bald eagle sits motionless upon the topmost branch of a nearby pine; with slow, majestic flight a second one approaches a sister tree, and like twin sentinels they poise a moment, quiet, fearless. A horse snorts and springs aside as a sharp, twittering whir gives dangerous warning that a rattler has been disturbed, and a black, coiled form challenges with deathlike menace with every motion of his forked tongue.

A little dash of vivid color among the clustering trees gleam the red roofs of the bungalow, far, far below. The faint, faraway tinkle of a cowbell rises through the stillness of the forest against a soft background of sound, the sound that wind makes as it steals softly through the needled boughs of pines. There is the smell of dry pine and fir in the dry, warm air, and somehow life seems very good, and all's well with the trail.

Suddenly there is a cracking sound, the sound of angry heels hitting sharply on wood; a woman's scream, and the guide turns with quick oath to the unhappy, maddening realization that Pet the pack horse has bucked her pack. Three kicks and a hump, and the rest was easy. A box of eggs lies broken open on the dusty trail. Lumps of sugar and freshly-ground coffee mingle in premature combination. Graham crackers sprawl over hot sand, and boxes of sandwiches and juicy steaks lie among the rocks. "Oh Pet, you condemned little fool!" is the invective in paradox hurled at the small pack animal whose name was not chosen because of any docile qualities of disposition. And like human beings who try to "buck their pack," Pet soon found that it was all for nothing, and that the second time the bands that bound it were tighter, more relentless than before, as with determined hands, Guide, Doctor and Youth roped on the pack, while the Scribe and the College Girl nearly strangled themselves with raw eggs—to save them. The Philosopher and the Youngest Member picked up the débris, while the Three Optimists watched the horses, in an "it-might-have-been-worse" spirit, which was truly commendable when it was contemplated that the hour's early start of the morning had been quite lost in the hour's delay for which "Pet, the condemned little fool," was responsible.

"But after all, only five, out of three dozen, eggs were broken, and I'm sure we can pick the broken glass out of the chipped beef," cheerfully remarked the First Optimist as she carefully brushed the dust from a lump of sugar, and pinned a broken box of sandwiches together with a hairpin.

Without further incident the other side of Tauquitz was reached, and Red Tauquitz, so called from the masses of brick and red rock which distinguish it from Black Tauquitz, has passed. On around Dead Horse Point we went, where the bleaching bones of an old mare and her colt who once fell off the trail at this point, lie, their own monument to a fatal step.

Again winding down, the trail approaches the meadowlands known as the Tauquitz Meadows, and gay wild flowers, Nature's smiles, gleam brightly from every brookside and bank. Crimson penstamen, like dashes of flame through the long grasses; goldenrod, heavy with sunshine, creamy morning glories, clustering clematis, Mariposa lilies, pale, mauve and white, and hundreds of small golden blossoms clustering close to the ground and lying like great patches of sunshine where the ground is moist at the brookside. Meek's old log cabin beneath its clump of pines is passed, and a pause is made while the horses plunge their dusty feet into the limpid stream and bend their heads beneath the willows to take long refreshing drinks of mountain water. Riders, too, quench their thirst at the famous Willow Spring, where the water comes so cold that it fairly makes one's teeth ache to drink it.

Perhaps the ambrosia of the gods tasted better than did those canned peaches fished out on pronged twigs which the guide cut from the clumps of bushes by the stream, but I doubt it, and I am sure that the Olympian cuisine would have been taxed to its utmost to have discovered anything better than the ham sandwiches, even after they had been so ruthlessly ejected by the unfeeling Pet.

The most beautiful part of the trip to the peak comes in the afternoon of the first day, when for riders follow the bridle paths through acres flowers. Lupins so high that they brush the the horses as they pass through, cover the all the prodigal glory of late summer bloom, stalks of purple and pale mauve and exquisite bloomlooking like great inverted sprays of From the banks of every stream—and many are —spring the stately stalks of pale gold lilies, the derful lilies that gave to Lily Cañon its name; lilies on long swaying stems grow in the grasses. Buttercups nod back at the sun a golden come, and big purple asters open their hearts along the paths. In the swamps Persian cyclamens, pink and white and purple, grow in great abundance hillside and meadowland are gay with the riot of ous color; for spring comes late to the mountain Ferns are everywhere, and bright green lichens the gnarled trunks of the century-old trees.

Wonderful rock formations are passed, and trout in plenty, where the golden sunlight falls into the water in little blurred patches like the lights topaz. The air is sweet with the exquisite of wild roses who lean their pink faces down water as though to gaze at the reflection of their beauty.

Just as the twilight shadows fell, the trail into Tamarack Valley, where amid the clustering and great rocks is situated the camping place. protects the supply of blankets, and a great place shows the ashes of many fires. In five the horses were unsaddled and turned loose grassy swamp lands where they were allowed and roam free for one glad night. One horse fated to spend the night in restricted liberty so guide would have the means to gather in the brethren in the morning.

While the men gathered wood for the great camp the women filled their skirts with pine cones, later on gave of their virile life to add brightness flames.

A comb, a tooth brush, a cake of soap and a towel supposed to be the limited allowance of each "luggage," but one there was who brought a mirror a powder rag, and though great was her ridicule, also was her demand.

ON THE HEIGHTS

ON SAN JACINTO'S PINNACLE

SAN JACINTO PEAK

THE HORSE THAT BUCKE

As the last glow of the sun faded into the gray the evening sky the great fire blazed up, and little band of hungry travelers were grouped fire, broiling thick and juicy steaks on the pointed sticks. A mammoth coffee pot simmered fire, and nearby a kettle full of potatoes bubbled rily. While one washed the abbreviated array dishes, another cut bread, and soon each with and cup and spoon chose his blanket and sat feast kings might have envied.

Each one gathered an armful of fragrant ferns bed, and these were first spread on the ground the blankets laid over. The tent was tied back, ing protection at the heads of the sleepers camp fire blazed at their feet. Supper over, a merry meal, all sat about the replenished while the College Girl kept the flames supplied cones, the Scribe told by cards and palmistry the ered fortunes of each member of the party.

The preparations for repose were not many, my! On each woman's lips glistened a dab cream or vaseline, while her head was swathed fashion, with a huge bandana to keep the bats away. One fair damsel insisted on a bag, which added to the picturesqueness of the The men, when they had smoked the pipe of dreamy silence, rolled themselves in their lay down to pleasant dreams upon the soft great rock. The guide, rolled in his blankets sombreroed head reposing in his saddle, looked mummy in its sarcophagus as the weird shadows the flickering fire fell on his bronzed face.

After a while everybody pretended to sleep. really did it. The only sound was the crackling fire or the dull fall of a burning log into the ashes, with now and then the distant call of a lion or the snarl of a coyote. Then out of the a voice spoke:

"Oh!" it groaned, "I feel as if I had fourteen each side, and all were touching the rocks!" mighty creak, the body back of the voice and the voice continued: "The next time I have one hair mattress and a feather pillow bring my powder rag."

The BUICK is admittedly the most powerful

"I'm hungry," announced a feminine voice with decision, and thereupon the crunch of graham crackers at 2 o'clock in the morning was heard. The coldest member on the outside changed places with the middle one, and all was quiet for an hour. Then in sepulchral whisper the guide, leaning over the Scribe announced: "If you want to see the comet, you had better come now. Your friends have started."

Thus rudely awakened from her first nap, the Scribe sat up and sleepily rubbed her eyes, then, wrapped in a blanket, clambered to her feet and silently through the forest stole three girls and a guide bent on reaching a clearing in time to see the great white comet.

Fried eggs and bacon and toast never tasted better than two hours later, and shortly after the ascent to the peak was made. Near the crest of old San Jacinto most of the trees have been lightning-struck, and the silver-white appearance makes them look like tall, gaunt ghosts of their former selves. Finaliv the tree line is passed, and only the jagged white rocks and the white dust remain. About a hundred feet from the top the horses are left, and travelers must seek the point of rock on top, alone. The view from this height is marvelous. Off in one direction lies Banning; in another, long stretches of desert, while the great Salton Sea gleams far below.

One of the greatest surprises on the return trip, which is made by another trail is Hidden Lake, which suddenly bursts upon one at a sharp angle in the trail. There it lies in its reed-lined bed, with its fringe of overhanging trees. The lake is shallow, and every party passing finds its experience incomplete till it has ridden into the middle and has posed for its picture, with horses knee-deep in the clear water. Near the lake is a great bluff, the sheerest and highest precipice outside of the Yosemite Valley. The stone dropped over by the expedition de luxe may be going yet for all the party knows. It was still rattling faintly on the stones as the party left.

The most dangerous part of the trail is on the Devil's Slide on the return trip from Tauquitz, and foolhardy the horseman who risks his own and his horse's life in staying on his mount in crossing.

"Everybody off your horses," shouted the guide as the long line of horses approached this almost perpendicular rock wall. Slipping and sliding, with their reins thrown over the pommels, the horses reached the trail safely, and then with more slipping and sliding, the people made the attempt. Even the Three Optimists smiled sickly pessimistic smiles as they took the toboggan, but the descent was made in safety, down past Lily Rock with its famous old monk still bowing in prayer. He was just saying vespers as the little party, dusty, brown and a bit stiff from two days in the saddle and one night on the ground, trotted into Fern Cañon and loped out onto the road for Idyllwild. The sun was just creeping toward the western sky, and a wonderful rosy light, not of earth, lay on the long range of pine-clad mountains that stand like a protecting wall and bulwark back of Idyllwild. Grim old Tauquitz or the Talking Mountain, was glorified into a wondrous beauty in the softened pink light, and a warm flush overspread the features of the silent monk. Purpling shadows rested in among the darkening pines, and the fern meadow showed dark where the long shadows of the trees fell athwart it. With gentle whirr of wings and tiny trill a flock of quail flew up from a thicket, a tree squirrel, with bushy tail bobbing, glided across the bridle path and sped away among the fern-filled meadow. A grateful breath of delicious coolness greeted the tired riders as they loosened rein at the brook and a band of dusty horses plunged their velvet noses into the clear, cool water and drank as only a thirsty horse can drink full, deep draughts.

"Five o'clock, and two bathrooms for nine people," cheerfully called somebody, and with a clatter of hoofs and merry goodbys, the Expedition de Luxe, with bandanas round its necks and sunburn on its noses, clattered into the bungalow yard.

Was it worth while?

IRELAND'S FAIR.

In Herbert Park, not far from the heart of Dublin City and partly on the site of Donnybrook Fair of unsavory memory, stand the white buildings of the Irish International Exhibition. The difference between these noble palaces and the rickety booths of Donnybrook is symbolic of the difference between the old Ireland and the new; of the deeply significant renaiscence and awakening of a nation. Ireland's fair might well be called her birthday celebration. Donnybrook Fair used to be the trading place for all the peasants and small farmers and petty shopkeepers of the country who could ride or walk to the spot, for this was their great social center. In the retrospect, Donnybrook may seem picturesque, as showing the Irish joy in living, the bravery and song. But actually, in its wasting and cheating, its frothy political talk and purposeless fighting, Donnybrook showed the bitter effect of a cruel land system forced on Ireland by a people who could never understand her.

But the old Ireland is dead, and there is a new Ireland, becoming more and more unified and coherent through a variety of causes, chief of which are the new land system and the recent industrial development. Now the peasant may himself be a small land holder. He lives, or may live, in a decent house. His younger sons, through the new technical education offered by the government, may be fitted for skilled labor. His wife and daughters may supplement his earnings by their work in home industries. And all that Ireland is and all that she will become are vividly suggested by the exhibition.—[Everybody's.

Capture of Jeff Davis.

THE STORY TOLD BY HIS FORMER BODY SERVANT.

By a Special Contributor.

MRS. MAGGIE HOWARD JEFFERSON DAVIS, the only surviving child of President Jefferson Davis, of the Confederacy; now the wife of J. D. Hayes, a banker of Colorado Springs, Colo., recently wrote to James Jones, the long-time faithful body servant of President Jefferson Davis, and personal friend of Mrs. Davis and the children, for the story of the flight from Richmond and the capture of President Davis.

James Jones is an employé of the United States Senate, in a humble capacity, is very poor, and recently refused a cash offer of $15,000 to reveal the hiding place of the great seal of the Confederacy. He sent to Mrs. Hayes, of whom he speaks with the loving reverence of ante-bellum days, as "Miss Maggie," the following statement, to which he made affidavit:

"I left Richmond about 1 or 2 o'clock on Sunday with Mrs. Davis and her four children, and Miss Maggie Howard, Mrs. Davis's sister. We took a pair of horses and carriage and baggage, and went direct to Charlotte, N. C. We did not reach Charlotte until some time the following Tuesday. We remained in Charlotte until the 2nd day of May, when Mr. Jefferson Davis joined us. That night Mr. Davis was making a speech from the steps of Capt. Bates's house when a courier rode up with the news of President Lincoln's assassination. Mr. Davis quit talking at once, and in a very short time left Charlotte with his party, who were all afterward captured. I left with Mrs. Davis and the family, including Miss Howard, on the train for Abbeville, S. C., where we arrived the next day, and went to Lawyer Burt's house, where we subsequently remained for several weeks. Mr. Davis and his party left Charlotte, N. C., on horseback, and we did not see Mr. Davis and his party again until we met them at Washington, Ga.

"Mrs. Davis, the four children, Miss Howard and myself left Abbeville, S. C., with the two horses and carriage and baggage, and when we reached Washington, Ga., we found Mr. Davis and his party there. We did not remain in Washington, Ga., but a few hours, and then I took Mrs. Davis, Miss Howard and the four children in the carriage, and Mr. Davis and his friends were on horseback, and we went south some ten miles from Washington, Ga., and went into camp for the night. Mr. Burton M. Harrison took charge of Mrs. Davis, Miss Howard, Mr. Jeff Howard, the four children and myself, together with baggage, wagons, etc., and we went off through Southeast Georgia. Mr. Davis and his party took a different direction. After five or six days of travel, we were joined by Mr. Davis and his party. We were still in the State of Georgia when Mr. Davis and his party joined us, in the afternoon of May 9, 1865. After traveling for a short time, we went into camp for the night.

"Mr, Davis was badly worn out, and was suffering terribly with neuralgia, which compelled us to stop. He had dismissed all of the soldiers at Washington, Ga., and the only gentlemen in the party on the said 9th day of May were Mr. Davis, and his personal friends.

"Mr. Davis pulled off his coat and boots, and laid down in the tent where only Mrs. Davis was.

"Miss Howard and the children were in the only other tent we had.

"I remained up all night, washing clothes.

"About 3 o'clock in the morning of May 10, 1865, I heard a noise that sounded like cavalry. I went and wakened Mr. Burton M. Harrison and told him that horsemen were coming. Mr. Harrison thought I was mistaken. Then I wakened all of the other gentlemen and told them and Mr. Harrison that there was no time to be lost, as they could then easily hear the tread of the horses, by putting their ears to the ground.

"I then went to the tent where Mr. and Mrs. Davis were and waked them up. I helped Mr. Davis put on his boots and coat. By that time the Federal soldiers were at front of the tent with their guns pointed at Mr. Davis's tent door.

"When the Federal soldiers had got within say 200 yards of our camp, with a small stream between them and us, they made some mistake and commenced firing on each other in the darkness. A part of them surrounded our camp. They did not stop firing on each other until it got light enough for them to see their mistake; but by that time, a number of their men and horses had been killed.

"Lieut.-Col. Pritchard told me he had 300 picked men for the purpose of capturing Mr. Davis and his party.

"I had kept Mr. Davis's horse bridled and saddled for him all night, ready for him to make his escape at a minute's notice. Before Mr. Davis got to the tent door, the firing had commenced on the opposite side of the small stream. When Mr. Davis reached the tent door a Federal soldier sat on his horse directly behind a pine tree that was in front of the tent, and he held his gun leveled right at Mr. Davis. The soldier behind the tree was only a few paces from the tent door.

"Mr. Davis had on his coat, pants, vest, light felt hat and riding boots. His clothes were of a light color. He had no arms of any kind on his person. He had left the tent too hurriedly to gather up any arms. He rushed from the tent with the hope of making his escape.

"Mrs. Davis heard the Federal soldier call to Mr. Davis to 'halt.' She rushed out to Mr. Davis in her underclothes. Mr. Davis was advancing toward the Federal soldier. He afterward told me that he hoped to throw the Federal soldier out of the saddle, mount his horse and ride away. Mrs. Davis was afraid that the Federal soldier would kill Mr. Davis, and she ran to Mr. Davis and urged him to go back into the tent.

"Just as Mr. Davis left the tent to make his escape, I reached down in the dark to get his raglan overcoat, a big, loose-sleeved overcoat worn by gentlemen in those days, and I also picked up a heavy traveling shawl and threw it across the back of his head and neck, and slipped the raglan overcoat on him. When Mrs. Davis rushed out, without her dress, I reached back in the tent to get her raglan, which was made of dark goods and was made very much like his, big and loose; and when I put the raglan on her, I saw my mistake, for, in the dark and in the excitement, I had gotten Mrs. Davis's raglan on Mr. Davis. I exchanged them, and threw Mrs. Davis's around her, and Mr. Davis's around him.

"By this time Mrs. Davis had persuaded Mr. Davis to stop his advance upon the Federal cavalryman, and go back into the tent.

"Mr. Davis remained back in the tent only a very short time, and then came out with his light felt hat, light suit of clothes, boots, raglan and the shawl across the back of his head and neck, where I had thrown the shawl on account of his neuralgia. Mr. Davis did not have on any other garments but those I mention. Of this I am positive, as I woke him up and never left his side.

"Mr. and Mrs. Davis had no gown nor wrapper of any kind in the tent. They only had the clothes on their backs, and the raglans and shawl. Any one who states otherwise is mistaken. It was my duty to look after Mr. Davis's clothes from the time I went into his employ, and I know that he had nothing else with him than I have stated. And I know exactly what Mrs. Davis had in the tent that night; and I state positively that she had no gown or wrapper of any kind; and, at the time, she was wearing a dark skirt and waist, which were left in the tent by her when she rushed out to protect Mr. Davis, and that she put them on at once, when she succeeded in getting Mr. Davis to return to the tent."

SOME LONDON NICKNAMES.

It was only a very few weeks ago that cabs fitted with taximeters in the manner so popular in Paris were put on the London streets. At first everybody called them "taximeter cabs," to distinguish them from ordinary cabs, but the name has by universal consent been shortened to "taxi-cabs;" in just the same way as the omnibus—which was introduced from Paris by a man named Shillibeer, the first traveling from Paddington to the Bank of England in 1829—got changed to "'bus," and "cab" took the place of cabriolet, as the one-horse vehicles used to be called when twelve of them first plied in London in 1823.

Who, nowadays, would ever dream of speaking of the Central London Railway when "The Tube" has supplanted the proper name, as "The Bakerloo" has not only by common consent become the recognized way of speaking of the Baker-street and Waterloo Railway, but has actually been adopted by the company itself, which thus consciously or unconsciously, pay their tribute of admiration to Mr. George R. Sims, who, it is generally believed, invented the name.

The people who patronize the Trocadero Restaurant always call it "The Troc," just as those who yield allegiance to the Criterion would have a fit if it were called by any other name than "The Cri." In the days when the St. James's Restaurant was so popular it was always called "Jimmy's," and already the new hotel which is rising on the old site is being spoken of in the same way.

Even the clubs have not failed to fall under the fatal fascination of nicknames, for the United Service is commonly known as "The Senior," the Naval and Military as "The In and Out," while a well-known one is by no means infrequently spoken of as "The Pothouse" by the members who frequent it.—[Tit-Bits.

IN PERIL OF CHANGE.

Woe to the land, a treble woe,
That palters to the crowd's behest;
That takes the level of its low
And lacks the leading of its best;
Deserting sane and sober rules
To be the foolish sport of fools.

Truth issues not from myriad throats
That cry as with the voice of one,
Not as a strain of many notes,
Nor as a strident unison;
One here and there, the vanguard few,
Alone can voice the Good and True.

Inconstant as the winds that pass
From east to south, from north to west—
Uncertain as the pliant grass
By every fitful breeze depress'd—
Unstable as the helmless bark
That staggers derelict and dark:

Dupe of the voice that cries aloud
With captious plausive eloquence,
Slave of the ocean's froth, the crowd
Sways cumbersome in impotence.
Yet not in storm and fire outpoured,
But in the still voice came the Lord.

THE DIAGNOSIS.

"He's dead at last, eh?" said the undertaker's clerk "What did he die of?"

"It's hard to tell," the undertaker answered with a yawn. "Some say he died of homeopathy, others vow that osteopathy killed him, and one party blames allopathy, while still another attributes his demise to Christian Science."

Many Miles Above Earth.

NEW BALLOON EXPERIMENTS OF THE WEATHER BUREAU.

TO BE LIBERATED SIMULTANEOUSLY AT THIRTY STATIONS, SURROUNDING STORM CENTERS—KITES FIND WINDS 100 MILES AN HOUR AND TEMPERATURE 100 DEGREES BELOW FREEZING—NEW AERONAUTIC STATION—BALLOONS WHICH AUTOMATICALLY FALL—DISCOVERIES REVOLUTIONIZE METEOROLOGY.

By a Special Contributor.

BALLOONS carrying instruments five to ten, and perhaps fifteen, miles above the earth are, in the near future, to be liberated simultaneously at twenty or thirty Weather Bureau stations, surrounding typical storm centers.

"Observations obtained in this manner at various elevations, when compared with the records made at the same time at the surface of the earth, will doubtless throw much new light upon the mechanism of storms, cold waves, etc., and give to meteorologists a better understanding of the general circulation of the atmosphere," says Prof. Willis L. Moore, chief of the United States Weather Bureau.

The remarkable heights of ten and fifteen miles have already been reached by such small rubber balloons carrying marvelously light self-recording instruments, according to Prof. Moore.

Life Impossible so Far Up.

Of course, no living creature can survive at such a height as ten miles. The great rarity of the air, releasing the great pressure of the atmosphere, would cause the veins and arteries to expand to such a degree that heart failure would ensue. Moreover, death from oxygen starvation would occur at half this height unless artificial means of aiding respiration were afforded. Aëronauts have been able to go up as high as six miles by breathing bottled oxygen, but this elevation has been considered the limit of man-carrying balloons.

"Pilot balloons" is the official name of the aërial vehicles to be employed in this tapping of the upper skies. They are of rubber. They are of two or three cubic yards capacity, and pending from the netting of each is a minute basket, about the size of a canary's cage. This basket, strongly woven of light willow twigs, carries and protects the automatic weather observers sent to the great elevations.

Reaching, as they will, the very roof of the sky, they will be invisible from earth long before attaining half their destined height. If recent surveys of clouds are correct, they will go above the feathery cirrus forms—the highest clouds of all, whose tops are believed to reach about eight miles. They will pass above the greatest elevation to which birds venture in their highest flights and far above the highest peak of the Himalayas—earth's loftiest mountain.

Wind 100 Miles Per Hour.

These little balloons cannot be sent "captive" to such heights. The cord when fully reeled out would far outweigh the balloon to which attached. Moreover, the great eastward current of wind which continues uninterrupted and undeflected around and around the earth, up in the realm of the cirrus clouds, would soon tear the captive gas bags from their moorings. This eastward current is a a perpetual hurricane, its velocity being so swift that on summer days, when the wind is calm below, the apparently motionless cirrus clouds are darting through the heavens at a speed greater than 100 miles an hour. These velocities have recently been estimated by aid of surveying instruments. It is also estimated that the feathery cirrus clouds which, as said, are the highest of the entire cloud category, are great floating icebergs, their ice crystals being of the consistency of frozen vapor or very rarified snow, however, rather than of solid ice. They are so rarified that a balloon would rise through them without perceptible friction. Volcanic dust, thrown up into this great eastward "drift," by exploding craters, has be . known to continue to pass around and around the earth for more than a year, its presence being revealed by beautiful sunset phenomena. This was especially the case following the eruption of Krakatoa. But how, then, can Prof. Moore's meteorologists keep track of their little "pilot balloons" going up this far?

Automatically Descend from Given Height.

That the balloons will rise simply so far and no farther, a very ingenious device has been invented. As all aëronauts know, the higher a balloon goes, the more its gas expands—due to the decrease of atmospheric pressure—and, therefore, the more its gas bag swells, if of elastic material. How far its diameter will have expanded at six, eight, ten miles, and so on, can be calculated, and it is then a simple matter to insert inside the rubber bag a piece of cord just equalling the diameter to be attained at, say, ten miles. This cord connects the valve of the envelope with the opposite side, and when it is stretched to its utmost it opens the valve, allowing the gas to pass out. A parachute then opens and the empty envelope and instrument basket descend to earth. The parachute is of gaudy red material, that it may attract the attention of any one finding it upon the earth's surface.

The "revolving balloon and kite shed" is a novel adjunct of the Weather Bureau's research observatory at Mt. Weather, Va., where are being made preliminary experiments with the various aërial devices to be used in this upper air exploration. It looks like a Dutch windmill tower—round in the back and flat in front. Its foundation is drum-shaped, and upon this the circular floor of the shed is revolved until the high doors face the leeward, when they are opened for the balloon inside to make its exit.

A Kite Balloon.

Another novelty acquired for these experiments is a "kite balloon" obtained from Germany, where it was invented by Capt. Von Siegsfeld of the Prussian army. This is used for sounding the atmosphere in windy weather, where the little free balloons, above described, cannot be used. The Siegsfeld balloon combines the advantages of the kite and the captive balloon. Whereas the kite falls suddenly to earth when the wind dies out, and the ordinary captive balloon dips down lower and lower toward earth the stiffer the breeze grows, the kite balloon will stay up in a calm, and instead of dipping in a gale mounts higher the stiffer the breeze, as does the kite. It is poised in the air at the angle of the flat kite. To employ a comparison less classic than graphic, it is like a huge sausage with a squirrel's tail curling up over its latter and lower end. Underneath is a funnel into which the wind, blowing along its under side, is caught and which leads it into the squirrel tail. A valve admits this air, but will not allow its escape, and after the tail has become full and stiff it serves to steady the strange craft. The gas of the big sausage is confined in the upper and forward two-thirds, a space below being kept full of air by another funnel. As the balloon ascends and its gas compartment swells part of this air is forced out, but when the balloon descends and its gas bag contracts the funnel admits sufficient air to press up a diaphragm separating the two receptacles and fill out the envelope. Thus the balloon is always full of wind and hydrogen, their proportion varying with the elevation, and thus the outer covering is always kept full and tight. This balloon is always flown "captive," or tied to the earth by cable. Of course, it could be flown free, but in that case it would lose its kite characteristics of mounting high in a strong wind.

Kites Already Reach Four Miles.

A third class of aërial craft acquired for the upper-air research is the great box kite perfected by the Weather Bureau. These are enlargements of the box kites now flown by many a small boy. They are made to fold up when not in use and swinging from the upper, horizontal, central rib of the framework is a case containing the self-recording instruments, such as are packed in the more generous space of the balloon basket. In test flights with such kites at the German Aëronautical Observatory at Lindenburg elevations as great as four miles have already been reached. The kites at Mount Weather can be raised in winds varying from ten to forty miles per hour at the surface of the earth. In winds less than ten miles per hour balloons must be used.

The surprising records of low temperatures and high wind velocity brought back by pilot balloons that have already mounted to ten and fifteen miles have been a revelation to meteorologists. These records, according to Prof. Moore, "are compelling a reconstruction of existing ideas concerning the dynamics of the atmosphere." The observatory at Mount Weather has been for the past year silently coöperating with European observatories in sending up both kites and captive balloons on prearranged days.

The automatic weather observers sent up with these aërial craft vary in total weight from one and a half to three or four pounds. Each is made in one piece and automatically writes upon a revolving drum the exact temperature, pressure and humidity of the air, besides the velocity of the wind during each minute the instrument is in the air. The score of these four elements of weather is written by four pens, side by side, marking upon a sheet of paper traveling upon a revolving cylinder.

A Hundred Below Freezing.

Terrific cold, more than 100 degrees below freezing point, Fahrenheit, is sometimes recorded by these instruments when sent to these great heights. Since these low temperatures have been encountered, it has been necessary to test the accuracy of the "thermographs," or delicate thermometers, at these points. For this purpose the observatory has been equipped with a liquid-air plant, which produces temperatures lower than any which are likely to be reached by the balloons.

A special hydrogen plant for supplying these balloons is another new adjunct of this new observatory on the Blue Ridge Mountains. A strong electric current passed through water breaks the liquid into its constituent elements of hydrogen and oxygen. These gases are then collected and stored in appropriate tanks for future use as occasion may require. Commercial hydrogen, the gas of greatest lifting power, cannot now be bought in this country, for which reason aëronauts are filling their balloons at coal-gas works.

Passing events in our surface winds cast their shadows before in the great rushing, eastward drift of the upper sky. By tapping the outer shell of perpetual hurricane our weather prophets find a veritable mine of data on which they can base more dependable predictions of longer range. Hence all of this high-flying of kites and balloons.

NERVE-RACKING EXPERIENCE OF A DEPARTMENT STORE GIRL.

By a Special Contributor.

IT was Saturday night in Los Angeles. The throng in the brilliantly-lighted streets was fast dispersing, and tired shop girls were preparing to leave their work.

A chattering group came out of a department store and walked down the street. Bessie Mathews, the little glove-counter girl, gave a weary sigh and exclaimed:

"Oh, girls, I am so thankful that this was pay day; and tomorrow is Sunday!"

"So am I," answered one of her companions, "but I don't think it is just that we have to work until 11 every Saturday evening; I tell you what, my four blocks seem twice as long at night."

"You ought not to care, Jennie," objected another girl, "for poor Bess lives so far out; I should be so afraid——"

"Oh, here's my corner!" interrupted Bessie. "Keep the rest of your fears for Monday, girls, and sweet dreams to all of you. Good night."

"Good-by, Bess!" cried the others in a friendly chorus. "Wish you were going our way."

As Bessie walked on, the lights became less frequent, for she had left the business section behind, and was following a quiet little street that was her usual route to and from the store, as it made the distance considerably less. Most of the dwellings were apparently wrapped in slumber, but an occasional gleam from window or veranda greeted the girl as she passed by. Once as she crossed the broad band of light cast by the street light in front of a cottage, she saw three men slowly pacing the veranda, their hats on the backs of their heads, their cigars sending up triple incense.

"How queer that a man should wear a straw hat in January," thought Bessie, as she drew her wrap closer about her throat. She reflected that the man must be an easterner, or perhaps a Londoner, who thought mild, sunny days and blue skies called for summer apparel.

Before she had reached the next block, Bessie heard footsteps behind her, and for a moment the sound breaking in upon the stillness of the night startled her heart into quickened beating. Another street light was passed, and in a moment Bessie saw three shadows moving along the sidewalk ahead. And one shadow wore a straw hat.

Upon turning a corner, she glanced back, as the sound of steps was now fainter. In spite of herself the girl caught her breath and hastened her pace a little, for three dark forms were following along the other side of the street. "I thought they couldn't be footpads, but now I believe they must be following me." And Bessie thought with alarm of the great number of hold-ups there had recently been in the city. She unclasped her handbag, and slipped the little purse, unusually heavy tonight, inside her shirt waist. "Now I am not so thankful it is Saturday night," she thought with sinking heart.

Just then the man whose hat had called Bessie's attention left his companions, and, walking swiftly ahead, crossed the street, waiting on the corner the girl had to pass. Without daring to look around, she knew the two others had also crossed over and were only a few rods behind her. With a brave attempt at calm unconcern, Bessie approached the waiting figure on the corner. As she passed, the man gave her a scrutinizing look, gravely lifted his hat, and rejoined his companions.

With home less than two blocks away, Bessie began to breathe more freely; but the murmur of low voices at some distance behind her was most disturbing to her strained nerves. Suddenly her heart stopped beating for an instant, for she saw by her side that straw hat. The man had overtaken her with a few rapid strides, and now he spoke.

"Louise, how can you!" His voice was low, and thrilled with emotion. "This is too much—you must come with me now. You shall not deceive me any longer!"

Bessie could not utter a sound, but her eyes widened in amazement at these seemingly insane words. The low, vehement voice went on. "I had thought you were dead, your mother told me you were dead, and I believed her; why did you let her keep us apart, Louise? Come now with me, keep your old promise, before she separates us entirely. Oh, it has been so long." His tense clasp was upon her arm; with a gasp Bessie shrank back and whispered:

"Go away!"

"What do you mean? Have you no love left for me? O Louise, to deceive and torture me when I loved you so!"

He was standing in front of the girl now, blocking her way, and gazing reproachfully into her averted face. They had reached the corner where stood Bessie's home, but she could not have found her voice to cry out even if she had dared to thus alarm her frail mother and little sister. Again that earnest voice spoke, those outstretched hands were almost touching her. "Hurry, Louise; are you going to decide against me after all? Quickly, dear, you are almost home."

Bessie was too much frightened to think of reasons or explanations, or of anything but escape. With a little sob she turned and darted across the flower-decked lawn to her own back door and flew upstairs to the shelter of her room.

One morning about a month later, one of the clerks stopped at the glove counter for a little chat. As she was admiring the effect of a crimson rose at the throat of Bessie's black gown, the visitor suddenly said: "Do you know, Miss Mathews, you are the perfect image of a girl who lived across the street from your house before you came there? You know I often visit my aunt out in that part of town. I have often noticed how very much like her you are."

"Is that so?" said Bessie, rather absently.

"Yes, indeed; I suppose I thought of it particularly this morning because I read an item yesterday that brought up her name. It was quite a romance. You see this Louise Jerrold—but I am boring you, and I know I ought to skip back to my counter this minute."

"Oh, wait," said Bessie quickly, "just finish that story; indeed I do want to hear it!"

"Well, I only know this Louise girl was in love with a man her parents detested, so her mother hustled her East to a maiden aunt and told the distracted lover that Louise had died soon after reaching New York. That was months and months ago, and the queer part is that the unknown suicide found at the bay two weeks ago was that very same young man, Hartley or Harvey, or something like that. The paper was slow finding out this romance, but they had in a little paragraph about Miss Jerrold last night. It seems it took a long time to identify the poor man after he was found; he had been missed from his lodgings almost two weeks before the tragedy. Of course you read of such things all the time, but I could not forget that girl and how sad she used to look after her troubles began. Mercy, I must go; but I think it is so queer that the young man did not drown himself months ago, if he was so heartbroken, instead of waiting all that time. Don't you think that is peculiar?" asked Bessie's visitor, as she moved down the aisle.

"Very." Bessie's reply was faint, and for a moment she leaned against the counter and closed her eyes as if in suffering.

The Bear He Didn't Get.

ADVENTURE IN THE "BIG THICKET" REGION ON THE GULF COAST.

By a Special Contributor.

IN the spring of 1905 the chief of the Biological Survey gave me orders to make a field trip in the "Big Thicket" regions along the Gulf coast of Texas, my first stop to be in the vicinity of Sour Lake, a dirty, nasty little oil camp where everything, including houses and people, was smeared with black grease. My object in view was to secure a collection of mammals and birds for the museum at Washington, D. C.

IN THE THICKET

After stopping a day at this place I decided upon a location about ten miles northeast, at what is called the Jerdin Settlement, in the very heart of the dense thicket. Here I ran across a man named Mike Griffin, who was a natural woodsman, and just the kind of a chap to help me with my work.

The survey wanted some specimens of bear, deer, panther, fox, lynx and quite a number of species of smaller mammals. I decided to first hunt for the larger ones, and my man Griffin said he would certainly show me where I could find "any amount of 'em." We decided to start on our first hunt about daybreak the next morning after my arrival. Our dogs, which Mike called the best bear dogs in that part of the country (a statement undoubtedly true, as there were no others within miles,) consisted of a pack of all sizes and descriptions—some of Hinze's sausage dogs, forty-nine varieties.

Mike Griffin, by the way, was a tall, lanky fellow about six feet six, weight 110 pounds, more or less, and shaped about the proportion of a telegraph pole. When he walked he bent almost double, and took steps about three times as long as those of an average man. He stepped across streams I would be obliged to jump, and stepped over logs I found it necessary to climb, and it was with difficulty I kept pace with him. After we had traveled several miles along a partly abandoned trail we reached a place where two strands of thicket came together between open fields. My man stopped to give his directions. By this time I was blowing fairly hard from my efforts to keep up with Mike, but I managed to hear what he had to say.

"Right here is the finest stand in all this part of the country. Now I am goin' to take the dogs and make a drive down yonder. If a bear or deer or panter is in that part of the swamp, he is shore to come out by here, an' I want you to shoot the critter when it hikes past, but whatever you do, be shore you don't git off this trail, fer jest as sartin as you do you'll git lost. After I make this here drive I will come on the trail somewhar and blow the horn, an' you kin answer."

Well I sat on a log and prepared to wait for the yelping of the dogs. I didn't have long to wait. I heard them coming. The sounds grew louder and louder—yep, yep, yelp, in all tones and degrees, such conglomerated bawls would be hard to equal. I stood with gun in hand watching on all sides for the bear, panther, or whatever might be coming, to bound across the trail. The dogs kept getting closer and closer, and finally, to my astonishment, in place of a large beast, a little gray fox jumped across the trail and disappeared in the palmetto brakes. I was so surprised to see such small game that I failed to shoot until it was too late. When the dogs arrived I yelled as loud as I possibly could and piled into the chase myself. When I yelled the dogs seemed to go crazy, and I guess the fox did also.

Foxes, when chased by dogs, run in circles very rarely more than half a mile wide, and sometimes much less, especially when they begin to get tired. By making short cuts, I managed to keep up with the procession. After about an hour's chasing the little fellow began to get tired, and commenced to dodge back and forth among the dense brakes, until finally I managed to get a shot and killed it. The dogs then came in for their last shaking and chewing, and my "bear" chase was over.

The dogs then scattered to find their master, leaving me to get back to the trail as best I could. Being lost in a dense thicket with no landmarks in any direction, and no compass to guide me, was unpleasant, and after remembering what my guide had said about leaving the trail, started me to thinking. When we started that morning I asked which direction a person should take get out of the thicket, and Mike laughed and said the northeast would always bring any one somewhere along the Kountz-Sour Lake road, but asked what difference it would make as long as the sun was not shining, and I didn't carry a compass. "You couldn't find the northeast in this drizzling rain."

I thought of my cow horn hanging by a string from my neck and resorted to blowing it, but no answer came. I blew and blew and blew, but no response. At last I decided if I cared to get back to the road that horn would not help me and I'd better save my wind for tramping. I leaned against a gum tree and studied what course I should pursue. Then flashing through my mind came the remembrance of an old woodsman who had told me how to find my way in a timbered swamp. He instructed me to always look for the moss which is invariably found growing heaviest on the north side of the timber. With this help I soon found my bearings, and after several hours of tramping, came out on the county road about two miles west of Griffin's farm.

The boys at the house were surprised to see me alone, and when I told them what had happened, they seemed more astonished. After washing, and putting on clean clothes, I sat down on the porch to rest. Far down the road I saw Mike Griffin coming home in his usual lean, trotting walk. When he arrived, he was all out of breath, and several minutes elapsed before he could speak. With a half grin, half-amazed look, he asked: "Whar did you come frum? Whar the devil did you go?" I told him I went with the dogs, but where they went I didn't have the least idea, that he had better ask them. "Wa'll, how did you git home?" I then told him all, and he sat on the edge of the porch, shook his head, pulled a big chunk of tobacco, and said:

"Wa'll I'll be blamed, if you don't beat all. You are the darndest tenderfoot I ever did see."

THE KISS IN JAPAN.

She was a Japanese college student, little and thin, but very graceful in her Paris gown.

"The kiss," she said, blushing faintly, "was unknown in Japan fifty years ago. Now, among the aristocracy, it is becoming quite renowned. Some of my people love the kiss.

"Yet it comes as a great shock at first. It is so different, you know, from anything in a Japanese girl's experience. I have known maidens who fainted at a first kiss that was perhaps too warmly tendered. Yet these very maids became afterward ardent advocates of the new western embrace.

"Frankly, I like the kiss myself. Its stimulus, its fragrance, and the feeling, as of red satin, when mouth touches mouth with a warm, soft shock—yes, frankly I like the kiss, and I find it extremely difficult to deny an eager young man so innocent and so delightful an embrace."

THE THIRD COURSE.

They bound the missionary with lianas, and laid him at the foot of a palm. Blinking in the tropical sunshine, he looked up dubiously. "May I ask," he said, "what course you propose to take with me?" Thereupon with a faint smile the King replied: "The usual course, my dear sir. You'll follow the fish." And the sycophantic tribesmen laughed and thumped their war clubs on the hot, white sand.

An Ancient "Print Shop."

ESTABLISHMENT OF FIRST PRINTER OF BELGIUM VISITED.

By a Special Contributor.

HOW do you think it would feel to suddenly step off the street of a busy, bustling, modern city, enter the arched portal of a great building, and, as by the magic of Aladdin's lamp, be transported from the present to the past, and find yourself surrounded by the pomp and circumstance of a patrician Flemish family of the sixteenth century, when Antwerp was one of the great art and commercial centers of Europe, but when learning was confined only to the clergy and upper classes, and printing was yet in its infancy? Where even the people about you wore the quaint costume of that faraway period; brown broadcloth jackets with slashed sleeves trimmed with black; wide baggy knee breeches, low buckled shoes, wide white collars, and queer-shaped soft hats.

But that was the Arabian Nights experience I had in Antwerp, when in company with friends, I visited the famous home and printing establishment of Christopher Plantin, the first printer of Belgium, built by him in 1555, and occupied by him and his descendants continuously until 1876, when it was sold to the city of Antwerp to be kept as a museum. The building is a very large structure built about a large rectangular court, and everything about the place is exactly as it was in the time of the patrician owners in the sixteenth century.

Think of looking at the first metal type ever made, and the first printing presses ever used in Belgium! But that is what we did, and it gave one the feeling of walking in a dream. A portion of the building on one side of the court was used for the printing establishment, while the family resided in another portion on the opposite side of the court. A visit to the place gives one an idea of the luxury and refinement which surrounded the lives of the merchant princes and upper classes of that day, as nothing else could do, and this family was enjoying in Antwerp far more comforts and pleasures than poor Mary, Queen of Scots, in her cold, cheerless castles in Scotland, or in fact, than the royalty and nobility of England.

One first enters a large, handsome reception hall, in which a broad, winding stairway leads to the upper floor. From this reception hall one is conducted into the large drawing-rooms and family apartments on the ground floor, built in the substantial, beautiful style of the period, and sumptuously furnished.

The walls of most of the rooms are wainscoted with dark, heavy, Flemish oak paneling, and the ceilings are heavily beamed with oak. In the grand drawing-room above the paneling the walls are hung with dark olive-green satin brocade, while in many of the other living-rooms, boudoirs and bedrooms the walls are covered with heavy embossed Flemish leather, Spanish leather or tapestry.

Richly ornamented mantelpieces reaching to the ceiling are in all the rooms, and from the beamed ceilings hang Venetian cut-glass chandeliers. The furniture consists of rare boule cabinets inlaid with tortoise shell, silver gilt and ivory, fine old Flemish oak chairs and tables, and the bedchambers contain elaborately-carved bureaus and high-canopied bedsteads.

Family portraits, many of them by Rubens, adorn the walls. There are pictures of Christopher Plantin, his daughter and his son-in-law Moretus who carried on the establishment, and a long line of their descendants. Within the medieval court the giant grapevines planted by Christopher Plantin in 1555 are still living, and have climbed to the very top of the walls. Over the arches and at intervals about these inner walls are busts of prominent members of the Moretus family. In the corridors of the court are several fine old ornamental pumps—in fact, everything is in perfect order, and the place would be entirely comfortable for a modern family.

Many of the rooms would be a perfect paradise for a bibliophile, for in long, glass-covered cases are displayed a magnificent collection of rare old manuscript Bibles and books of all kinds, elaborately illuminated in colors and gold, the workmanship being of the finest. In the great library are also to be found copies of every book that Plantin and his descendants ever printed, the most celebrated being the Biblia Polyglotta of 1568-73. The collection also includes many rare old documents and letters.

But to me the interest centered chiefly in the printing establishment. In the type room we were shown cases of the first metal type ever made, used by Christopher Plantin himself. There it lay all nicely sorted, and the cases covered with glass. What a revolution that metal type made in the world's progress and thought! There are twenty-two tons of this metal type here of the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The place also contains the most exquisitely-made wood cuts I ever saw. We went through room after room filled with cases containing the finest copper plates and wood cuts. Beside each copper plate is an engraving made from it, and the wood cuts are shown in the same way. The work ranges all the way from the most delicately-finished initial letters to very large copper-plate engravings. Among the latter, and one of the gems of this splendid collection, is a copper-plate engraving of Leonardo da Vinci's famous fresco of "The Last Supper." The engraving was made from a drawing by Rubens, and the engraver was Santman.

Through all the troublous times of Antwerp's history, including the havoc wrought by the cruel Spanish soldiery and the terrors of the Inquisition, when two-thirds of the city's population fled to other countries, this great printing establishment continued undisturbed, for it was at first under the protection of Emperor Charles V, and later Plantin received from Philip II of Spain a monopoly for the printing of all the missals and prayer-books for the dominions of the Spanish crown. After the middle of the seventeenth century the operations of the firm were confined to only the printing of this class of books. This privilege was withdrawn in 1800, when the printing office was temporarily closed, but it afterward resumed work, and continued in use until the building and its unique and valuable contents were sold to the city of Antwerp as a museum.

THE COURT.

The most valued drawings are by Rubens, who executed a number of sketches, title pages, and vignettes. Receipts which are also shown indicate that Rubens frequently drew designs for the printers. There are also drawings of many other celebrated Antwerp artists, including Erasmus Quellin, A. van Moort, Jan van Orley, and others.

In the printing office work could be resumed tomorrow, in such complete and perfect order has everything been left. At one end of the long composing-room are the two presses which Christopher Plantin used when he established his first printing office in Antwerp in 1549. Although so old and clumsy, they are in very good preservation. Along the walls of the room are presses of later periods, and on one were lying a number of copies of a poem composed by Christopher Plantin, and printed from the original type! It really seemed as though the founder of this house had just stepped into his office for a few minutes and would soon return to see how his workmen had printed his poem. I bought a copy of it and as the quaint philosophy and wisdom are worthy of the man and well worth reading, I give a translation herewith. It is entitled:

THE HAPPINESS OF THIS WORLD.

SONNET

By Christopher Plantin.

To have a cheerful, bright and airy dwelling place
  With garden, lawns and climbing flowers sweet,
  Fresh fruits, good wine, few children; there to meet
A quiet, faithful wife, whose love shines through her face.

To have no debt, no lawyers' feud; no love but one,
  And not too much to do with one's relations.
  Be just and be content. Naught but vexations
Arise from toadying the great, when all is done.

Live well and wisely, and for grace petition;
Indulge devotion to its full fruition;
Subdue your passions—that is the best condition.

Your mind untrammeled, and your heart in faith;
While at your business give your prayers breath;
This is to rest at home, and calmly wait for death.

In the proofreaders' room old proof sheets are lying on the desks and benches. This is a very tive room, and I wish as good quarters could be by many modern proofreaders. There is a massive fireplace in the room, the ceiling is heavily beamed, doors paneled, and abundant light comes in thr three or four large windows containing beautiful glass. The original oaken shutters still swing Under the windows is a broad oak desk with many drawers below, and at one end a slanting drop front of a large oak settee and footrest. I seated self here where so often, we were told, Justus L the distinguished critic and philologist, used to work, and I thought how admirably arranged the was, and since no one hurried in those days, everything in the patient, skilful, slow Flemish wonder they accomplished results that cannot even be surpassed with all our modern progress!

On the upper floor are collections of copper plates engravings after Rubens, Jordeans and Van Dyke, documents including the royal privileges granted Plantin by Philip II and Maximilian II and the Gutenberg Bible. On this floor also is the type where the metal type was made.

There are many attendants, all dressed in the sixteenth-century costume, and after leaving the and coming again into the rush and bustle of the ern life of Antwerp, the greatest seaport of Belgi has to almost rub one's eyes and give oneself a to realize that it was not all a dream—that really you were in the park on a sunny afternoon, think home and friends and the letters you must write, a genii did not appear, clap his hands, and suddenly port you back to the home of a Flemish patrician with his men-in-waiting and servants had royally tertained you all the afternoon.

REMINISCENCES OF MULAI HAFID, MOROCCO'S NEW SULTAN.

From London Express.

I SAW him for the first time when I rode out one afternoon from Red Marrakesh to visit the shrine of Sidi bel Abbas, the city's patron saint. Across the Blad al Hamra (red plain,) stretching its endless length from east to west, a small company of Moorish horsemen cantered toward the river, and foremost among them was a well-set-up man, who rode a fiery barb with perfect management, feeling his horse's mouth after the fashion of those who ride with an iron spike for bit and a single rein.

Although the barb was saddled with countless cloths, and the rider's ample skirts made for a picture that would have moved some Europeans to mirth, there was no mistaking the born horseman. He returned my salute with great courtesy as he cantered past, followed by his taleb (secretary) and three soldiers for escort.

"Yes, sir," said Salaam Shanni the Riffian, who ministered to me in those days, and always prefaced his every remark with these words, "that man be the Sultan's brother, Mulai Hafid."

A grave, resolute face had been revealed for a moment under the hood of the white haik; the eyes were large, the nose slightly aquiline, and the beard short and well trimmed. There was a suggestion about the head that the late Sultan Mulai el Hasan had chosen this son's mother from among the duskier beauties of his harem, but as a lad Mulai Hafid must have shown promise, for in Morocco a Sultan has been known to be the father of a hundred sons—indeed, Mulai Ismail's children numbered 600 or more; and very few reach high places.

Days passed before I looked again upon the face of the Viceroy, and then one evening as I passed from my riadh to the pathless roadway, Mulai Hafid rode at foot pace on his way to the Dar Maghzen, attended by the Governors of the Medina and the Mellah, who administered the city under his orders. Yet again I saw him, this time by the gate which is called Hagnoo, that leads to the green-tiled palace wherein he delivered the rule that bore the courtesy title of justice.

It chanced that I learned much about Mulai Hafid during my stay in Marrakesh, and what I was told sounded creditable. A foe to European extravagance, he had endeavored as far as in him lay to hold his half-brother, Mulai Abd-el-Aziz, from listening to the pandars who beset him, those precious "commercial agents" who were always conspiring to sell him costly things for which he had no use, the men to whom the bankruptcy of the state may be traced. At the same time, he was no fanatic. He took a mild interest in photography, and he had so much faith in European doctors that when one of his favorite wives was ill he sent for a European doctor and gave him access to the harem, in order to perform the operation that saved the woman's life. He took an interest in the welfare of the troops, and saw that they received their wages. He protected the Jewish community that lives in its own Mellah (literally "salted place.")

For some years Mulai Hafid has remained loyal to his half-brother under circumstances of very great difficulty. He has been approached again and again by envoys of the great southern tribes and urged to raise the standard of revolt on the ground that the Sultan was selling Morocco to Europe.

To a friend of mine who asked him only a few months ago if he would respond to the invitation, he replied in diplomatic fashion.

"I have a tolerable house," he said, "and my household (i.e., wives and concubines) is a large one. Fifty or sixty splendid horses stand in my stables. What more can a man want? Why should I add to the troubles of my brother and master?"

In the beginning of June the situation reached its climacteric. Representatives of several of the largest and most powerful tribes in the south came to the Dar Maghzen and said, bluntly, that Mulai Hafid must elect to lead or to follow. Even then the diplomat prevailed.

"You are many," he said, "but you are not all. Let me know what all the tribes say, and then, Allah willing, I will decide." A week or two later representatives of the tribes met on the plains of R'hamna. Mulai Hafid was not present, but he sent a liberal gift of sheep and corn that the delegates might eat and be merry. They debated and found that three considerable tribes had not declared themselves. Forthwith special messengers were sent to these, saying that if they would but throw in their lot with the others, Mulai Hafid would raise his standard, proclaim his rights as the Sultan's elder brother (he is some years older than Mulai Abd-el-Aziz) and drive all the infidels out of the land. The three tribes decided to send representatives to the next gathering with full powers to act, and by the time the tribes met for the second time on the R'hamna plains the guns had begun to speak at Casa Blanca.

Holy war was preached, enthusiasm prevailed, and messengers were despatched to Marrakesh to tell Mulai Hafid that the south was prepared to swear allegiance, and that, failing him, they would choose another of the Sultan's brothers to rule over them.

In that hour the Viceroy's allegiance must have failed, for although my own information from the south stops at the second meeting of the tribesmen, there is no reason now to doubt that Mulai Hafid felt that his hour had come. Now he will have been proclaimed by the people and by the religious council of Southern Morocco, he will have ridden through the streets under the M'dhal, the great umbrella of green silk that is the outward sign of Moorish sovereignty. He will have been proclaimed in the mosques, and doubtless he has ridden out across the red plain where I saw him for the first time to pray at the shrine of Sidi bel Abbas, on the high peak of the Jiliz Hills.

Did not Sidi bel Abbas, in the days of his earthly sojourn, stand on one leg for forty years, praising Allah all the time, thus earning his claim to saintship? Will not his intercession help the Viceroy—in his hour of need? And his people, knowing that a strong man rules them, will respond in their thousands when the green banner of Islam summons the Crescent to do battle with the Cross.

The Topanga Canyon.

A TRIP INTO THE HEART OF THE SIERRA SANTA MONICA.

By a Special Contributor.

AT this dusty season of the year a day's excursion from the city is apt to be a dry one, though not necessarily so in the prohibition sense. It is so long since rain fell, that it is no easy matter to make your plans for a picnic by the side of a running stream. Yet there are a few spots, within reach of the citizen, where the draft of the rivers on the water stored in the mountain reservoirs is still honored, though in a rather grudging way.

One of these is the Topanga Cañon, in the mountains west of Santa Monica. It is well worth visiting besides for its remarkable rock scenery; and because the road that runs through it leads into the heart of the picturesque and lonely Sierra by the sea, affording the visitor a glimpse of mountain scenery of a different type from that of the better-known Sierra Madre. For the coast range, lacking hotels and tourist resorts, is an undiscovered country to most Angeleños, though its beauties are appreciated by those who live within hail of its peaks.

It is only five miles from the Palisades station, on the Westgate trolley line to the mouth of the Topanga Cañon by the shortest route, which is down the cliff and along the beach. The carriage road, which follows the same direction, having a detour to make at starting, takes a mile longer to reach the same spot. Thence the scenic part of the cañon lies three miles inland. It is not a Royal Gorge, nor a Yosemite, but in its combination of rocks, wood, and water it is one of the most romantic spots in the county.

In planning a trip along the coast, it is best to pick a day when the tide is high about noon. Thus you get the advantage of low water going and returning. The hard, level sands are kind to the feet of pedestrians, and better traveling for carriage folk than the very dusty road under the cliffs. Only at the horns of each crescent-shaped bay do rocks offer any obstruction to the passage of vehicles. There is always plenty to observe on a seaside trip, a rich harvest for the eye and ear. The waves chatter cheerily; the sunbeams twinkle on the face of the ocean; sea birds whistle and scatter at your approach; there are vessels at anchor in the roadstead. They come far to visit our shores, these "gypsies of the Horn," as Kipling calls them. One is a black-nosed steamer tramp; the other a sailing bark, whose rusty hull has been battered by all the seas between this and far-distant Norway.

Midway of one of the coves that indent the shore stands an obelisk of stone. Fixed on a broad base and tapering to a point, it is remarkably like a human thumb in shape; the petrified thumb of a gouty giant, full of "chalkstones," one might fancy, for the rock, being a conglomerate, is stuck all over with rounded pebbles. And from the sand below project four rugged knobs, like the knuckles of a closed hand under the extended thumb. The latter is what geologists term an "outlyer"—a piece of stratified rock isolated from its connections, like the last house of a row partly demolished. In old countries such pillars by the sea, called in Scotland "stacks" and elsewhere "skerries," have each a distinctive name by which they are recorded in the charts. They are useful landmarks to fishermen and seafarers generally.

But here not even the mountain peaks are named. All the California coast between the widely-separated beach towns is lonely; none more so than the strip between Santa Monica and Hueneme. Fishing hamlets there are none. Between the long pier and the sign post inscribed "To Cheney's Ranch," where the Topanga road turns inland, there is but one habitation, the solitary dwelling of a "paisano," a Mexican of the olden time.

It is not quite clear how the road will make its way through the maze of ridges that are seen descending from the hilltops, but it heads straight for a piece of flat land bordered by willows. This is the lower end of the valley indeed, but do not expect to find running water in sight of these arid hillocks with their withered, rusty brown faces. The mountain streams, as they approach the sea, make for themselves wide beds of sand, under which they hide themselves during the drought of summer. Water there is in stagnant pits under the willows, or what would the campers do—those young men in the easy undress of bathing suits whose tent shines white against the green of the dense willow thickets. And the trees themselves, these luxuriant sycamores and live oaks that overshadow the winding road with their leafy canopies, must refresh their roots from underground sources. As for the smaller growths, the wayside shows like an unweeded garden that has gone to seed, with here and there a few flowers—the scarlet fuchsia, a yellow daisy, and the large lilac trumpets of the jimson weed which sprawls over every patch of sand.

A mile back from the beach, there is living water. Here is the outer guard of the mountain fastness, a broad gateway, guarded by two-story brush-clad hills, between which the river glides down under an arcade of trees. This is a favorite camping spot. The thick shade, the murmur of the tired stream slipping languidly between the gray boulders, the quiet peacefulness of the scene invite amateur gypsies to unpack their tents and set up the cook stove. And quail in big coveys troop down to drink quite indifferent to this harmless invasion of their solitudes.

After this, the road and river wrangle for two miles over the right of way in the narrow valley. Hence the frequent unbridged crossings, which at this season the foot traveler takes dry shod, stepping from stone to stone. There is a gradual but gentle rise, which on a mellow September day one is inclined to linger over; resting now and again in the shade of a yellowing walnut tree, or an umbrageous bay whose aromatic fruit is now ripening.

Just beyond the last ford stands the inner guard of cliffs, the entrance to the cañon proper. At this point the hills come very close together, and the road starts aside to climb their west flank on its own account, leaving to the stream the narrow channel it has worn for itself through the base of the mountains. There is nothing else for it; when the spring floods are on, the river fills every bit of the gorge, which is only fifty feet across, between the perpendicular cliffs. Now the only obstacle to an exploration of the cañon on foot is found in the stubborn bushes and huge boulders that choke the channel. These are from the pudding-stone rock of which this hill country is mainly built up. The plums in the pudding are of all colors, white, black, red, but most are fragments of water-worn gray granite; pebbles that were once assembled on a primeval beach, then compacted into rock by a mortar of sand, and finely upheaved to form dry land. The cliffs above the stream, rising a sheer 200 feet on the east side, are of the same rock. The regular layers of colored stones give them the appearance of an artificial mosaic.

But the cañon is so thickly filled with trees, sycamores, bays and broad-leafed maples, that the cliff scenery is better viewed from the graded road. It must have taken considerable blasting to pave this narrow way through a rock so stubborn as conglomerate. The road soon climbs above the level of the trees, and the cañon then appears, to one looking down, like a narrow green ribbon winding at the foot of lofty gray cliffs. Where seen in profile, these heights are jagged, backed into strange figures; but on the flat the regular stratification, in which layers of yellow sandstone alternate with the pebble rock, gives them a remarkable banded appearance. The strata are tilted at a sharp angle toward the south.

The road engineers its way uphill very cautiously, swerving as soon as possible from the dangerous neighborhood of the hither cliffs. There is no room for vehicles to pass, except where a descending spur has been cut sheer through, the way widened, and a parapet of rock left for protection. From such a salient angle a wide extended prospect is obtained.

It is seen that the cañon is a deep crack at the bottom of a huge oval bowl, the rim of which is formed by the high mountain peaks. The circumference is broken by a gap—the pass indicated by a belt of oakwood some three miles away, up toward which the grade worms its way along the easier slope of the concave. Across the cañon the hills fall steeply toward its brim, their sides clothed with a dense chaparral. Owing to a "fault," or dislocation of the strata, the nature of the cañon wall is changed. The tilted rocks abut against horizontal layers of pink and buff-colored sedimentary rock, rising one above the other like courses of masonry in some huge fortification. The white scars cut across their face show where the cascades leap down in the rainy season.

Looking back down the grade a curiously isolated rock is seen to overhang the roadway. Rising forty feet high out of the brushwood and shaped like a rugged pyramid, it is more completely detached from its rocky connections than the pillar by the seashore. At first sight you would take it for a monument that had been built on the spot.

The pass at the head of the canon leads farther into the heart of these sequestered mountains to scenery equally romantic. But the trip passes the limit of a day's excursion. On a longer outing, the road might be followed till it joins the highway into Ventura county, or a return could be made by a long "circumbendibus" via the Cahuenga Pass to Hollywood. Nor would the country seen be altogether wild and infertile. There are ranches in these mountains—the great Malibu Ranch for one; and some people took up government land last year to experiment with. But the greater part of this mountain area is neither pasture nor arable. It is barren and dry, covered with an almost impenetrable chaparral of breast-high bushes, some like the lilac, bearing thorns. That is the main feature of the southern coast ranges.

From a distance the shrubbery covering, purple in certain lights, looks remarkably like heather. This deceptive appearance, together with the contour and general elevation of the hills, makes the country resemble a deer forest in the Highlands of Scotland. And it does harbor deer and plenty of quail; but it would be hopeless to introduce here the grouse that have given such high renting value to the barren Scottish moorlands. For those game birds cannot exist away from the heather and the fir. But it may happen that, as the population of California increases and new railroads are built, these lonely valleys may become the site of prosperous spas, health and tourist resorts, like those that bring a rich annual revenue to the Highlands.

Musings In the Belfry.

MYSTERY IN THE NAME ON ONE OF SANTA BARBARA'S BELLS

By a Special Contributor.

WHO was Manuel Vargas?

Sometimes a name on an old moss-grown tombstone appeals to the imagination so strongly that fancies wreathe themselves about it like iron filings about the poles of a magnet.

The single name, "Clotilde," on a marble slab in a certain historic graveyard of Southern California, has awakened in thousands of breasts a pensive desire to unlock the doors of mystery that shut from us the past as well as the future, and learn something of the vanished personality about whom the marble tells so little.

Was she young? Undoubtedly. Was she beautiful? We are sure of it. There is a vision of abundant wavy hair and lustrous dark eyes that sparkled with mirth, or shone with tenderest compassion when sympathies were stirred. Had she a lover-husband—or was it her father who in the bitterness of soul at his untimely loss, erected this stone, and shutting all the precious secrets in his heart where he could be alone with his dead, shared with the world only the beloved name, Clotilde?

Had she a story as touchingly tender, possibly as tragic, as that of Genevra, the girl bride who, in a merry mood, left the side of her young husband at their wedding feast, and became the victim of the old chest with the spring lock?—leaving him to fling away his life in battle with the Turk, and her father to live on,

> "An old man wandering in quest of something, > Something he could not find—he knew not what."

But the name Manuel Vargas awakens vastly different thoughts. Nor was it cut by other hands in sepulchral marble among the tombs of the dead. In the glow of health he himself inscribed it on substance as enduring as granite and high above the melancholy splendor of the cemetery.

Again and again one climbs the winding stair in the Santa Barbara Mission tower, to get the wonderful view and with it the new inspiration for better things. Peopled as the tower is with haunting ghosts of the past and hallowed by the presence of the bells, what a place it is to ponder and to dream!

Here how easily the double scroll of time is unrolled back through the things that have been, and forward to the things that are to be, until, like John on the Isle of Patmos, one may get a vision of "the great city that has no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God lightens it and the Lamb is the light thereof."

Two of the bells—rather large ones and one of them cracked—bear the same inscriptions, in lettering that presents an interesting study. On the side is a fanciful cross. Cut into the metal, as though it were an afterthought, is the name "Lima," the syllables divided by the standard of the cross. Above the rim, all in rude capitals, is inscribed "Mission de Santa Barbara de la Nueba California," and encircling the upper part, "Manuel Vargas Mefecit Año 1818."

The very word "Vargas" has magic in it. We are instantly transported to another land, with time turned back hundreds of years. We see the vega of Granada, and Gibraltar. The powerful army of Ferdinand is laying waste the one, and old Muley Aben Hassan, the Moorish king, unable with his inferior force to oppose his enemy in open encounter, is off by way of the seacoast with 1500 horse and 6000 foot, on a foray into the country about Medina Sardonia. He fears but one person on his route, "a shrewd, hardy and vigilant soldier, alcayde of Gibraltar, who lay ensconced in his old warrior rock as in a citadel"—Pedro de Vargas.

Very cautiously and with great silence Muley Aben Hassan advances. His foraging parties scour the country and come driving great flocks and herds—enough to replace all that has been swept by Ferdinand from the vega of Granada.

He is congratulating himself on his success, and upon having eluded the vigilance of De Vargas. But the old King is mistaken. Alert and daring, Vargas is aware of the Moorish monarch's presence, but with a garrison barely sufficient to defend the place he dare not advance and leave his fortress unguarded. At the opportune moment a squadron of armed galleys stationed in the strait, arrive in the harbor of Gibraltar. Leaving them on guard, De Vargas sallies forth with seventy horse, hoping "by the aid of God and Santiago" to do good work.

He discovers the invaders, in an immense cloud of dust, descending one of the heights, the vanguard and rear guard half a league asunder with the caragada between, so they could ren[illegible]h other but little assistance. By strategy and valiant fighting he routs the Moors, making great slaughter and capturing a number of horses, though he himself is badly wounded.

According to the chronicle, Muley Aben Hassan displays a fine sense of humor upon learning that as a part of his revenues the alcayde of Gibraltar was entitled to one out of every drove of cattle that passed his boundaries. "Allah forbid," the Moor is said to have cried, "that so brave a cavalier should be defrauded of his dues;" and, selecting twelve of his finest cattle, sent them with a witty message to De Vargas. The latter was greatly pleased with the old monarch's stern and warlike pleasantry.

As King Ferdinand's incursion into the vega of Granada was counterbalanced by Muley Aben Hassan's inroad into his dominions, the only one who reaped real glory was Pedro de Vargas, alcayde of Gibraltar.

In such fashion do the bells in the tower link the old world with the new, the things that have been, with the things that are.

> "They are a voice of the Past,
> Of an age that is fading fast,
> Of a power austere and grand;
> When the flag of Spain unfurled
> Its folds o'er the western world
> And the Priest was lord of the land."

That Manuel Vargas, maker of the bells, was a son of Spain we very well know; and we can see that he was artistic, from the cross on the side, and the crown on the top by which the bells are suspended; and, in spite of the crudeness of the work, that he was careful and painstaking.

"Manuel Vargas Mefecit"—but how, Manuel? Did you first make a rude casting that you afterward hammered into shape, or did you hammer them out by hand from the very beginning? There is a difference of opinion about the casting, but of the final hammering there can be no doubt, for the edges have been beaten out thinner and the tool marks are plainly seen.

You have taught us a solemn truth, Manuel, that long after we have perished from the earth, what we did remains, even to the slip of the instrument that leaves a scar on our handiwork; but with all the imperfections in the workmanship of the bells, there is that about them that compels us to believe that you "studied to show yourself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed" to have each bell proclaim through the coming centuries, "Manuel Vargas made it."

But who were you, Manuel? Was the ancient soldier of Gibraltar your ancestor? and were you the retired army sergeant, Manuel Vargas, of California, mentioned by Gov. Fages in a letter to his successor as being faithful, and knowing how to write, and who some time afterward (1794) started the first secular school in California in the public granary at San José, receiving two and a half reals a month for each child?

THE BELFRY.

We recall, here in the old mission belfry, that there were no schools in California before Borica became Governor; that few of the soldiers could read and write; that many of the corporals could not be promoted because unable to read; and that at San Francisco not a man could write, and they sent to Santa Barbara for one who could. But Borica changed all that.

And as we look out over the city with its famed Anna S. C. Blake Manual Training School, we remember that Borica made a great effort to promote manual training, and insisted that sons of the soldiers and settlers be urged to learn weaving, tailoring and pottery. Result: six boys were taught weaving.

After Manuel Vargas opened his school at San José, Manuel Toca, apparently a ship boy from one of the transports, opened a school in Santa Barbara (about 1795.) Not only were the children required to attend, but corporals and sergeants were ordered to go over their studies and prepare for promotion, and it was not long until the Santa Barbara school boasted thirty-two pupils. In 1797 the comandante reports that the school teacher, then José Medina, and a cabin boy from the Princesa, in port on business connected with the English war excitement, had exchanged places to the advantage of the school.

Was it you, Manuel of the Bells, or another of the same name, who, having gone from San José to San Diego, where a bigger salary was offered, succeeded to the Santa Barbara school in December, 1798, and falling into evil ways, became the slave of aguadiente?

The severe letter of Gov. Borica to the comandante denouncing drunkenness as detestable vice, the forerunner of all other vices, and not to be tolerated in a school teacher—who would lose his position if he did not mend his ways—had the effect of an electrical shock and required no repetition.

That he should have fallen seems not like you, Manuel, but that he should so quickly rise again to the full stature of a man and in six months so excel himself that the Governor gave him unstinted praise for the progress of his pupils, is worthy the man who made the bells with such painstaking care.

We see the boys, with the bright black eyes of Spain, trooping into school and stopping before a cross and a picture of a saint to say a bendito aloud before saluting their teacher by kissing his hand; then tossing their hats in the corner, finding their places and "studying" at the tops of their voices. The course is not so burdensome as that of today—reading, 'riting, 'rithmetic and religion—not such a bad foundation for manhood, after all!

When the writing lesson comes they rule the paper with a piece of lead and the teacher provides a copy and a quill.

(The paper furnished was too valuable to be wasted, and after being written upon was used to make cartridges. The Governor required frequent specimens of penmanship, and some of the copy books submitted are preserved in the Santa Barbara mission library.)

Did Manuel use the ferrule without mercy, after the manner of his time? and did he employ, for yet severer punishment, the hempen scourge of many iron-pointed lashes, the offender with bared back (his shirt often his only garment) lying across a bench, with a handkerchief stuffed into his mouth, to receive the lashes?

Perhaps they used the same text-books in use in the one school in Santa Barbara in the early fifties (when there were but three primary schools in the State, Monterey, Santa Barbara and Los Angeles)—books printed in Mexico, of course, in the Spanish language. The description of the United States, according to an old resident, gave the startling statement that "the inhabitants are mostly pagans."

But we can forgive Manuel, if that is what he taught, since children in other regions learned from an old geography published in 1815 that "California is a wild and almost unknown land. Throughout the year it is covered with dense fogs as damp as unhealthful. In the interior are volcanoes and vast plains of shifting snow, which sometimes shoot columns to great height." This would seem near incredible were it not for the well-authenticated accounts of travelers.

And when, with the termination of Borica's rule, public interest in education declined and schools closed, did Manuel the teacher grow discouraged and return to Lima and there, in time, fashion the bells for the place where he had lost and again found himself—bells that became a living memorial to him, and are yet calling men to turn from their evil ways and walk uprightly?

> "Their varied tones in sweetness blend,
> And like a psalm of praise ascend,
> And each glad heart with rapture swells,
> Responsive to the Sabbath bells."

Or were Vargas the teacher, and Vargas the bellmaker, two separate identities—perhaps total strangers? Quien sabe.

It is evening. A friar appears in the inner court below and rings the angelus by means of the rope attached to the tongue of the bell and passing down over the roof.

"Will you tell me the times these bells are rung and what they ring for?" I ask a mission father; and Father Francis replies:

"Both these bells are always rung to announce the hour of divine service on Sundays and holy days. Besides this, one of them (the one in the front arch) is used to arouse the religious at 4:45 a.m.; to announce the hour of mass at 5:45 a.m. At 6 a.m., 12 m., and 6 p.m. it rings the angelus. Besides this, the same bell is rung fifteen minutes before meals, so that the community may prepare to assemble in the refectory."

A JAPANESE DINNER.

"I am afraid you won't like it," said the young Japanese baron. "You insisted, though, on a real Japanese dinner. So what was I to do?"

They seated themselves, the three girls and he, upon green silk cushions placed on the parquetry floor about a little table a foot high. A Japanese servant entered with the tea, and the Japanese dinner began.

For first course there was sweet biscuit and tea—delicate tea of the April harvest, "first chop" tea, formerly served with cherry spoons and a poem for each guest.

Next came ushio, a salty soup, with which the national wine, called sake, was served in flat saucers.

The third course was little raw fish, very salty, and steeped in a sour and appetizing sauce. The guests, contrary to their expectations, found the raw fish no more difficult to eat than raw oysters. With this course was a salad of white chrysanthemums.

The elaborate fourth course consisted of boiled chestnuts and a paste of sharks' fins, quail roasted and hashed with preserved cherries, and crayfish with [illegible] These viands were all arranged decoratively on a large dish.

The fifth course, also on one dish, was boiled bamboo shoots with soy, salted mushrooms, and a cold boiled salmon and cold boiled perch with pickled shoots of the ginger plant.

Next came a soup of seaweed, bitter, salty, decidedly good. Next an assortment of nuts boiled in soy. [illegible] salt relishes. Next delicious boiled rice, the grains as large as cherries. And, to conclude, tea again.

The young girls, as they rose from their low cushions and limped about in the effort to get the stiffness out of their legs, said that the Japanese dinner had been very good, really much better than they had counted on, but perhaps a little too salty for an occidental taste.

A STORY OF A GREAT TEMPTATION AND THE TRIUMPH OF VIRTUE.

From Manchester Chronicle.

THE dinner was ended. Neither of the diners had noticed the food or drink. Each had eaten with mechanical lips. They had spoken little during the meal, but now Ericson leaned across the table, and spoke in swift, earnest tones.

"Surely," he said, "you cannot want to remain. Your husband neglects you. He is wrapped up in his scientific work. At this very moment he is a hundred miles away, lecturing to a crowd of clodhoppers on the 'Origin of Species,' while his wife is left here in London to divert herself as best she can."

"Hush," she cried. "I will not hear a word against Richard. He has been very, very good to me."

"Oh, of course. I know that. Personally, I admire and like him, immensely; but it pains me to see you married to a man who has no time to give you the attention you deserve. Besides, he cannot love you as I do."

"Then—then you do love me," she murmured, leaning toward him, and looking at him with a piteous expression.

"You know I do. I'd forfeit my life in this world, and all chances of the next, for your sake."

"It sounds very sweet to hear you talk like that—and yet I often wonder how long such love as this would last. It is like a huge flame, Philip, which burns out very quickly."

He shook his head.

"Try me and see," he pleaded. "I swear that I will love and worship you as long as I live."

Then leaning toward her again, he took her hand and held it in a wild, passionate grip.

"Maisie," he muttered hoarsely, "come away with me tonight. This is our chance. Your husband will return tomorrow, and then it may be too late. Come away with me, my darling, and turn your back on this weary, empty life. We are both young, and the world lies before us. Our lives shall be a golden summer day. We shall drink the cup of joy to the very dregs, and find no bitterness even there."

He spoke with amazing sincerity, and it was obvious that he was deeply attached to her. This was not the first time that he had spoken the words of temptation, but never had they sounded so alluringly in the ears of Maisie Winthrop as they sounded tonight. For of a truth she was indeed lonely, and the coming of Ericson's guilty love had brought color and glow into her life.

"It—it would be so wicked," she faltered. "And, after all, Richard is goodness to me."

"Dearest, he has his work to console him. In a short time he will turn to it, and you will be nothing but a memory. He is a man for whom work holds the high place in the scheme of things, and love ranks far behind. Have no care concerning him."

Ericson perceived that his words were making a keen impression on Maisie, and he went on:

"Maisie, listen. At half-past ten tonight I will bring my motor round to this house. Join me then, and we will travel to Folkestone, and in the morning catch the boat for Boulogne. The servants will not suspect anything, for you have often gone for these evening drives in the car, and why not again tonight? Long before this time tomorrow night we shall be in France, and all will be well. Come. Put your dear hand in mine, my darling, and say 'yes.'"

She did not reply. Her breast heaved like the waves of the wind-tossed sea. Her breath came and went with sharp spurts. Her heart thumped furious blood.

"Say 'yes,'" he pleaded.

"I—I cannot decide at once. No, no. You—you must give me time, Philip."

He rose from the table, and stood looking at her with wild eyes.

"I will return at half-past ten with the motor," he said in a low voice. "You will let me have your answer then."

"Yes, yes, you shall have it then."

He came toward her and took her hand.

"Maisie," he said gently, "God knows that I love you better than anything on earth, and I swear to you that if you come away with me you shall never regret your action. Never. I will watch over you and protect you and love you."

"Yes, yes, I know," she murmured. "Now go, dear, go, and leave me alone for a little. I—I want to think."

"Yes, I'll go," he replied as he raised her hand to his lips, "but I shall come back, Maisie, I shall come back."

Then with a smile and an "au revoir" he went from the room, telling himself that he had won the day.

"She'll come to me, I know," he reflected. "She can't refuse; she can't refuse."

Left alone, Maisie sat down in the great chair by the fire and switched off the electric lights. She could always think better in the dark, and the light of the oak fire gave sufficient illumination.

Her brain was on fire. The words of Philip rang in her ears, sounding like music. How sweet—how rich life would be when the gloomy house was left behind and the new day began. It would be "Roses, roses, all the way" for herself and for him—and together they would pluck from existence the glorious flower which is the best prize that life has to offer.

But there was another side to the future—a darker side. It gloomed upon her vision now in gray colors. The deserted home—the wretched husband—the scarlet sin. All these things swam before her eyes.

O, God! what was she to do—which road was she to tread?

Thinking these thoughts, she fell into reverie, but of a sudden she was aroused by an amazing sight. For seated in the chair opposite was a woman, who bore an exact resemblance to herself. How this woman came to be there, she could not determine—she could only gaze at her with wondering eyes.

"Who are you, and why have you come here?" she asked.

The woman smiled gently.

"Who I am, I will not reveal to you now," she replied. "Some day perhaps you will know, but your second question shall be answered immediately. I have come here because I know the purpose that is in your brain, and I mean to save you if I can."

"You—you know my purpose?" echoed Maisie, with a cry of alarm.

"Yes, but you need have no fear. Your secret is perfectly safe with me, and it shall not be revealed. And now, listen: You are about to take a step which seems simple enough to you, but which will entail all sorts of undreamed consequences."

"What consequences?"

"I will tell you. In the first place, there is your husband. He loves you more than you think. You fill a place in his life which cannot be occupied by anything else—not even by his work. Leave him, and that work will suffer. He will lose courage—he will sink—he will miss the great prize your ambition has desired for him. In one word, his life will be ruined."

"How do you know?" murmured Maisie, wonderingly.

"How do I know? I read the truth in your own eyes. Deep down in your heart, have you not thought this very thing yourself?"

"Yes, yes; you are right. I have indeed."

The woman who was so strangely like herself smiled tenderly.

"Then, consider your own futre. The life of a woman who leaves her husband is not a happy life, even if the man she loves is good to her. She has to endure the scorn and criticism of the world—the world which is never slow to jeer and wound when one has gone off the narrow path which it calls respectability. Have you thought of that?"

Maisie shuddered.

"You—you put my thoughts into words," she said huskily.

"Yes, because I know you even better than you know yourself."

"There was a pause, at the end of which Maisie's living counterpart went on:

"The world would trample on you, as I have said, but that, after all, would be the least part of your punishment. The worst part would come from yourself."

"From myself?"

"Yes. You are not a bad woman. You are weak and foolish, perhaps, but there is no evil in you. Your conscience is ever wakeful, and that voice would reproach you every day, every hour, every minute. Along the weary road you would travel, and ever in your ears there would ring the haunting cry—the cry of despair: 'Too late. Too late.' The days would wear into weeks, the weeks into months, and the months into years, but that voice would never cease until the road touched its end, and you found forgetfulness in death——"

"Stop!" murmured Maisie chokingly. "Stop!"

"No. Hear me to the end. Tonight is the great night of your life. To every human being there comes once the supreme temptation—your temptation has come this night. Yield to it, and evermore despair will grip your soul, and remorse will cut into your heart. Youth will pass quickly, and with the passing of youth there will vanish what little joy may be given you. Then there will come the dull middle years—years unlighted by self-respect and honor, but made wretched by memory and regret. Then, age—and the last scene of all. And then, when the world is fading from your eyes, when life is narrowing itself down to a little speck of earth, and you lie waiting for the last call, your thoughts will wander to this night, and you will cry out in measureless despair. That is the picture of your future if you yield to your great temptation and go forth to meet Philip Ericson tonight——"

"And—if I resist, what then?" asked Maisie in a trembling tone.

"If you resist, all will be well with you. You will find that you will grow to love your husband more and more, while he will be devoted to you in return. In the fullness of time little faces will come into your life, which will gladden your heart, and this silent house will echo to the tread of tiny, joyous feet. And when you look upon those angel faces—his children and yours—you will send back your thoughts to this night, and thank God that you resisted after all."

A long, long pause. The face of this woman—so amazingly like her own—glowed with divine appeal. An angel pleading for a lost soul might have looked even as she looked then.

"You have decided?" she asked at length.

Maisie looked up quickly.

"Yes," she said in a whisper. "Yes, I have decided."

"Then my work is finished. Good-by."

A mist rose before Maisie's eyes. It lingered for a few seconds. When it lifted the woman had gone.

. . . .

Maisie rubbed her eyes, and looked round the room. Then she rose and switched on the light. The door was closed. She was certain that it had not been opened or shut while she had been seated in the chair. How, then, had the mysterious visitor—her living image—come, and how had she gone?

Was it all a dream? Hardly, for she had seemed so painfully awake—and yet—and yet—what was she to think?

The clock upon the mantelpiece struck 10. She started at the sound.

"He will return in half an hour," she muttered. "I'll write, yes, I'll write."

She sat down at the little table in the corner, and took up her pen. When the brief letter was finished she rang the bell.

"Parkins."

"Yes, my lady."

"Mr. Ericson is calling for me tonight to take me for a run on his motor. Please give him this note, and say that I was too tired to come, and have gone to bed."

"Very well, my lady."

The maid went out, and Maisie sought her room. She was tired and overcome, but in her eyes there was triumph—in her heart there was joy. For she had been tried, and she had been found true—she had been tempted, and she had resisted.

Half an hour later Philip Ericson, standing on the threshold of the house, read Maisie's note. It ran thus:

"Dear Philip: I promised to give you my answer tonight, and here it is. I have decided that I cannot go away with you, and it will be better that we do not meet again.

"Something has happened this night which has brought about this decision—something which I cannot understand, but which has shown me the truth. Guided by this new light, I ask you to see me no more, and to forgive me for the pain I have caused you. Good night and good-by. MAISIE."

He went from the house with a stifled groan, and terrible anguish in his heart, but amid all his resentment there lingered the old worship, and involuntarily words of reverence burst from his lips.

"By Jove," he murmured, "she is a noble woman, and I—have behaved like a cur."

. . . .

In the years that came after—happy years, lighted by the bright eyes of little children and crowned with her husband's love—Maisie told Richard all that had happened on that memorable night, and as she told him tears came to her throat.

"Was it all a dream, darling?" she asked softly. "Just a dream and nothing more?"

He shook his head.

"It was no dream," he replied, "but a reality. For I believe, Maisie, that the woman who spoke to you that night—the woman who bore so wondrous a likeness to yourself—I believe that she was your better self, and that she was sent to you by God!"

HISTORY OF THE UMBRELLA.

With the seasons upside down as they are at present, people are beginning to realize the absolute necessity of never stirring out of doors without an umbrella. If social history is to be trusted, the first Englishman to carry an umbrella was one Hanway, who lived at the end of the eighteenth century. At first he was regarded as an eccentric individual, but by degrees many discovered much method in his madness, and before he died, in 1786, the fashion he set was adopted by society in general. Of course, Hanway was not the originator of the umbrella. Among the Greeks and Romans some such article was very common, though oddly enough it was regarded as a purely feminine appanage, and one which men might never condescend to adopt. But all over the east the umbrella has for generations been well known as an insignia of power and royalty. Thus, on the sculptured remains of Egyptian temples one sees representations of kings going in procession with umbrellas carried over their heads. Even in India today some of the great maharajahs still call themselves "Lords of the Umbrella," and in an address presented by the King of Burmah to the Viceroy of India in 1855, the British representative is described as the "monarch who reigns over the great umbrella wearing chiefs of the east." One has only to walk through the streets of any Indian town today to see how important a social distinction the umbrella has become. For a native to go without an umbrella in the streets of Calcutta, for instance, is practically a mark of degradation.—[London Globe.

SLEEPING IN THE BACK YARD.

Probably more tents are in daily use in Topeka this summer than ever before. Many have learned that a good way to escape the discomfort of a hot sleeping-room at the close of a hot day is to sleep in a tent spread on the grass in the back yard.

In many instances a hammock swung on the front or back porch or between two trees in the yard is utilized by a single member of the family who believes in lots of fresh air and who is able to sleep in comfort, after accustoming himself to the change from a bed to a hammock, while the other members of the family toss wakefully indoors.

Many who do not have hammocks or tents sleep on "shakedowns" on their front or back porches, retiring after it gets dark and making a dash for the privacy of indoors when the sun rises in the morning and wakes them. A tour of the streets of the city about sun-up will reveal many instances of this practice. It is not a fashionable habit, but there is a great deal of genuine comfort in it.

Some of the boys in Topeka have rudely built houses in the branches of trees in which they sleep during warm weather.

No less than three tents have been pitched at the Country Club. At the Topeka Club a number of the members take advantage of a flat roof on the south side of the porch and place their cots here on warm nights behind a canvas curtain that is intended to shut out the view of the common herd.—[Topeka Daily Capital.

The Drummer's Revenge.

How He Got Even With Old Judge Bean of Langtry.

By a Special Contributor.

THE landscape was dull and uninteresting, and I preferred sitting in the comfortable buffet car of the palatial Sunset Limited and reading the latest magazine, to gazing out at the never-ending vista of gray plain and low hills that unrolled as we sped on our way to Los Angeles.

The speed of the train began to slacken, although there was nothing in sight to indicate a town as I looked out of the window.

We were running across Western Texas, and had stopped a dozen times within two hours at little shanties, dignified by the name of stations, apparently to give the engine a rest, as no one got on or off, so I turned back to my magazine with a disgusted yawn.

The train came grating to a stop, and I glanced uninterestedly out of the window.

There was really a little town stretching up the hill, away from the track, half a dozen houses, a general store and up on the hillside, about a block from the train, a strange edifice made out of adobies and ornamented by an enormous sign, reading:

"Justice Bean, Only Law West of the Pecos."

A number of tourists got off and made their way up the hill to the low building under the sign, and I wondered what the attraction could be.

In a few minutes the engine bell clanged its warning, and the crowd came swarming out of the mysterious building, some of the male passengers wiping their lips with the backs of their hands, so I judged that liquid refreshment was served there, but this would not explain the ladies' going into a Texas saloon, if saloon it was.

A jolly drummer, on his regular trip to Los Angeles, came into the car as the train rolled out of the little town, and took his seat beside me. We had already scraped acquaintance.

"Did you hear the latest break of the old judge?" he inquired, with a grin.

"What old judge?" I responded.

He looked at me rather impatiently.

"Why, old Judge Bean, back there at Langtry, of course. Do you mean to say that you never heard of Judge Bean? Why, he's one of the attractions of the line from New Orleans to Los Angeles."

"Well, tell me about him."

"Why, they found a dead Greaser in a little draw inside the 'city' limits of Langtry. The Greaser had a big .45 on his hip and twenty dollars in his pockets, so the old judge fined the Greaser the twenty for packing a gun, confiscated the gun, and had the body buried at the expense of the county. If there's any money in sight the judge is sure there with bells.

"But," he continued, "do you mean to say that you've never heard about the judge's pet bear, 'Ben?'"

I disclaimed all knowledge of the judge's family.

My friend, the drummer, called the waiter and ordered something in tall glasses to lubricate his story-telling apparatus, then, comfortably settling back in the luxurious leather chair, began his yarn.

"The old judge is a regular autocrat in this part of the country; what he says goes, and the man that can get ahead of him has to get up pretty darn early in the morning, but there's one man of my acquaintance that certainly got square with the judge, good and plenty.

"There's a man by the name of Williams, a drummer by the way, who used to work for the Simmons Hardware Company of St. Louis. He was a cracker-jack good salesman, and he knew it, and like all top-notcher drummers he got a little swelled up and bossy in his manner without meaning to be.

"He got a better job with a big ammunition company, and quit the Simmons people. He had been used to covering Eastern States, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and such, but the ammunition company transferred him to New Orleans and gave him a special job, covering the whole territory from New Orleans to Los Angeles, and he had a hard time getting ride of his bumptious way of talking and ordering people around. This didn't go with the people in his new territory.

"The first time he struck Langtry was one of those mild summer days of Western Texas when the thermometer registers about a hundred and ten in the shade, and Williams, not being used to it, was sweating like a horse. The train pulled into Langtry, and Williams makes a dash for Justice Bean's dobe, where he could see a beer sign outside the door.

"You know, the place is fitted up for a bar on one side of the room and the court is on the other, all in the same room, and the old judge is both justice and barkeep.

"The old judge was trying a couple of cow punchers, who had been too numerous with their guns the night before, and wasn't feeling any too well disposed, as the cowmen were giving him quite a little back talk, being new men in that country, and the judge was getting mad.

"In butts Williams, full of contempt for the local institutions; doesn't take off his hat or make any sign that he recognizes the fact that court was in progress, but lines up at the empty bar, dryer'n the Staked Plains.

"There wasn't any barkeeper, of course, as the Judge was busy at the other bar, trying the cow punchers.

"Williams stands there for about ten seconds, getting more thirsty every minute as he reads the beer signs above his head; then he pulls out a $20 gold piece, raps it down on the bar, and says in a loud voice:

"'Gimme a glass of beer. I'm in a hurry.'

"The old Judge looks at him a minute, then he says:

"'The court is adjourned for one minute,' walks over behind the liquid bar, draws a glass of beer, sets it before the thirsty Williams, and says to Williams:

"'One glass of beer, 10 cents,' and throws the $20 gold piece in the till, then walks back and takes his seat behind the bar of justice.

"Williams drinks up his beer, don't see any change for his twenty lying around, and says:

"'Where's my change? I'm in a hurry.'

"'Young man,' says the old Judge, 'you are hereby fined $19.90 for contempt of court. I'll break you fellows of coming into this courtroom and interrupting the course of justice if I have to fine every man of you. If you don't like this decision you can appeal.'

"Well, there was nothing for Williams to do but run for his train, already starting to pull out, and he swung on the back sleeper, boiling over with rage and swearing revenge on the d—— old robber, as he called the Judge, if it took all the rest of his life.

"About three months later his chance came, and he took advantage of it in great style.

"Five years before the appearance of Williams on the scene, a party of hunters down in the Pecos bottoms caught a cub black bear and gave it to the Judge. The Judge raised the little fellow by hand, as he was hardly able to eat, he was so young when he first arrived at Langtry, and the older he got the smarter he became, and he was the apple of the old man's eye.

"Ben, as the old man called him, was as big as a small cow and as fat as a hog when Williams first saw him, and he was known up and down the Southern Pacific for a hundred miles.

"Williams sized the bear up as being a good way to get at the old Judge, but didn't quite know how to get at the business.

"The bear used to follow the old man around town like a tame dog, and the Judge wouldn't have sold him for a thousand dollars.

"One day, as luck would have it, Williams ran across the Judge in a bar down in San Antonio, where the Judge went once a year for his annual blow-out and good time. The Judge didn't recognize Williams, of course, but Williams knew the old Judge well enough, and a diabolical plan for revenge flashed into his mind.

"He walked up to the Judge and stuck out his hand as though he and the Judge had been friends all their lives, and the Judge, used to meeting all sorts of people in a year, shook hands with Williams and invited him to take a snifter. They did.

"'Judge, that's too bad about old Ben. How did it happen?' said Williams, with feeling in his voice.

"'How did what happen?' said the Judge, putting down his glass of San Antonio Hellonearth whisky and staring at Williams.

"'How did old Ben die?' said Williams, with a straight face.

"'Ben ain't dead,' snapped the Judge. 'I left him well and fatter'n a hog not a week ago.'

"'Well, I came through there two days ago, and Ben was lying stretched out on the ground stiffer than a door nail, and a crowd around him,' said Williams, not exactly lying, but shaving the truth pretty close. The bear was lying on the ground with a crowd around him, but this was a regular performance when a train came in.

"The old Judge bit like a fish, and carried on something scandalous about what he was going to do to the man who killed poor old Ben or to the double-dashed lizard-headed foreman who didn't take the proper care of the bear while he, the Judge, was gone.

"He stormed around for fifteen minutes, and he felt pretty sore about losing the old bear, he'd had him so long.

"'Judge,' said Williams, with much feeling in his voice, 'those fellows will most likely bury Ben before you can get back; why don't you wire them to take the hide off of the body and send it down here? You can have it stuffed and always have something to remind you of the bear.'

"Here was where Williams was getting in his revenge.

"'By thunder! stranger, your head's level,' said the bereaved, as he supposed, Judge; 'let's have another drink to the memory of Ben,' and they had another round.

"Two hours later the Judge's mystified foreman back in Langtry (he was running a goat ranch in those days, by the way,) got a yellow envelope, and he tore it open as though he was afraid it would bite him. Inside was a telegram which read:

"'Take hide off Ben and ship it to me right away.'

"The wire was dated San Antonio. The dumbfounded foreman hurried down to the station, but the station agent, who was also operator, said the wire had come straight, and he had the San Antonio operator repeat it.

"'The old man has either got a lovely skate on or else he's been feeding on loco weed,' says the foreman to himself; 'but what he says goes.'

"So the foreman went inside and got his 30-30 and regretfully shot old Ben through the head. Then he and a Mexican took the skin off the still warm body and shipped it down to the Judge at San Antonio.

"A week later the old Judge swung off a train one afternoon and hurried up to the baggage car, where he superintended the job of unloading old Ben, stuffed and looking like life.

"The foreman hurried up to meet him, and they both started to ask questions at once.

"'Who——?' began the Judge.

"'What——?' started the foreman; but the Judge had the floor and snarled out:

"'Who killed Ben?'

"'Why, I did,' said the dumbfounded foreman.

"'What!' howled the Judge, and he reached back under his coat tails for his cannon.

"'Hold on!' yelled the scared foreman. 'Here's your wire tellin' me to send down his skin. Did you want me to skin him alive?'

"'Alive!' roared the Judge. 'Why, that fellow told me——'

"Then they got together with explanations, and the way the Judge tore up gravel around Langtry for a while was worth the price of admission when he found that the bear was alive and healthy until he sent his wire.

"It suddenly came to the Judge who the fellow was that told him about Ben being dead, and the memory of the $20 gold piece episode came back to his mind.

"They say the old Judge nearly burst a blood vessel when the trick came to him in its details.

"He swears if Williams ever shows up in his jurisdiction that he will have him staked out in a red ant's nest for a week, but Williams is too wise."

EDWARD C. CROSSMAN.

THE HILLS OF CALIFORNIA.

Oh, the hills of California! fair as fondest dreams they rise,
Torrents dashing in the valleys, crystal snow peaks in the skies;
Myriad ranges, sunset-purpled, burnished to a high degree,
Breaking into fertile lowlands bordered by the violet sea.

Hills we call them, but we know them for true Alps and Pyrenees,
Grand as any mighty mountains that ring round the seven seas;
Never shall the High Sierras to another yield the crown,
Nor to any great Gibraltar make obeisance and bow down.

'Twas the hills of California which allured in forty-nine
The men of all the nations in a continent-long line;
And today they still are coming from the crowded lands afar,
Like a storm-tossed fleet of vessels making for the harbor bar.

Once the hills of California glowed with fierce volcanic fires,
Where today the slopes are darkened by the fir's cathedral spires;
And Mount Shasta, at each sunset, breaks into a flame and shines
Like a monumental lighthouse blazing o'er a sea of pines.

In the hills of California there's a wondrous jeweled cup
That its lovers call Lake Tahoe, and the mountains lift it up
Through the virgin snowy places to the bright cerulean skies,
Till the gods lean down in rapture and would fain leave paradise.

'Mid the hills of California you will find El Capitan,
Flanked by foaming falls downleaping, where the Merced River's span
Wanders o'er the happy valley, glassing road and rock and tree,
In this new and better Eden which is called Yosemite.

In the hills of California let me live forevermore,
In a cabin in the forest with the girl whom I adore,

TOKIO'S SLUMS.

Tokio has slums whose poverty reaches the last depth of human degradation. Below the cellars of Paris, the alleys of London, and the crowded slums of the New York East Side, the Japanese capital reveals a lower gulf. It is a region that no ray lights. Your mouldy man of Paris and your "hooligan" of London do have at times fierce joys and moments of acid pleasure, but the microscopic intensity of the distress in the Shitaya quarter of Tokio bars out all hope. Tokio has far too many poor people, and their disposition is a pressing problem. Thousands are shipped to Korea and Formosa, but the pressure steadily increases, owing to the constant migration of ambitious Japanese from the provinces to the capital city.

Japan carefully avoids all public reference to these great sores on its body politic. Their existence is hidden from the foreign visitor. Rarely does a tourist see the slums, and specialists studying the city for precise information are sedulously kept out of the poorest quarters. Japan is so fully press-agented that the existence of these miserable purlieus is not even suspected by the average student of conditions. It is a journalistic rule in Japan not to say anything that betrays weakness in the life of the people, and it is a rule generally observed. But there are writers in Japan who think that in adopting the civilization of the Occident the republican form of government should also have been imported, and these give the ministry trouble at times by telling plain, unpalatable truths. The "Kokumin" newspaper detailed a representative to live the life of the lowest and poorest in Tokio, and his articles dealing with life in the Shitaya district created an immense sensation. When translated into English in pamphlet form the government promptly bought up the entire edition and destroyed the plates.—[Walter J. Kingsley, in The World's Work.

The contests for dirigible balloons, aeroplanes and gasoline flying machines are still open. Each day more entrants are being listed in each class.

The Canadian Rockies.

THE "ALPS OF AMERICA" SEEN FROM A CAR WINDOW.

By a Special Contributor.

THE American Alps are situated along the eastern edge of British Columbia, beginning at the northern boundary of the United States and extending away into the uninhabited and almost unexplored Northwest Territories of Canada. They lie as if a thousand peaks had been gathered in the hand of Jove and sown with one long sweep of his arm, falling singly and in groups, crag on crag, covered with a sheet of snow as if, appalled at the upheaval, he had tried to hide a part of their grandeur from man.

The long, dreary days we rolled over the prairie after leaving the wooded shores of the Great Lakes—clackety-clack, clickety-click, a never-ending roar, the scene a never-varying prairie, roll on roll with alkali lakes between.

On the morning of the third day a bank of jagged cumulus clouds appeared in the west, high above the horizon. We speculated for a time on the chances of a storm. The porter came along and, hearing us, said: "Lawzee! How do you'all tenderfeet s'pect to get along out yere? Them ain't no clouds, them's the Rockies."

Their base was hid in a blue haze, but the crest of the peaks could be seen extending in an unbroken line north and south, from horizon to horizon. They seemed to be hovering right over us, yet it took two hours at fifty miles an hour to bring us under the shadow of the first one. It was just a bunch of bare granite, called Pigeon Peak, bulging up 6000 feet above the track.

Rounding its base close to the Bow River, which the road had been following for sixty miles, we came upon a scene, the like of which Switzerland never held. On one side stood Wind Mountain and the Three Sisters, pile on pile of gorgeously-colored stone capped with snow, while on the other jagged cliffs extended along the sky line high above us like a multitude of cornices cut in fantastic curves. There before us was more rock than man has used in all his building since the laying of Babel's corner stone.

Winding round and round we viewed these peaks from every side. Some were sections of earth, miles and miles in breadth and thousands of feet in thickness, pushed straight up from the earth with their strata still level. Others lay on one side as if they had been blown bodily into the air. Cliffs a mile high surrounded us on every side.

Then we left the Bow and started up the Cascade River toward the Cascade Mountain.

This special "Rocky" is composed of one piece, a sort of rounded cone with a peak on top, six miles by ten at the base, and a mile and a half high. The summit is white with snow, and down its face from point to point plunges a wild cascade of water, melted from a glacier extending a short distance below the snow line, hence its name.

Back to the Bow River we went and past Lake Minewanka with the Vermilion range to northward, standing high above the valley. Its coloring, together with the peculiar lines, the snow and the clouds which hover over it, form a natural oil painting about thirty miles long, the lake in the foreground making it absolutely perfect.

The valley is wide here, and around us stood Ingalsmaldie, Pechee, Boujeau, The Pilot, and a thousand lesser peaks, combining to make a scene which some artists have been presumptuous enough to try to paint and others to describe. It cannot be described; let it suffice to describe one's feelings. You are filled with an overwhelming awe, your neck hurts from looking upward, yon cliff a mile high and three miles long makes you tremble, you experience the sensation of falling and gasp with fear. Truly, Jove was kind when he covered a part of his handiwork with snow.

Mount Massive shows up back of the Vermilion Lakes like another oil painting, even more perfect than the first. Then rounding The Pilot we came upon the Hole in the Wall Mountain and a moment later the Castle. The latter is as regular as if laid off by an architect. Six great turrets form the side, while the roof is formed by thousands of spires and minarets. Together with its foundation it is two miles high, six miles through, and eight miles long. Its bastions and battlements are complete. A natural drawbridge, porticullis and gateway can be plainly seen against its dark brown walls. The back of the castle is a great glacier extending away to the north, which could not be seen until it was far in the rear.

Here we left the Bow River and, looking through the gap to the northwest, saw Mount Daly and a dozen others, beyond which are other glaciers. One of these ice fields is the source of three great continental rivers, the Mackenzie flowing to the Arctic Ocean, the Saskatchewan to the Atlantic, and the Columbia to the Pacific.

Here are Mount Forbes, Bush, Bryce, and Athabasca the highest peaks yet known in the Rockies. We were on the roof of the North American continent.

Passing the great divide, we came upon Mounts Stephen, Hector and Field, and the Cathedral Peak. Each of which is a great chunk of granite to be measured in miles and not in feet. Winding around above the gorge of the Kicking Horse River we worked our way ever upward till the Columbia River was reached.

The cañon of the Kicking Horse is never to be forgotten. Its bronze sides rise straight up for thousands of feet into lines of nameless peaks, any one of which presents all the difficulties ascribed to the most impregnable Alp across the sea. Up this chasm we went, swinging from side to side, plunging in and out of tunnels, the cliffs on either side cutting off all but a narrow ribbon of sky.

The gathering gloom of the evening found us leaving the Valley of the Columbia, and away ahead stood Sir Donald, the chief among them all, the greatest of the American Alps. Around its base runs the gorge of the Illecillewaet River, which we followed. It stood so high that the summit could not be seen except by putting one's head and shoulders outside the car window, even though its base was a mile away. Out of its eternal fields of snow come seven glaciers on one side, while on the other is the Great Glacier, a vast plateau of gleaming ice.

Darkness settled down and the tired eyes could see no more. Sitting there in the rocking Pullman one marveled at the foolishness of those who go across the sea to look upon inferior hills.

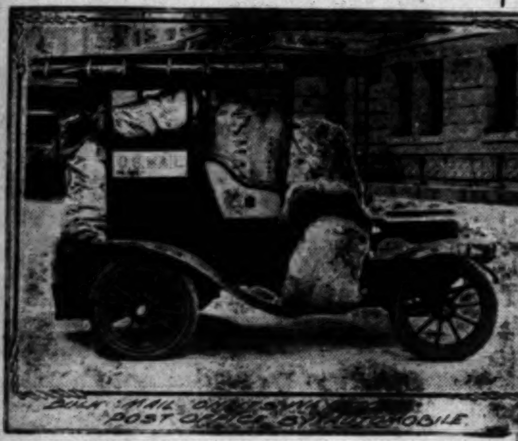
RAPID METHODS ON TRIAL BY POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT.

By a Special Contributor.

ELECTRICITY and gasoline as carriers of the mails are under trial by the government, and are doing such satisfactory work that their extensive development in the service seems already practically assured.

During the last few months, in Detroit and Milwaukee, the Postoffice Department has been making experiments with motor vehicles, for the collection and transportation of mail in bulk. The wagons used for the purpose, which are propelled by gasoline, are of two types, one of them being designed for transport merely, while the other is fitted up inside like a postal car on a small scale, with compartments and suspended mail sacks suitable for the sorting of letters.

These "postmobiles," as they are called, are intended chiefly for carrying mail in considerable quantities between the main city postoffice and branch postoffices. Incidentally they serve in the collection of bulky mail matter from department stores and other places where it is liable to accumulate rapidly. As far as practicable, the vehicles provided with sorting facilities are devoted to the transportation of first-class matter, in order that it may be made ready for the trains while on its way to the central postoffice.



BULK MAIL [illegible] POST OFFICE BY AUTOMOBILE

SORTING MAIL IN AN AUTOMOBILE POSTAL CARRIAGE

ELECTRIC MOTOR IN CHICAGO TUNNEL

MOTOR CYCLES USED IN LOS ANGELES FOR COLLECTING MAIL

The plan described having proved highly successful, the Postoffice Department intends to introduce it before long in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other large cities. Meanwhile experiments are being made with motorcycles in Los Angeles, where conditions are thought especially favorable for their service. They are employed for ordinary box collection, each of the little vehicles being provided with a large collecting sack suspended above and between the two front wheels.

During three months of trial, two such motorcycles, each driven by one man, have done the work of three men and three one-horse teams. The saving of time and expense by this method is so considerable, indeed, that the postal authorities are going to introduce the service in a number of other cities. It is found that by this means the mails are perceptibly accelerated, reaching the postoffice more quickly, and in many instances catching trains which otherwise they would have missed.

Even more interesting in its way is the electric tunnel service for the transportation of mails which is now on trial in Chicago. All of the streets of the main business section of that city, running both north and south and east and west, are underlaid by a net work of tunnels. Originally constructed as conduits for telegraph and telephone wires, they were afterward enlarged sufficiently to accommodate tracks, over which run small motors drawing little cars for freight and express traffic. The tunnels are eight feet high and ten feet wide; they are forty feet underground, and cross the Chicago River at eight different points.

Not long ago it occurred to the Postoffice Department that the facilities thus made available might be utilized for carrying the mails. Accordingly, arrangements have been made by which a tunnel service is established between the main postoffice and the six principal railroad stations, connecting the latter with each other and with the postoffice.

On its arrival at a railway station, the mail matter is dropped through chutes into the tunnel, where it is taken aboard by the little cars and transported to the postoffice. At the postoffice it is hoisted to the floor level above by means of buckets on endless chains. In the same way, the outgoing letters and packages at the postoffice are dropped into the tunnel through chutes, and conveyed to the railroad stations, where they are hoisted by chains of buckets to the track level and put aboard the trains. The cars travel through the tunnel at the rate of ten or twelve miles an hour; and, when the mail is first-class, the man who drives the motor engine is accompanied by a postal agent.

Electricity plays an important part in the new system of mail transportation by pneumatic tube, which is under experimental trial in five cities. Boston has nearly eight miles of such tubing now in operation; Chicago ten miles, Philadelphia four miles, St. Louis two miles, and New York seven miles. Before long, when contracts already undertaken are completed, New York will have about twenty-five miles of pneumatic tubes, practically covering the whole of Manhattan Island in one great circuit, running from the Battery all around Central Park, and up as far as One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street.

The service in question is already completed from the Produce Exchange, near the foot of the island, to the Grand Central depot at Forty-fourth street, with a branch extending from the general postoffice to the main postoffice in Brooklyn. One may judge of the rapidity of this method of transportation from the fact that only nine minutes are required for one of the sheet-steel carriers to travel from the general postoffice to Forty-fourth street—just about the time required for a subway express train to cover the same distance.

The motive power employed is air at a pressure of less than ten pounds to the square inch, furnished by electrically-driven air compressors. For the tubes, cast-iron pipes, similar to high-grade water pipes, but bored carefully true and smooth, are used, being laid in a double line to accommodate traffic in opposite directions. The carriers are cylindrical in shape, twenty-three inches long, with an interior diameter of eight inches, and provided near the ends with metal collars, lubricated with vaseline, of a size to give an easy running fit. Propelled by a current of air that is kept constantly flowing through the tubes, the metal messengers, each of which contains from 400 to 600 letters, travel at a rate of about thirty miles an hour.

Automatic electrical devices turn the carries aside at the sub-postoffice way stations which they are intended to reach. This is accomplished in very simple fashion, the diameter of a small disk on the end of the cylinder determining whether or not it shall be switched out of its course into a side tube. If the disk is wide enough to span the space between two needles in the bottom of the receiving tube, an electric connection is established; a large wheel with a wide flange revolves forty-five degrees, and the carrier is discharged into the station receiver.

So satisfactory has the pneumatic service proved that the Postmaster-General has authorized its extension during the present year to Brooklyn, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Kansas City, Pittsburgh and San Francisco. It is very expensive, and its adoption in small centers of population would not be remunerative at all; but in large cities it pays well by reason of the acceleration which it gives to the collection and delivery of letters. It is estimated that, when the system has been completed on Manhattan Island, 100,000 outgoing letters daily will be advanced by one dispatch—that is to say, will catch an earlier train—and that 150,000 arriving letters daily will be advanced one delivery.

It is by no means impossible that in the future electricity may play a part in the operation of the rural free delivery system, though as yet nothing of the kind is definitely contemplated. A number of inventors have offered to the Postoffice Department contrivances for delivering and collecting mail matter on rural routes, the most striking of these being an electric carrier somewhat on the pattern of the cash and change conveyor used in department stores. The device, it is claimed, will deposit Smith's letters at Crossroads Corners, will collect Brown's mail from his roadside box, automatically operating in this manner over many miles of territory, and incidentally will communicate a warning to the postoffice in case the apparatus is tampered with. Unfortunately, however, the postal authorities are not convinced that this or any other of the inventions presented for their consideration would prove successful in practice, and so it is likely that for some time to come the farmers will be obliged to depend upon the ordinary combination of a man and a wagon for maintaining epistolary communication with the outside world.

PASSING OF THE MAIL STAGE.

On August 10 the twice-a-day mail that has been carried by stage between Palmyra, N. Y., and the village of Marion, eight miles distant, was discontinued. The mail will now go by the Newark and Marion Railroad.

With the passing of this mail service between Palmyra and Marion about the last of the old mail stages in New York State is done away with.

For about seventy years the stage has plied between Palmyra and Marion, and the older inhabitants can remember when it used to keep right on to the lake, reaching Pultneyville about noon. For a good many years this stage was driven by Thomas G. Quaife, who is now the owner of the Quaife livery in this village. He was only a young man then, but he drove four horses and made the trip from Palmyra to Pultneyville, on Lake Ontario, a distance of eighteen miles, every day. After the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad was built the route from Marion to the lake was discontinued.

After Marion became quite a little business center the stage was forced to make two round trips every day, and consequently Marion people received a mail twice every day, and that service was still in vogue up to August 10. The Marion stage has been owned by a dozen or more individuals during the last twenty-five years. People along the Marion road will greatly miss the stage, for it was a handy way for them to get back and forth to Palmyra, and many of the younger people took advantage of it to get to and from the celebrated Palmyra Union School.—[Rochester Union and Advertiser.

MANUFACTURING PRECIOUS STONES.

After describing how diamonds may be made by the employment of tremendous pressure, Henry Smith Williams, in an article on modern chemistry in the October Everybody's, says:

"It would be futile to predict how soon diamonds of marketable size may be produced; but in the meantime the similar problem of manufacturing relatively large gems of other kinds—rubies, sapphires, emeralds, the oriental amethyst, and the oriental topaz—has yielded its full secret to science.

"Just as the brilliant diamond is only a particular state of so familiar and inexpensive a substance as carbon, so these sister gems—some of them even exceeding the diamond in value, weight for weight—are merely crystalline forms of the clayey earth alumina—a compound of aluminum and oxygen. If no coloring matter is present, this crystal is called a white sapphire. Usually, however, a trace of some chromium or cobalt salt is found, and then the gem becomes a true sapphire, a ruby, an amethyst, an emerald, or a topaz, according to color.

"Gems of the true sapphire order are manufactured by bringing alumina to a liquid state, through the agency of extreme heat; the gems crystallize from the solution on cooling. Unfortunately the gem thus formed breaks into fragments when touched; but the fragments are still of marketable size; and true rubies and emeralds thus manufactured have now entered the field of commerce."

FLAPJACKS IN CUBA.

Flapjacks must be a sort of natural boy food the world over, for a New York City organization has found itself compelled to provide this American dish at its boys camp at Lake Membosha, New York, and also at another boys' camp, the first of its kind in Cuba, which it helps the Asociacion de Jovenes Cristianos, of Havana, to run for Cuban youngsters, at Mariel Bay. And apparently the flapjack diet has the same effect on the Cubans as on the New York boys. In some mysterious way, flapjacks, whether combined with frijoles and tortillas in Cuba, or with "beef and" or steak in America, vastly increase the boy's capacity for fun, and his willingness to work for that fun and make himself useful. In America, at the boys' camps, the potency of flapjacks to make a fellow willing to help with the dishes has long been known. And now, in Cuba, the same dish has worked miracles, for it has led a number of Cuban boys of good family to think it is a part of the fun to help cook, make their cots, gather firewood and wash their camp clothing. It is a thing unhear of in Cuba, and was entirely unbelievable until it was actually seen. And for days it was the subject of much conversation and countless expressive shrugs of unbelief at the clubs on the Prado.—[New York Tribune.

The Mystery.

REMARKABLE ADVENTURES OF THE CRUISER WOLVERINE.

By STEWART EDWARD WHITE and SAMUEL HOPKINS ADAMS.

PART II—CHAPTER XVIII—Continued.)
THE CATASTROPHE.

MY OWN ideas were somewhat confused. The fire had practically inveloped the ship. I thought to feel it; and yet my skin was cool to the touch. The ship's outlines became blurred. A dizziness overtook me; and then all at once a great desire seized and shook my very soul. I cannot tell you the vehemence of this desire. It was a madness; nothing could stand in the way of its gratification.

Whatever happened, I must have water. It was not thirst, nor yet a purpose to allay the very real physical burning of which I was now dimly conscious; but a craving for the liquid itself as something apart from and unconnected with anything else. Without hesitation, and as though it were the most natural thing in the world, I vaulted the rail to cast myself into the ocean. I dimly remember a last flying impression of a furnace of light, then a great shock thudded through me, and I lost consciousness.

PART III—CHAPTER I.
IN THE WARDROOM.

Over the wardroom of the Wolverine had fallen a silence. It held after Slade had finished. Capt. Parkinson, stiff and erect in his chair, staring fixedly at a spot two feet above the reporter's head, seemed to weigh, as a judge weighs, the facts so picturesquely set forth.

Dr. Trendon, his sturdy frame half in shadow, had slouched far down into himself. Only the regard of his keen eyes fixed upon Slade's face, unwaveringly and a bit anxiously, showed that he was thinking of the narrator as well as of the narrative. The others had fallen completely under the spell of the tale. They sat, as children in a theater, absorbed, forgetful of the world around them, wrapped in a more vivid element. At the close they stirred and blinked, half dazed by the abrupt fall of the curtain.

Slade had told his story with fire, with something of passion, even. Now he felt the sharp reflex. He muttered uncertainly beneath his breath and glanced from one to another of the circled faces.

"That's all," he said unsteadily.

There passed through the group a stir and a murmur. Some one broke into sharp coughing. Chairs, shoved back, grated on the floor.

"Well, of all the extraordinary——" began a voice, ruminatingly, and broke short off, as if abashed at its own infraction of the silence.

"That's all," repeated Slade, a note of insistence in his voice. "Why don't you say something? Confound you, why don't you say something?" His speech rose husky and cracked. "Don't you believe it?"

"Hold on," said the surgeon quietly. "No need to get excited."

"Oh, well," muttered the reporter, with a sudden lapse; "possibly you think I'm romancing. It doesn't matter. I don't suppose I'd believe it myself, in your place."

"But we're heading for the island," suggested Forsythe.

"That's so," cried Slade. "Well, that's all right. Believe or disbelieve as much as you like. Only get Percy Darrow off that island. Then we'll have his version. There are a few things I want to find out about myself."

"There are several that promise to be fairly interesting," said Forsythe, under his breath.

Slade turned to the captain. "Have you any questions to put to me, sir?" he asked formally.

"Just one moment," interrupted Trendon. "Boy, a pony of brandy for Mr. Slade."

The reporter drank the liquor and again turned to Capt. Parkinson.

"Only about our men," said the commanding officer, after a little thought.

Slade shook his head.

"I'm sorry I can't help you there, sir."

"Dr. Trendon said that you knew nothing about Edwards."

"Edwards?" repeated Slade inquiringly. His mind still absorbed in the events which he had been relating, groped backward.

Trendon came to his aid. "Barnett asked you about him, you remember. It was when you recovered consciousness. Our ensign. Took over charge of the Laughing Lass."

"Oh, of course. I was a little dazed, I fancy."

"We put Mr. Edwards aboard when we first picked up the deserted schooner," explained the captain.

"Pardon me," said the other. "My head doesn't seem to work quite right yet. Just a moment, please." He sat silent, with closed eyes. "You say you picked up the Laughing Lass. When?" he asked presently.

"Four—five—six days ago, the first time."

"Then you put out the fire?"

The circle closed in on Slade, with an unconscious hitching forward of chairs. He had fixed his eyes on the captain. His mouth worked. Obviously he was under a tensity of endeavor in keeping his faculties set to the problem. The surgeon watched him, frowning.

"There was no fire," said the captain.

Slade leaped in his chair. "No fire! But I saw her, I tell you. When I went overboard she was one living flame!"

"You landed in the small boat. Knocked you senseless," said Trendon. "Concussion of the brain. Idea of flame might have been a retroactive hallucination."

"Retroactive rot!" cried the other. "I beg your pardon, Dr. Trendon. But if you'd seen her as I saw her—Barnett!"

He turned in appeal to his old acquaintance.

"There was no fire, Slade," replied the executive officer gently. "No sign of fire that we could find, except that the starboard rail was blistered.

"Oh, that was from the volcano," said Slade. "That was nothing."

"It was all there was," returned Barnett.

"Just let me run this thing over," said the free lance slowly. "You found the schooner. She wasn't afire. She didn't even seem to have been afire. You put a crew aboard under your ensign, Edwards. Storm separated you from her. You picked her up again deserted. Is that right?"

"Day before yesterday morning."

"Then," cried the other excitedly, "the fire was smouldering all the time. It broke out and you men took to the water."

"Impossible," said Barnett.

"Fiddlesticks!" said the more downright surgeon.

"I hardly think Mr. Edwards would be driven overboard by a fire which did not even scorch his ship," suggested the captain mildly.

"It drove our lot overboard," insisted Slade. "Do you think we were a pack of cowards? I tell you, when that hellish thing broke loose you had to go. It wasn't fear. It wasn't pain. It was——. What's the use? You can't explain a thing like that."

"We certainly saw the glow the night Billy Edwards was—disappeared," mused Forsythe.

"And again, night before last," said the captain.

"What's that!" cried Slade. "Where is the Laughing Lass?"

"I'd give something pretty to know," said Barnett.

"Isn't she in tow?"

"In tow?" said Forsythe. "No, indeed. We hadn't adequate facilities for towing her. Didn't you tell him, Mr. Barnett?"

"Where is she, then?" Slade fired the question at them like a cross-examiner.

"Why, we shipped another crew under Ives and McGuire that noon. We were parted again, and haven't seen them since."

"God forgive you!" said the reporter. "After the warnings you'd had, too. It was—it was——"

"My orders, Mr. Slade," said Capt. Parkinson, with quiet dignity.

"Of course, sir; I beg your pardon," returned the other. "But—you say you saw the light again?"

"The first night they were out," said Barnett in a low voice.

"Then your second crew is with your first crew," said Slade shakily. "And they're with Thrackles, and Pulz and Solomon, and many another black-hearted scoundrel and brave seaman. Down there!"

He pointed under foot. Capt. Parkinson rose and went to his cabin. Slade rose, too, but his knees were unsteady. He tottered, and but for the swift aid of Barnett's arm would have fallen.

"Overdone," said Dr. Trendon, with some irritation. "Cost you something in strength. Foolish performance. Turn in now."

Slade tried to protest, but the surgeon would not hear of it and marched him incontinently to his berth. Returning, Trendon reported, with growls of discontent, that his patient was in a fever.

"Couldn't expect anything else," he fumed. "Pack of human interrogation points hounding him all over the place."

"What do you think of his story?" asked Forsythe.

The grizzled surgeon drew out a cigar, lighted it, took three deliberate puffs, turned it about, examined the ash end with concentration, and replied:

"Man's telling a straight story."

"You think it's all true?" cried Forsythe.

"Humph!" grunted the other. "He thinks it's all true."

An orderly appeared and knocked at the captain's cabin.

"Beg pardon, sir," they heard him say. "Mr. Carter would like to know how close in to run. Volcano's acting up pretty bad, sir."

Capt. Parkinson went on deck, followed by the rest.

CHAPTER II.
THE JOLLY ROGER.

Feeling the way forward, the cruiser was soon caught in a maze of cross currents. Hither and thither she was borne, a creature bereft of volition. Order followed order like the rattle of quick-fire, and was obeyed with something more than the Wolverine's customary smartness. From the bridge Capt. Parkinson himself directed his ship. His face was placid; his bearing steady and confident. This in itself was sufficient earnest that the cruiser was in ticklish case. For it was an axiom of the men who sailed under Parkinson that the calmer that nervous man grew the more cause was there for nervousness on the part of others.

The approach was from the south, but suspicious aspects of the water had fended the cruiser out and around, until now she stood prow-on to a bold headland at the northwest corner of the island. Above this headland lay a dark pall of vapor. In the shifting breeze it swayed sluggishly, heavily, as if riding at anchor like a logy ship of the air. Only once did it show any marked movement.

"It's spreading out toward us," said Barnett to his fellow-officers, gathered aft.

"Time to move, then," grunted Trendon.

The others looked at him inquiringly.

"About as healthful as prussic acid, those volcanic gases," explained the surgeon.

The ship edged on and inward. Presently the song of the leadsman sounded in measured distinctness through the silence. Then a sudden activity and bustle forward, the rattle of chains, and the Wolverine was at anchor. The captain came down from the bridge.

"What do you think, Dr. Trendon?" he asked.

More explicit inquiry was not necessary.

The surgeon understood what was in his superior's mind.

"Never can tell about volcanoes, sir," he said.

"Of course," agreed the captain. "But—well, do you recognize any of the symptoms?"

"Want me to diagnose a case of earthquake, sir?" grinned Trendon. "She might go off today, or she might behave herself for a century."

"Well, it's all chance," said the other cheerfully. "The man might be alive. At any rate, we must do our best on that theory. What do you make of that cloud on the peak?"

"Poisonous vapors, I suppose. Thought we'd have a chance to make sure just now. Seemed to be coming right for us. Wind's shifted it since."

"There couldn't be anything alive up there?"

"Not so much as a bug," replied the doctor, positively.

"Yet I thought when the vapor lifted a bit that I saw something moving."

"When was that, sir?"

"Ten or fifteen minutes back."

"We'll see soon enough, sir," put in Forsythe. "The wind is driving it down to the south'ard."

Sullenly, reluctantly, the forbidding mass moved across the headland. All glasses were bent upon it. Without taking his binocular from his eyes, Trendon began to ruminate aloud.

"If he could have got to the beach. . . . No vapor there. . . . Signal, though. . . . Perhaps he hadn't time. . . . And I'd hate to risk good men on that hell's cauldron. . . . Just as much risk here, perhaps. Only it seems——"

"There it is," cried Forsythe. "Look. The highest point."

Dull, gray wisps of murk, the afterguard of the gaseous cloud, were twisting and spiraling in a witch dance across the landscape, and, seen by snatches and glimpses through it, something flapped darkly in the breeze. Suddenly the veil parted and fled. A flag stood forth in the sharp gust, rigid and appalling. It was black.

"The Jolly Roger, by God! They've come back!" exclaimed Forsythe.

"And set up the sign of their shop," added Barnett.

"If they stuck to their flag—good-by," observed Trendon grimly.

"Dr. Trendon," said Capt. Parkinson, "you will arm yourself and go with me in the gig to make a landing."

"Yes, sir," responded the surgeon.

"Mr. Barnett."

"Yes, sir."

"Should we be overtaken by the vapor while on the highland and be unable to get back to the beach you are to send no rescuing party up there until the air has cleared."

"But, sir, may we not——"

"Do you understand?"

"Yes, sir."

"In case of an attack you will at once send in another boat with a howitzer."

"Yes, sir."

"Dr. Trendon, will you see Mr. Slade and inquire of him the best point for landing?"

Trendon hesitated.

"I suppose it would hardly do to take him with us?" pursued the commanding officer.

"If he is roused now, even for a moment, I won't answer for the consequences, sir," said the surgeon bluntly.

"Surely you can have him point out a landing place," said the captain.

"On your responsibility," returned the other, obstinately. "He's under opiate now."

"Be it so," said Capt. Parkinson after a time.

Going in, they saw no sign of life along the shore. Even the birds had deserted it. For the time the volcano seemed to have pretermitted its activity. Now and again there was a spurtle of smoke from the cone, followed by subterranean growlings, but, on the whole, the conditions were reassuring.

"Penny-pop-pinwheel of a volcano, anyhow," remarked Trendon, disparagingly. "Real man-size eruption would have wiped the whole thing off the map first whack."

As they drew in, it became apparent that they must scale the cliff from the boat. Farther to the south opened out a wide cove that suggested easy beaching, but over it hung a cloud of steam.

"Lava pouring down,," said Trendon.

Fortunately at the point where the cliff looked easiest the seas ran low. Ropes had been brought. After some dainty maneuvering two of the sailors gained foothold and slung the ropes so that the remainder of the disembarkation was simple. Nor was the ascent of the cliff a harsh task. Half an hour after the landing the exploring party stood on the summit of the hill, where the black flag waved over a scene of utter desolation. The vegetation was withered to pallid rags; even the tiniest weeding in the rock crevices had been poisoned by the devastating blast.

In the midst of that deathly scene, the flag seemed instinct with a sinister liveliness. Whoever had set it there had accurately chosen the highest available point on that side of the island, the spot of all others where it would make good its signal to the eye of any chance farer upon those shipless seas. For the staff a ten-foot sapling, finely polished, served. A mound of rock slabs supported it firmly. Upon the cloth itself was no design. It was of a dull black the hue of soot. Capt. Parkinson, standing a few yards off, viewed it with disfavor.

"Furl that flag," he ordered.

Congdon, the coxswain of the gig, stepped forward and began to work at the fastenings. Presently he turned a grinning face to the captain, who was scanning the landscape through his glass.

"Beggin' your pardon, sir," he said.

"Well, what is it?" demanded Capt. Parkinson.

"Beggin' your pardon, sir, that ain't rightly no flag. That's what you might rightly call a garment, sir. It's an undershirt, beggin' your pardon."

"Black undershirt's a new one to me," muttered Trendon.

"No, sir. It ain't rightly black; look."

Wrenching the object from its fastenings, he flapped it violently. A cloud of sooty dust, beaten out, spread about his face. With a strangled cry the sailor cast the shirt from him and rolled in agony upon the ground.

"You fool!" cried Trendon. "Stand back, all of you."

Opening his medicine case, he bent over the racked sufferer. Presently the man sat up, pale and abashed.

"That's how poisonous volcanic gas is," said the surgeon to his commanding officer. "Only inhaled remnants of the dust, too."

"An ill outlook for the man we're seeking," the captain mused.

"Dead if he's anywhere on this highland," declared Trendon. "Let's look at his flagpole."

He examined the staff. "Came from the beach," he pronounced. "Water-worn. H'm! Maybe he ain't so dead, either."

"I don't quite follow you, Dr. Trendon."

"Why, I guess our man has figured this thing all out. Brought this pole up from the beach to plant it here. Why? Because this was the best observation point. No good as a permanent residence, though. Planted his flag and went back."

"Why didn't we see him on the beach then?"

"Did you notice a cave around to the north? Good refuge in case of fumes."

"It's worth trying," said the captain, putting up his glass.

"Hold on, sir. What's this? Here's something. Look here."

Trendon pointed to a small bit of wood rather neatly carved to the shape of an indicatory finger, and lashed to the staff, at the height of a man's face. The others clustered around.

"Oh, the devil!" cried Trendon. "It must have got twisted. It's pointing straight down."

"Strange performance," said the captain. "However, since it points that way—heave aside those rocks, men."

The first slab lifted brought to light a corner of cardboard. This, on closer examination, proved to be the cover of a book. The rocks rolled right and left, and as the flagstaff, deprived of its support, tottered and fell, the trove was dragged forth and handed to the captain. While the ground jarred with occasional tremors and the mountain puffed forth its vaporous threats, he and the surgeon, seated on a rock, gave themselves with complete absorption to the reading

CHAPTER III

THE CACHE.

Outwardly the book accorded ill with its surroundings. In that place of desolation and death, it typified the petty neatness of office processes. Properly placed, it should have been found on a desk, with pens, rulers and other paraphernalia forming exact angles of parallels to it. It was a quarto, bound in marbled paper, with black leather over the hinges. No external label suggested its ownership or uses, but through one corner, blackened and formidable in its contrast to the peaceful purposes of the volume, a hole had been bored. The agency of perforation was obvious. A bullet had made it.

"Seen something of life, I reckon," said Trendon, as the captain turned the volume about slowly in his hands.

"And of death," returned Capt. Parkinson, solemnly. "Do you know, Trendon, I almost dread to open this?"

"Pshaw!" returned the other. "What is it to us?"

He threw the cover back. Neatly lettered on the inside, in the fine and slightly angular writing characteristic of the Teutonic scholar, was the legend:

"Karl Augustus Schermerhorn,
1409½ Spruce Street,
Philadelphia, Pa."

The opposite page was blank. Capt. Parkinson turned half a dozen leaves.

"German!" he cried, in a note of disappointment. "Can you read German script?"

"After a fashion," replied the other. "Let's see. Es wonnte sechs—und—dreissig unterjacke," he read. "Why, blast it, was the man running a haberdashery? What have three dozen undershirts to do with this?"

"A memorandum for outfitting, probably," suggested the captain. "Try here."

"Chemical formulae," said Trendon. Pages of 'em. The devil! Can't make a thing of it."

"Well, here's something in English."

"Good," said the other. "By combining the hypersulphate of iridium with the fumes arising from oxide of copper heated to 1000 C., and combining with picric acid in the proportions described in formula X18, a reaction, the nature of which I have not fully determined, follows. This must be performed with extreme care, owing to the unstable nature of the benzine compounds."

"Picric acid? Benzine compounds? Those are high explosives," said Capt. Parkinson. "We should have Barnett go over this."

"Here's a name under the formula, Dr. A. Mardent[illegible], Ann Arbor, Mich. That explains its being in English. Probably copied from a letter."

"This must have been one of the experiments in the valley that Slade told us of," said the captain thoughtfully. "Why, see here," he cried with something like exultation. "That's what Dr. Schermerhorn was doing here. He has the clue to some explosive so terrific that he goes far out of the world to experiment with its manufacture. For companions he chooses a gang of cutthroats that the world would never miss in case anything went wrong. Possibly it was some trial of the finished product that started the eruption, even. Do you see?"

"Don't explain enough," grunted Trendon. "Deserted ship. Billy Edwards. Mysterious lights. Slade and his story. Any explosives in those? Good enough, far as it goes. Don't go far enough."

"It certainly leaves gaps," admitted the other.

He turned over a few more pages.

"Formulae, formulae, formulae. What's this? Here are some marginal annotations."

"Unbehasslich," read Trendon. "Let's see. That means "highly unsatisfactory, or words to that effect. Hi! Here's where the old man loses his temper. Listen: "May the devil take Carroll and Crum for careless'—h'm—well, 'pig-dogs.' Now, where do Carroll and Crum come in?"

"They're a firm of analytical chemists in Washington," said the captain. "When I was on the ordnance board, I used to get their circulars."

"Fits in. What? More English. Worse than the German, this is."

The writing, beginning evenly enough at the top of a page, ran along for a line or two, then fell, sprawling in huge, ragged characters the full length. Trendon stumbled among them, indignantly.

"June 1, 1904," he read. "It is done. Triumph. (German word.) Eureka. Es ist geralft. From the (can't make out that word) of the inspiration—god-like power—solution of the world-problems. Why, the old fool is crazy! And his writing is crazier. Can't make head or tail of it.

The captain turned several more pages. They were blank. "At any rate, it seems to be the end," he said.

"I should hope so," returned the other disgustedly.

He took the book on his knees, fluttering the leaves between thumb and finger. Suddenly he checked, cast back and threw the book wide open.

"Here beginneth a new chapter," said he quietly.

No imaginable chirography could have struck the eye with more of contrast to the professor's small and nervous hand. Large, rounded and rambling, it filled the page with few and careless words.

"June 2, 1904. On this date I find myself sole occupant and absolute monarch of this valuable island. This morning I was a member of a community, interesting if not precisely peaceful. Tonight I am the last leaf. All his lovely comparisons are faded and gone, the sprightly Solomon, the psychic Nigger, the amiable Thrackles, the cheerful Perdosa, the genial Pulz, and the high-minded Eagan. Undoubtedly the social atmosphere has cleared, moreover, I am for the first time in my life a landed proprietor. Item: several square miles of grass land; several dozen head of sheep; item: a cove full of fish; item: a sportive though somewhat unruly volcano. At times, it may be, I shall feel the lack of company. The sea gulls alone are not distrustful of me. Undoubtedly the sea gull is an estimable creature, but he leaves something to be desired in the way of companionship. Hence, this diary, the inevitable refuge of the empty-minded. Materially, I shall do well enough, though I face one tragic circumstance. My cigarette material, I find, is short. Upon coming up——"

"Damn his cigarettes!" cried the surgeon. "This must be Darrow. Finicky beast! Let's see if it's signed."

He whirled the leaves over to the last sheet, glanced at it, and sprang to his feet. There, sprawled in tremulous characters, as by a hand shaken with terror, was written:

"Look for me in the cave.

"PERCY DARROW."

The bullet hole in the corner furnished a sinister period to the signature.

Trendon handed the ledger back to the captain, who took one quick look, closed it, and handed it to Congdon.

"Wrap that up and carry it carefully," he said.

"Aye, aye, sir," said the coxswain, swathing it in his jacket and tucking it under his arm.

"Now to find that cave," said Captain Parkinson to the surgeon.

"The cave in the cliff, of course," said Trendon. "Noticed it coming in, you know."

"Where?"

"On the north shore, about a mile to the east of here."

"Then we'll cut directly across."

"Beg your pardon, sir," put in Congdon, "but I don't think we can make it from this side, sir."

"Why not?"

"No beach, sir, and the cliff's like the side of a ship. Looks to be deep water right into the cave's mouth."

"Back to the boat, then. Bring that flag along."

The descent was swift, at times reckless, but the party embarked without accident. Soon they were forging through the water at racing speed, the boat leaping to the impulsion of the sailorman's strongest motives, curiousity and the hope of saving a life.

ADULTERATION ABROAD.

"We are not in it with the foreigners in food adulteration," said a chemist. "I spent my summer vacation in England and on the continent, analyzing cheap foods. The things I found out!

"They freshen up flat beer with fish skins over there. They thicken cream with the brains of dead horses. Apricot marmalade is made of carrots sweetened with glucose. The octopus, or devil fish, is canned and put on the market as prime lobster. Spoiled potatoes are palmed off as truffles. Chocolate is adulterated with clay."

Mysterious Mountains.

ONE IS MUSICAL AND ANOTHER MAGNIFIES OBJECTS ON IT.

By a Special Contributor.

THE discovery has recently been made that there is a "musical" mountain in the State of Nevada, and the fact has awakened a great deal of interest, and not a little curiosity. It can scarcely be called a mountain, being rather a large-based and high sand hill.

Situated at Sand Springs, twelve miles west of Fairview, on the Fallon Road, it stands, white and solitary against the black malapi (or lava) hills surrounded by the salt flats. Of this hill it is related that it is often heard to give off a low growl, or bellow, that can be heard for a long distance; and that it was held in great superstitious reverence by the Indians, who could never be induced to approach near its base, much less climb it. The red men hold a legend that one of their tribe had walked over its summit and failed to ever return.

Recently, a party of three persons visited this place and ascended to the top. In relating his experience, one of the party said to the writer:

"Upon expressing our determination to climb the hill, we were told to walk along the summit where the wind had built a sharp ridge, and when the sand began to slide down the sharp incline, the music would be heard. We followed the directions in a rather mysterious mood, but upon attaining a height of some sixty feet, a sand slide occurred, accompanied by what sounded like the deepest note of a big base horn. Strong vibrations were also very noticeable while the sound continued.

"Had we not been assured of our personal safety, we would probably have turned and fled, as had some previous visitors had done who were ignorant of the mountain's peculiar musical specialty. After a few minutes, the strange sound would settle—as soon as the sand ceased to move. Then we would pass on to new ground and repeat the operation. Next, we experimented and could get the tone by a quick scoop of the hand in the sand, unaccompanied by any slide.

"Upon our return, I made further inquiries about this mountain, and of other similar mountains—if this musical property was held by all other wind-formed masses in common. I was assured that in the ratner wide experience of my informant, that such property was peculiar to this mountain alone.

"My informant further stated that the sand a few feet down was very moist. His theory was that the musical noise was produced by gas which came up through the sand; that when the sand was in motion it caused a vibration. He had noted that gas partly shut off, and water jets had produced similar sounds. The general theory, however, is that the interior of the mountain is hollow, which makes the vibrations of sliding sand audible.

"My own theory is (and also that of my two companions) that the loose sand which is shifted every windy day, in sliding over the harder packed sand causes the peculiar note. Patches of harder sand may be seen on the slopes of this huge hill. This, however, does not account for the sound when the sand is suddenly moved by the hand.

"I was also informed that only at certain places on the hill was this sound given off—though one might try ever so hard to obtain them uniformly. We ourselves verified this, noting that the sound was very distinct only at intervals, and not audible at all along the lower slopes of the mountain."

This musical mountain belongs to R. S. Brock, who lives at or near Sand Springs. He has staked out a mining claim which includes a part of the mountain, as the sand yields on an average about $3.50 per ton—in gold and silver. This sand is mostly of a quartzy nature, very fine and of remarkably uniform size, and free from all dust. Mr. Brock is very desirous of having a scientific explanation of this phenomenon. As the mountain's peculiarities have been called to the attention of scientists, it is quite probable that an investigation will be made soon as to the real cause of the sounds given forth by this sand mountain.

There is another mountain in the State of Washington, which possesses an equally singular property—that of magnifying every object which appears along the sides or on the summit. This mountain stands in the Valley of the Spokane River, about seven miles from the city of Spokane, Spokane county. It rises about 1000 feet above the level of the valley. All of the southern exposure is open—entirely free from trees or brush. It is very rugged and rocky in places. The entire northern slopes are covered with a dense growth of timber and underbrush.

Everything seen on the southern side of this mountain appears greatly magnified. Men, women, cattle, horses, sheep, persons on horseback, etc., when viewed from a long distance appear greatly magnified—often surprisingly so. All of these objects when seen at the distance of a few miles, look as if only a few hundred yards away. This remarkable fact has long been a matter of surprise, wonder, and conjecture. Thus far no plausible reason has been given for this effect, though there are many theories advanced for the strange phenomenon.

Another singular thing is that this peculiar magnifying power is not always the same. It has long been noted that this power is much stronger at early dawn and after sundown. The most plausible theory is that it is due to certain atmospheric conditions—but just what those conditions are, or, what produces them—is the mystery.

Maori Legends.

THE ANCIENT CANOES FROM HAWAIKI TO NEW ZEALAND.

From Paradise of the Pacific.

THE Maoris or native inhabitants of New Zealand are divided into what the English residents call tribes—or as the Maoris themselves say—"part of a people," a "body," or "those who are gathered together." These tribes are very jealous in maintaining this distinction from one another.

It is curious to note that among the most prominent tribes this distinction is not based upon descent from any royal line of chiefs as in the Hawaiian Islands, but upon the names of the different canoes in which the ancestors of the tribes came from Hawaiki to New Zealand.

The New Zealanders have genealogies which they prize. These genealogies have many names in common with some of the Hawaiian genealogies. The pride of blood and pedigree has been strong in New Zealand as well as in Hawaii, but the descent from a certain canoe is a higher distinction apparently than to descend from the chief who came in the canoe.

The Maori legends say that the last great migration of canoes to New Zealand was many generations ago, probably in either the twelth of thirteenth century of the Christian era. War was one of the great causes assigned for this removal. There were serious quarrels in Hawaiki. Village became embittered against village, and the only way to preserve honor was to kill off as many of the opposing village as possible. This is well illustrated by the legend of the dog belonging to Hou-mai-Tahiti "Hou from Tahiti." This dog was killed and eaten by Uenuku, chief of a neighboring village. The sons of Hou stole fruit in return—and were caught—but quickly escaped—allowing the boys to escape was a very great disgrace—resulting in war, cannibalism, and the wasting away of the people of both villages. Finally Tama, a son of Hou from Tahiti built a canoe and sailed away to the new land about which he had heard from a sea rover named Nga-hue. Such troubles drove chiefs and their few retainers into the unknown mysteries of canoe voyages over the ocean.

Other canoes appear to have pushed out in the search for foreign lands simply actuated by the spirit of adventure. Sea rovers had returned to Hawaiki from long voyages to new lands—visits had been made to Tahiti, Samoa and many other islands from the Hawaiian Islands. "Laa from Tahiti" is one of the historical characters who sailed from Hawaii to Tahiti, then after many years returned for a visit, then sailed back to Tahiti to become a king. There is little trace in known Hawaiian legends of "Hou from Tahiti." This would indicate that his connection with New Zealand came from some other portion of the Pacific. It is known that the Tahitian legends show close relation between Tahiti and the islands of the Southern Pacific.

Although Mauri the demi-god was credited with having "fished up" most of the Polynesian islands—yet Hawaiki had legends of Maui's finding a very great land under the ocean which he brought to the surface by means of his magic hook and sacred line. This land has borne for centuries the name "The great fish of Maui."

The natives of New Zealand show a section of the North Island as the head of Maui's fish, another part is the body, and another place is the tail. The fish hook was supposed to have magically turned into a ledge of rocks, lying in Hawke's Bay. Rumors of this land of Maui's finding stirred the hearts of some of the sailors of Hawaiki.

Then came the long voyage of Nga-hue who had trouble in Hawaiki and sailed away to find peace. After many days he returned, having visited a wonderful land in which he had not found any inhabitants. Nga-hue discovered green jasper and the large bird, the moa, in this new land. A part of the jasper he brought back to Hawaiki and from it made axes and ear ornaments. These axes were supposed to be especially powerful in the art of canoe making—their "magic" was very great. They were used in the work of fashioning some of the great canoes in which the people of Hawaiki went to New Zealand.

Nga-hue told the story of his voyage and induced Tama, the son of "Hou from Tahiti," and other young chiefs of Hawaiki to go back with him to take possession of the newly-discovered territory.

Thus by reason of battle and inspiration of discovery the residents of Hawaiki were led to launch large canoes and make long voyages. They went forth to find "the great fish of Maui."

It was the time when "vikings" were sailing over the Atlantic and along European coasts. The spirit of making long sea voyages was in the atmosphere all around the world. The salt of the sea filled the nostrils of sea lovers, and they became sea rovers. The Hawaiian legends of that time turn with references to Hawaiian chiefs who with large canoes and a handful of followers sailed apparently to all parts of the Pacific Ocean. It was to be expected that New Zealand would be invaded by the restless Polynesians.

It is true that these "vikings" of the Pacific learned at last that the new land was not new, but had been settled by Polynesians ages before. There had been a dispersion from the Straits of Sunda when the Malays descended upon the Polynesians and drove them out to the islands of the ocean in the second and third centuries after the birth of the Lord Christ. Part of the dispersed had found Hawaii—and even more distant lands—but part had made their home in the islands which they called "Ke-ao-tea-roa," "The long white cloud," an ancient name for New Zealand. Then after many centuries came the canoe men from Hawaiki. Even to the present time the first comers are known as "the tribes which have no canoe." They are Polynesians, but cannot boast descent from the "Mayflower." The aristocracy of the canoe is now supreme in New Zealand.

The names of the canoes and many of the events connected with the voyages are recorded in the New Zealand traditions. The accounts are full of detail. Many names of places in Hawaiki are mentioned. Some of these are very closely allied to names of places in the Hawaiian Islands and might imply that the last great migration to New Zealand went forth from Hawaii. But there are also indications of voyages from Savaii of Samoa and also from Roro Tong and other places.

It is possible that in the same way that the Hawaiians after many years grouped all these ancient voyages together as if to one land—giving to it the name Tahiti—so also the Maoris of New Zealand gave the general name Hawaiki to the different places from which the canoes of their ancestors sailed.

In this Hawaiki of the past were two mountains, Maunga Roa and Maunga Nui, corresponding to Mauna Loa and Mauna Kea of Hawaii. In Hawaii the sweet potato—the kumara—was indigenous. The Maoris had to send back to Hawaiki for the kumara—and have had to take great care of it as well as of the taro lest it should die out. Both plants were brought from Hawaiki. The hue or gourd calabash was also from Hawaiki. (The story of the kumara or sweet potato is a legend worth recording as a separate story from the canoe legends.) The name of one canoe is given in which food, insects, lizards, birds, chickens and dogs were brought from Hawaiki—this was said to be a very large canoe called Manga rara. One account says that there were "five large double canoes decked over, carrying chiefs, followers and families—with animals and provisions" from Hawaiki—"the islands of the dark sea." These large canoes were filled with provisions and sent for the new home—mat sails were fastened to short masts. The stars were carefully watched by astrologers and the vikings sailed away to the land of the "long white cloud."

One of the great canoes which had been fashioned by the jasper axe of Nga-hue was called the Arawa (the Shark.) The canoe carried Nga-toro, one of the most renowned of all the priests going to New Zealand. He possessed great magic. When he stamped his foot on the ground, springs of water came forth—his cloak torn in strips took root and each strip grew into a tree. He saw a great mountain covered with snow. He charged those who were with him not to eat food while he climbed the mountain. Up he went—up—up—until he was very near the summit—but the canoe people began to be hungry, and one by one ate food. How cold Ngotoro was! almost perishing. Then he thought of the volcanoes of Hawaiki, and remembered the names of the gods and the proper prayers for the production of a volcano upon the mountain.

The gods of Hawaiki sent the volcanic fire. "It came right underneath the earth, spouting up at Whakaari, at Roto-rua, at Tora-wera, at Pae-roa, at Orakeikorako, and at Taupo. Then it ascended right up Tonga-riro—to him who was sitting upon the top of the mountain, and thence the hero was revived again and descended." Thus activity was brought to one of the ancient volcanoes of New Zealand. The legend of Pele, the Hawaiian goddess of fire—passing from Samoa to Hawaii is similar in that she passes under the seas, from island to island, until she finds a home on the southern coast of the Island of Hawaii.

Another very interesting canoe legend binds Hawaii to New Zealand. The Hawaiians have a beautiful fairy story which tells how Laka (or Raka) cut down a tree for a canoe. The forest elves put all the chips, branches and leaves together during the night and replaced the tree in its original position—this happened two or three times—then Laka learned how to propitiate the fairies; he secured this aid and the canoe was finished and used in long voyages. The New Zealand canoe maker was Rata (or Laka.) He passed through the same experiences in Hawaiki and finally sailed to New Zealand. His canoe was given several names. The story of a canoe maker receiving the assistance of fairies when fashioning a special canoe is told in several different groups of islands.

Manaia was a great chief in Hawaiki. He built the Tokomaru (Broken staff) canoe. This canoe also had the name Tonga-maru (Calm South.) Manaia prepared for a long voyage—persuaded his brother-in-law to swim out to his canoe for a farewell greeting—and killed him by the boatside as a sacrifice to the gods for a propitious voyage. A dog came to the canoe with its master; the boatmen pulled the dog up into the boat. This dog after many days leaped overboard into the sea and swam away. The canoemen followed, but could not overtake it—all night long they heard the dog barking in a certain direction. In the morning they discovered land, and a dead whale lying on the beach, another canoe came along and claimed the whale, so Manaia sailed on toward the south. He found a fine portion of country—and took possession of it—although it was already inhabited. After a time he succeeded in overcoming the original settlers. His story closes with the statement that he fought two great noteworthy battles in Hawaiki—"Kiri-kiri-wawa and Roto-rua." "The fame of his weapons resounded in Hawaiki. Their names were Kihia and Rakea."

Before Manaia left Hawaiki he threatened to make trouble for a chiefess by the name of Haungaroa. She fled to New Zealand, taking with her the following gods of Hawaiki: Maru, Te-iho-o-te-rangi, Rongo-mai, Itupawa, and Hangaroa. These seem to be family deities, except Rongo-mai, which is the same as Lono, one of the greatest of the Hawaiian gods with the affix mai which probably made him a special god of Haungaroa's family. She returned to Hawaiki with her relatives from New Zealand and drove Manaia over to the New Zealand coasts.

There is quite a long list of canoes. Sometimes the same canoe has a double name. The names are frequently Hawaiian as well as Maori—Tai-nui (Hawaiian, Kainui or "Great Sea") means the "great tide or sea," Mataatua (Hawaiian Maka-akua or "God of the eye,") means "Consecration of the face or god of the face," and yet other names sound unfamiliar to an Hawaiian ear. After the canoes went to New Zealand there were continual dissensions and wars as if discordant elements had tried to settle down together. The easiest explanation of the use of the one word Hawaiki for the first home of the Maoris, and also for the home from which the latest migrations came, is that Hawaiki after centuries came to be an inclusive word, and covered any place from which the sea rovers came.

Hon. Edward Tregear, of New Zealand, writing about the original home of the Polynesians, thinks that their first residence was either India or Central Asia, from whence they passed through India, there making a stay of some time. Then they journeyed to the Malay archipelago, residing there many generations until driven out by the Malays. This is the original Hawaiki from which Polynesia was first settled, expeditions probably passing out to the far distant island groups. Then lastly came the canoe voyagers—the rovings of the vikings of the Pacific, which in New Zeland meant a new peopling of the land of the "long white cloud," and to the Hawaiians and Tahitians and other islands meant almost two centuries of adventurous sea roving.

LONDON HUSTLE.

THE OLD METROPOLIS BECOMING INSPIRED BY THE SPIRIT OF RUSH.

[London Daily Mail:] Londoners going to and fro in the metropolis are now being hustled without mercy. Time must be saved, and London is learning its lesson.

The hustling hurry of the people is becoming, indeed, one of the features of the metropolis, and is being commented on even by visitors from America, the home of hustlers. The spirit of "rush" has seized London. There are evidences of it everywhere.

The electric underground railways have played an important part in changing the habits of Londoners. Passengers have had to learn (and are still learning) to enter the trains and leave them quickly. The quicker a train can deposit and gather its passengers at a station the quicker it can complete its full journey. With the guard at the entrance to each of the carriages, his hand on the controlling handles, appealing to passengers to "Hurry on, please; hurry on," the most dilatory person is inclined to increase the pace of his movements.

Under the new conditions people are not only asked to hurry; they are given facilities for hurry. Instead of having to open carriage doors, as in the old days, they have the doors flung open automatically in readiness; instead of having to climb up on to a footboard and thence into a carriage, they can step into carriages practically on a level.

Some people not yet accustomed to the new spirit object that occasionally a liftman urges them to a quicker pace than they like.

In the streets the motor omnibuses are changing the habits of Londoners. If they are to convey their passengers swiftly and punctually, the motor conductors cannot afford to tarry. The omnibus swoops down on to a stopping place, and the conductor is helping his "fares" to enter his vehicle with a readiness and a swiftness that surprise the novice. He develops strong muscles. It often happens that the motor-omnibus does not come to a standstill for passengers, but draws near to the curb, steadies its pace, and the strong-armed conductor does the rest. Many of the younger business men are learning to jump the motor omnibuses at full speed. It is an exciting practice, but it has to be done if the omnibus is to be utilized at any point.

"It is a wonderful thing to us," said an American lady a few days ago, "that you Londoners mount your vehicles moving. In my city we are not allowed to do so."

On the electric tramway cars to the suburbs the weary worker on his return home at night is hustled off with many appealing words from the conductor. Women slowly descending the steps from above work him to a high state of nervousness.

PAINTING BY THE ACRE.

Under ordinary circumstances the ships of the largest and most carefully-managed lines are painted at the end of every voyage. Every time a Cunarder, for instance, arrives in port she is repainted. This is no light task, for every inch of the vessel's outside area above the water line—sides, deck works, and funnels—from stem to stern is carefully gone over by an army of painters. The area thus covered is about 2½ acres.

Curiously enough, the funnels are regarded as the most important item of the whole undertaking, as these great pipes are susceptible to injury and must be carefully handled. On no account is any hammering or pounding allowed, and the men work from stagings suspended from a rail on the top of the mouth of the huge funnel. The old paint and dirt are carefully scraped and scaled off before the actual painting begins.

There are now 120 large passenger ships constantly crossing the Atlantic. Assuming that the average area of each ship is 2¼ acres, and that each vessel is painted, say, ten times in one season, we have an area to be covered with paint of 2700 acres every year. Such a job, requiring the services of nearly 100 men working steadily, would cost about £50,000. Although this seems an immense sum to spend upon paint alone, it is essential to keep the vessels in spick-and-span condition.—[Ti Bits.

For Philanthropists.

THE late Dr. Eliphalet Wright of Lee, Mass., in the course of his long life ushered 6000 babies into the world. This is believed to be the record.

"Dr. Wright," said a resident of Lee, "had two passions—children and charity. In both he was most successful. He held that in both grace and delicacy were essential. He held that charity which was not graceful and clean was bound to fail, bringing to the donor scorn instead of gratitude.

"Thus, he once said in a Sunday-school address, a rich landlord, while making the round of his tenants' cottages collecting rents, met a little girl whose beauty much impressed him. In the shabby front room of the cottage the landlord talked for a while with the little girl, and as he rose to go, an unwonted feeling of kindness warmed his heart.

"'Let me see,' he said, fishing in his pockets—'let me see if I haven't something to give to this dear little girl.'

"And, smiling and chuckling, he went through pocket after pocket. Finally, in his hip pocket, he found a peppermint drop, a white peppermint drop. He dusted the fluff and lint from it, and extended it gaily to the little girl.

"'Here we are,' he cried. 'I thought we had something. Here is a nice peppermint drop for her. And now, he ended, 'what will you do with it?'

"'Wash it,' said the little girl gravely."

Stories of Mansfield.

A PHILADELPHIA property man was relating, in a sad and respectful voice, his memories of Richard Mansfield.

"If one worked hard," he said, "one got on with Mr. Mansfield well. He never rebuked me but once, and then it was hardly my fault.

"It was a sultry afternoon in the spring, and we were rehearsing one of the Mansfield plays—I think it was 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde'—and here and there I had to supply a clap of thunder.

"Everything went well for a time. Then, in an unexpected place, a loud roar of thunder rumbled forth. Mr. Mansfield hurried to me.

"'Look here,' he said, with a hurt look, 'do be careful, won't you? A mistake like that would be very serious before an audience. That clap of thunder came in the wrong place.'

"'I'm very sorry, Mr. Mansfield,' said I; 'but it wasn't my thunder. It came from outside.'"

"Another time," went on the property man, "we were rehearsing a play that required the sound of rain in the third act.

"Mr. Mansfield, speaking during the rainfall, began to cough. And no wonder. From the wings there was rolling a great cloud of dust.

"'What is the cause of all this dust?' said Mr. Mansfield sternly.

"'It's the rain machine, sir,' said the woman who had the machine in charge. And she explained that it was rather an ancient contrivance—split peas that were dropped into a metal cylinder—and she feared it was rather dusty.

"'Well,' said Mr. Mansfield, 'before our next rehearsal see that the rain is washed.'" False Cheer.

"SOME of these financial prophets of good cheer," said Thomas W. Lawson in a recent after-dinner speech in Boston, "remind me of the man who dropped a nickel in a blind beggar's hat and exclaimed in a benevolent voice:

"'There, my poor fellow, is a quarter for you.'

"'Why on earth,' said the man's companion, 'did you give him a nickel and say it was a quarter?'

"'Oh,' was the reply, 'I wanted to cheer him up.'"

"'I'se a-gettin' on fine, thank ye,' the bride answered.

Too Much Territory.

AN Irishman traveling in the northern part of Wisconsin fell off of a train in a small town, and addressed the villagers in the following manner:

"What town is this?"

To which some one politely answered.

The Irishman exclaimed, "I can lick anybody in the town!"

To which the amazed farmers said nothing.

Then he demanded: "What county is this?"

To this query he also received an immediate answer, and blurted out: "I can lick any one in the county!"

Still no one took him up.

Then again he thundered: "What State is this?"

When some one answered "Wisconsin," he said: "I can lick anybody in the State!"

At that a man who had been taking it all in stepped out and gave the Irishman a blow that made him see the whole solar system. Then he kicked him until he was sure he had taught the Irishman a lesson. When he had finished, the Irishman got up, rubbed his sore spots, and said:

"Begorra! I took in too much territory that last time."—[Judge's Library.

Putting His Logic to Test.

THE old couple were eating their first meal with their son after his return from college.

"Tell us, John," said the father, "what have you learned at college?"

"Oh, lots of things," said the son as he recited his course of studies. "Then," he concluded, "I also studied logic."

"Logic," said the old man; "what is that?"

"It's the art of reasoning," said the son.

"The art of reasoning?" said the father. "What is that, my boy?"

"Well," replied the son, "let me give you a demonstration. How many chickens are on that dish, father?"

"Two," said the old man.

"Well," said John, "I can prove there are three." Then he stuck his fork in one and said: "That is one, isn't it?"

"Yes," said the father.

"And this is two," sticking his fork in the second.

"Yes," replied the father again.

"Well, don't one and two make three?" replied John triumphantly.

"Well, I declare," said the father; "you have learned things at college. Well, mother," continued the old man to his wife, "I will give you one of the chickens to eat and I'll take the other, and John can have the third. How is that, John?"—[Judge's Library.

Turned the Tables.

A GOOD story is told of two Oxford undergraduates touring in the east, who entered the shop of a Jew whose knowledge of English, though he spoke most other tongues, was limited. With the customary carelessness of the Anglo-Saxon race when abroad, one undergraduate remarked to the other, on failing to make the Jew understand what he wanted: "The fool does not speak English!"

This remark came within the radius of the old Jew's comprehension, and drew from him the following questions:

"Do you spik Italian?" to which they replied:

"No."

"Do you spik Grik?"

"No."

"Do you spik Turk?"

"No."

"Do you spik Spanish?"

"No."

"Do you spik Russian?"

"No."

After a pause the old man, with considerable energy, ejaculated: "Me one times fool; you five times fool!" to the complete discomfiture of the young Englishmen.—[Tit-Bits.

He was sent for by an innkeeper, who had had a quarrel with his wife, who had scarred his face with her nails, so that the poor man was bleeding and much disfigured. Dr. B—— thought this an opportunity not to be lost for admonishing the offender, and said:

"Madam, are you not ashamed of yourself to treat your husband like this? The husband is the head of all—your head, in fact, madam."

"Well, doctor," fiercely returned the virago, "and may I not scratch my own head?"—[Tit-Bits.

Angels With Stingers.

A LITTLE Cleveland tot of three years was put to bed, her first night in New Jersey, by her mother, with the words: "Now go to sleep, darling, and remember the angels are flying about your little crib and keeping you from harm."

A few minutes later the patter of little feet was heard, and a little, white-robed figure emerged from the bedroom.

"Why, darling, what's the matter?" said the mother.

"I don't like the angels," sobbed the little girl.

"Why, dearie; why not?"

"Halibut, my dear."

"Oh," replied the child, "I thought perhaps it was mermaid."—[Youth's Companion.

Relief at Last.

"UNCLE JOE" CANNON has cut his daily smoking allowance from twenty cigars down to one, and he has found his health much improved in consequence.

"Tobacco had me in its grip," he said one day in Plattsburg. "Now I have escaped out of its clutches, I feel relieved, glad, free. In that way I remind myself of the Irishman who wanted to go on the stage.

"This Irishman had longed to be an actor all his life. One night in a saloon he gave vent to his theatrical aspirations eloquently. A well-dressed chap eyed him with aproval, and then took him aside and offered him a job in his own show. Of course the offer, without any haggling, was accepted.

"But the actor, when he turned up early the next morning, was much disappointed with the nature of his job. He found that he was not to play in a theater, but a circus. His employer led him into a dirty cage, pointed to a mangy old lion skin, and said:

"'Get into that for the present. Our Nubian lion Nero died last week, and I'll have to ask you to impersonate him a little while. The work will be light and pleasant. You will only need to roar, trot about, and snarl at me when I prod you with this pointed stick.'

"The rehearsal was satisfactory, and in that night's performance the Irishman duly appeared as Nero the Nubian lion. All went well for some time. Then the trainer, raising his hand for silence, said to the assembled multitude:

"'Now, ladies and gents, in order to show the perfection of my trainin' system and the docility of the animals, I will put this here Nubian lion in the same cage with our man-eatin' Royal Bengal tiger. Up, Nero,' he went on, beginning to unfasten the iron door between the two cages. 'Up, Nero.'

"'Man, are ye mad?' whispered Nero piteously. 'Think o' me wife an' childer.'

"'In ye go,' muttered the trainer fiercely. 'Or do I run this pitchfork through ye?'

"Beside himself with terror, the poor fellow slunk into the tiger's cage and cowered down in the most distant corner. The tiger snarled and glared at him balefully, and closing his eyes, he began to pray in Irish. The tiger came softly toward him. He prayed faster. Then the tiger opened its mouth, and a kind voice said:

"'Don't be afraid, bhoy. Shure, I'm Irish meself.'"

A Case of Bluff.

CHARLES H. WILSON, the superintendent of Alfred G. Vanderbilt's remarkable stables, said at Newport of a groom he had discharged:

"The man was a bluff. He pretended to know all about horses, when in truth he could hardly tell a hackney from a cow. We soon got on to him. His case was like the fake blacksmith's.

"There was a chap who thought blacksmithing looked simple and easy, and so, being out of work, he decided to have a try at it. He went to a smith and asked for a job.

"'Well,' said the smith, 'you are a strong, likely-looking young fellow. What experience have you had?'

"'Eleven years,' was the prompt answer.

"'All right. I'll try you,' said the blacksmith. 'Shoe that mare while I go home to dinner.'

"The smith, on his return from dinner, frowned and said to the new hand:

"'What, haven't you got that mare shod yet?'

"The bluffer bit his lip, flushed, and replied:

"'I can't get her confounded foot in the vise.'"

The Way to Win.

RICHARD CANFIELD has abandoned Saratoga. He says there are no longer any spenders there, and it is impossible to make the famous Saratoga Club pay.

"I liked Saratoga," he said gloomily the other day. "I made my clubhouse and grounds one of the show places of America. But of course it had to pay. Everything must pay—at least in this country. Everything, in the end, comes down to a question of money."

Mr. Canfield lighted a huge black cigar and frowned.

"Everything must pay, and hence," he resumed, "there was truth in the advertisement that a young man answered one day.

"The advertisement said:

"'How to Win the Girl You Love. Full and explicit directions sent in sealed, plain envelope on receipt of $1.'

"This young man, who loved a girl madly and hopelessly, sent on a dollar, and the answer came to him by return mail. It read:

"'How to Win the Girl You Love. Get $1,000,000 and let her look at it.'"

Who, Indeed?

PRESIDENT J. L. Leary, of the Pittsburgh Peace Society, on a recent visit to Germany endeavored to persuade the leading German toymakers to stop making warlike toys—cannon, soldiers, guns and so forth—on the ground that such playthings fostered an ugly military spirit in little children.

"But I failed," said the good peace advocate, shortly after his return. "I could not bring the Germans to my way of thought. They held that the abolition of war was still a long way off."

He sighed.

"And I suppose," he said, "that the abolition of war will be a long way off till the young private does his own thinking—till the poor, brave lad who is only 'food for powder' considers war logically.

"There is a young private in the West—I heard of him the other day—who is logical enough. I wish there were more like him.

"His regiment had been fitted out with new uniforms, and the colonel inspected the men in their dapper clothes one morning. After inspection he made a little speech.

"'And I expect each one of you——' so the speech ended——'I expect each one of you to honor his new uniform by behaving like a general.'

"The private smiled and said, fairly loud:

"'I wonder who'd do the fighting then, sir?'"

HORTICULTURAL KNOWLEDGE.

STUDY OF PLANT LIFE IMPORTANT IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

By Ernest Braunton.

IN a land so teeming with the best of plant life from every land beneath the sun our plant lovers should be noted for their extensive knowledge of ornamental horticulture to the extent that visitors from other parts would listen in open-mouthed wonder that "one small head could carry all he knew." Here we garden every month in the year and at all times we may gather leaf and blossom so that the study of active plant life should with us be constant and perpetual.

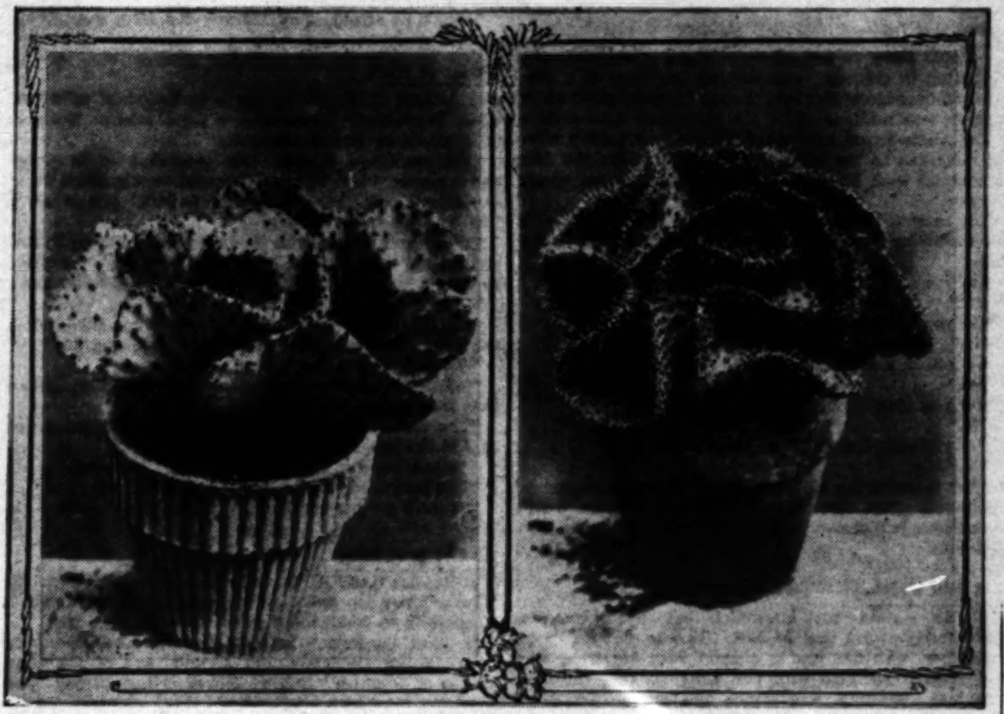
Under such ideal conditions for gardening our press should at all times seek for matter pertaining to garden work and garden material for the public is hungry for all instructive and interesting matter along this line. In bookish literature we have little that is even general and nothing sufficiently specific to cover the garden operations throughout the year. The great variety of plants we grow is in itself the most serious obstacle to the expectant author or compiler of works on gardening in California. Though because of this all have failed (who have made the attempt,) no work yet issued is without value to the home gardener, and all should be in the home. Wherever gardening is attempted, "Gardening in California" costing one dollar, and the "Garden Book of California" costing two dollars are both worthy efforts and constitute all that has yet appeared in book form. A perusal of both cannot fail to profit the searcher after garden knowledge.

The weakest point with the plant-loving public lies in the universal ignorance of the identity of our more common plants. During the many years of the writer's experience as plantsman people come into the salesyard to buy who did not know a geranium from a begonia, another will ask for a "eucalyptix" for street planting or a jacamorandia for shade tree (the latter a composite of jacaranda and maurandya.) These are but a few of the mistakes common to very intelligent-looking people. The unfortunate and pathetic part of the subject considered is that the average person does not desire to inform himself and all works on gardening in California have thus far been money-losers to the misguided publishers. The number of buyers of these books have thus far been so small that no warrant exists for any further attempt along this line. Until our people evince a desire for garden literature we shall doubtless have to get along with that already published. The up-to-date, scientifically compiled nursery catalogue is the only thing we have on plant nomenclature.

Curious Forms of Cacti.

Because of their oddity, the cacti have been called a freak family, and the fancier of these plants is always known as a "cactus crank." Why this should be is not plain to one intimately acquainted with plant life, for no group of plants have a wider variance in color, form, size or variety of form, color and size in the flower. In many instances both plant and flowers are of surpassing beauty. All have heard of, though not all have seen and scented the glories of the night-blooming cereus, a plant much written of in both poetry and prose, though all too often represented as much more charming than it really is.

The night-blooming cereus plant is neither very curious or very beautiful, and its flower is neither the largest or most beautiful. In color it is white with a sufficiently green tinge to detract somewhat from its snowiness. We have in the cacti family many plants bearing equally large flowers with most brilliant hues—colors and tints unsurpassed outside of the epiphytal orchids. We have also many curious abnormal forms of kinds quite common to hill or garden. Sometimes a leaf or division of the one most common about Los Angeles will become so ruffled and contorted as to be in heavy demand as a curio. Their price ranges in accordance with their beauty. We have photos of two leaves which brought $20 and $35 each.



ODD FORMS OF OUR MOST COMMON CACTUS

Epsom Salts for Azaleas.

A writer in an eastern magazine recorded last year the successful growth of azaleas in a soil well supplied with lime by using sulphate of magnesia to counteract the lime. This method is certainly worthy of a trial in California.

In the experiment reported two plants as nearly alike as possible were potted separately in a compost to which nearly a half ounce of lime was added to every five pounds of soil. To one of the pots there was added in addition a quarter of an ounce of sulphate of magnesia to every pound of soil. The flower buds of the plant in the pot to which no sulphate of magnesia was added made a poor development, and finally turned brown and dried up without opening at all, while in the pot in which the sulphate of magnesia was added the plant made a good, vigorous growth and bore an abundance of flowers. Like results were also secured with rhododendrons.

Get Ready for Winter.

Now is the golden time to clean up for winter. All rubbish is now as dry as it is possible to get and will burn readily. Weeds and litter of all kinds form a convenient retreat for insect pests and also harbor fungous diseases. Burn them, and you will be fairly rid of both during next season.

Ferns for Food.

The common bracken fern of our cañons (also common in Los Angeles gardens) is found in every country in the world, or at least on all continents. In Japan it has long been used as an article of food, but little has been said on the subject among the Anglo-Saxon peoples. A botanical writer connected with the Washington State University at Seattle is responsible for the statement that as a substitute for asparagus it is fully up to that esculent in taste and food value. Only the younger and more tender parts are used and the treatment throughout the culinary process is similar to that employed with asparagus. As our cañons abound with this species (Pteris aquilina) some of our people may be induced to start an edible fern garden.

The True Papaw.

A correspondent writes that the editor of this department has recommended the pawpaw as being a plant for frostless places only, whereas he has grown it in Indiana, and there it thrived --→ wondrously.

The statement to that effect is not recalled by the writer, but as it was absolutely correct, we are willing to stand sponsor for it. The true pawpaw is not native to the United States, but of tropical America, and grows only in comparatively frostless places in Southern California. It belongs to the passion-flower family, as may easily be seen by its fruit. Its botanical name is Carica Papaya. The native pawpaw (of which we have eight species) belongs to the custard-apple family, and the one generally eaten is known to science as Asimina triloba.

The City Beautiful—Its Avenues, Streets, Parks and Lakes.

OUR PEERLESS SOUTHLAND.

AN APPRECIATIVE TRIBUTE PAID BY CHARLES MULFORD ROBINSON.

CHARLES MULFORD ROBINSON, who next month comes to minister to our civic ills, was in Los Angeles for a short stay last year, being then on his way to Hawaii. When he reached home he wrote quite extensively of his impressions on this Coast for an eastern publication. In comparing Honolulu and Los Angeles, Hawaii and Southern California he puts our charms in such a favorable right that we cannot forbear republishing a few paragraphs.

"If one could go with his eyes closed from Chicago to the Golden Gate there certainly would be no sense of disappointment in the first impression made by the vegetation of the Hawaiian Islands after six days of sailing on the ocean. But all the way across the ocean one's eyes are very much open, and going as I did by way of Southern California, with frequent stops of several days at a time—and always saying to one's self: 'Those palms are fine, but wait for Honolulu; these flowers are lovely, but think of tropical blooms that we shall see; and these green fields, and hillsides verdant beneath the warm rains and brilliant sun of the California winter, are well in their way; but one must be temperate in admiration since the tropics are yet to be seen'—if one could go to Honolulu with none of this experience, there could be no disappointment. But after the roses of California, after the riot of flowers in park and garden, by wayside and in wood and field, which California offers to the winter traveler, the first views of the Hawaiian Islands and of Honolulu are not quite all one hoped.

"In the first days there is recognized the beauty of the hills, but they are not quite as high as one had expected—not really mountains, on the island upon which is Honolulu; and one misses a wealth of garden flowers. There are no roses, a Japanese beetle having destroyed them all some years ago and successfully prevented their culture since, and the few flowers raised in gardens—as petunias, geraniums, and nasturtiums—seem no more flourishing than in the eastern States. The banana is stunning, but scraggly, and its big leaves have become familiar in California. The graceful pepper tree is not as beautiful here as on the Coast; the orange and lemon trees are hardly as good, and for the common date and fan-leafed palm one had no need to cross 2000 miles of ocean. The whole effect is not, in short, the sum of many additions—California plus and plus—and in the first recognition of its algebraic character, that there are deductions to be maue, one does feel a little pang of disappointment."

Protecting Street Trees.

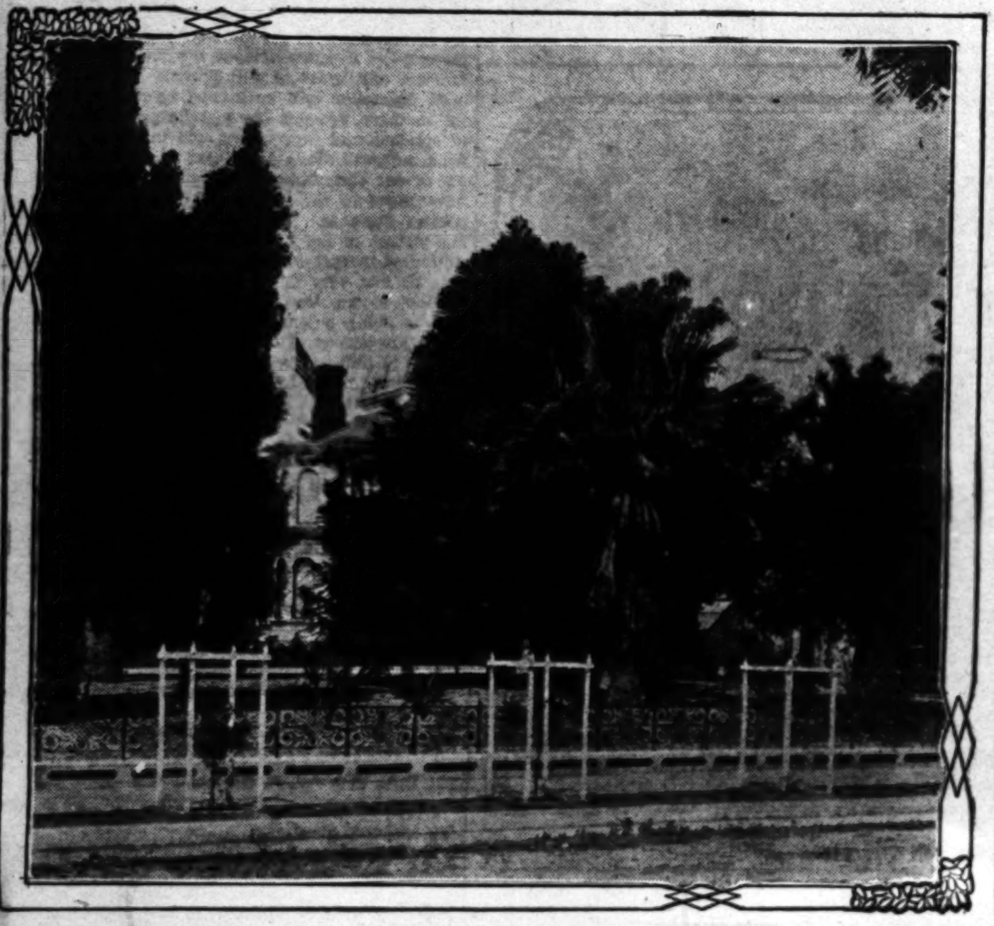
Our city forester in traveling through all parts of the city has noted with some regret the wholly inadequate protection given to newly-planted street trees. Even where improvement societies have done thorough, systematic work, the protection has been insufficient and it may be well for intending planters to remember that with the very best method in vogue trees often get nipped off or pulled up by horses being allowed to stand near them. A tree that is worthy of a place in our street planting schemes is entitled to necessary protection, and if this is not given, the first expense, that of tree purchase, often proves a waste of money.

State Street—Tree Laws.

Some of our older States have been passing very stringent street-tree laws of late, and it looks as though this wave of reform, like nearly all pertaining to civic beauty, will begin on the Atlantic Coast and reach California last. It has been a constant source of deep disappointment to the writer to note that we are always last in all that pertains to civic beauty. Every department of nature conspires to do its utmost for us, and in proportion to our natural advantages man has neglected to take the most ordinary precautions, to the end that we might hold that rank to which we are naturally and therefore justly entitled.

If a good State street-tree law had been passed a score of years ago supplemented by suitable city ordinances, we could today be as beautiful as any city in the world, for it requires less care, time and cash outlay to successfully grow street trees here than it does in any country in the world. In spite of our remissness in this respect and the urgent need of acting at once our City Council was considering, but a week or two ago, the abolishment of the office of city forester. We have no department of city government which at this time needs more active and willing moral and financial support than does our city forester's office. Because the office is new the Council thought it the first one that should be dispensed with, not having recognized, evidently, that former Councils have been almost criminally negligent in failing to create the office of forester many years ago. The office has come to stay, and this city will never again be without a city forester, at least for any considerable time, for if once abolished every improvement association and commercial organization would fight for its reëstablishment, as they petitioned for its creation in the first instance.

Connection last year passed a street-tree law which pays a bounty of 10 cents per year for five years on each tree planted of the eleven sorts specified, while our State will not even pass a law requiring owners to do the same at on cost to the State. A fine is imposed on any one who mutilates or destroys a tree so planted, and no electric light or power company dare cut any tree now growing without the written consent of the adjoining property owner. Neither may any bill, poster, picture, notice, advertisement or other thing in writing, printing or otherwise be placed upon any street tree. The law further provides for local tree wardens, a State tree warden and the purchase of lands for planting or nursery purposes and gives him the power, within certain limits of cost, to buy, sell, exchange or in any way transfer these lands and execute a final deed therefor without let or hindrance save consent of the Governor and Attorney-General. Would that California could even approach such a standard of effectual improvement.



PROPER STREET TREE PROTECTION

Plant Study.

Plants are especially valuable objects for nature study if alive, but as compared to the plant in the garden, the botanical specimen is dry, musty and thoroughly uninteresting. It is a hundredfold more profitable for a school child to study the living plant for a year than botany for four years.

Botany is a course which should be taken by all who have the opportunity, and its value and interest are greatly enhanced by the garden study of plants, but if one has the choice a year spent with the living plant is better far than four with the dead plant. Plant study should not be entered too abruptly—it is first necessary to interest the students to the point where they wish to learn more of vegetable life. Therefore one cannot begin at the fundamentals, but must show the class something of unquestioned general interest.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

THE PARTI-COLORED BREEDS.

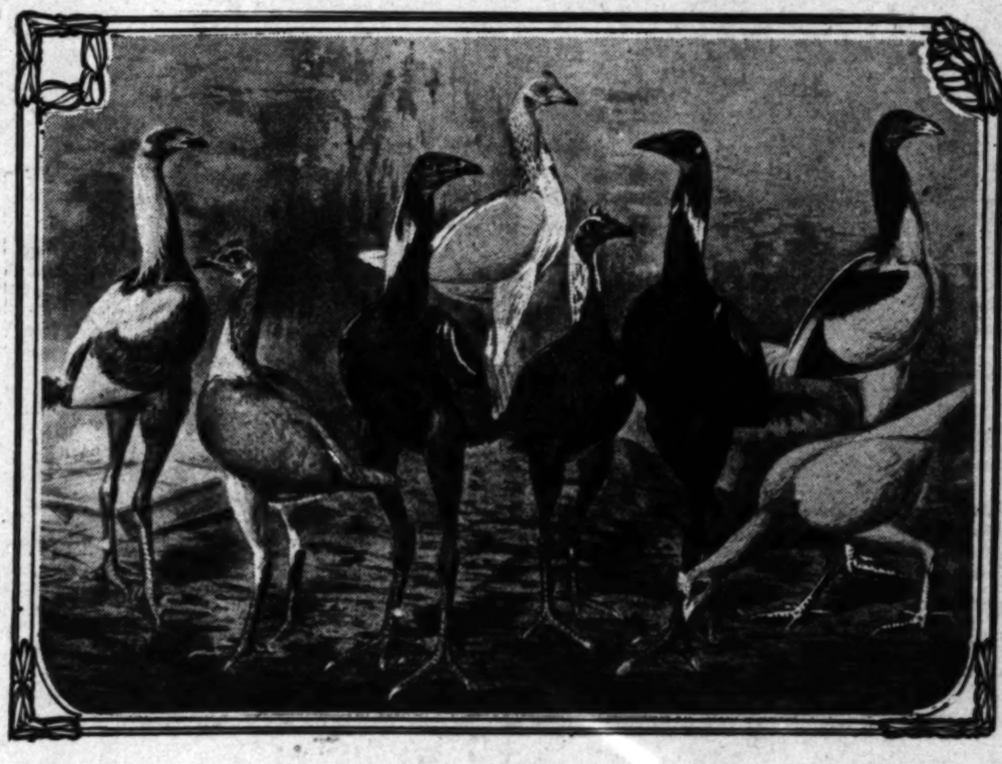
GAME BREEDS AMONG THE OLDEST IN POULTRY CULTURE.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experiences with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

STRIFE may be said to be man's normal condition, hence the division of Game breeds is among the oldest in poultry culture; indeed, they are primarily the source from which nearly all breeds have taken their inception. Game blood is an element to be reckoned with wherever poultry culture along advanced lines is a recognized industry. The wild fowl or Game breeds (mostly mongrel) of the Philippines, and the jungle fowl of India all bear a striking resemblance to the modern exhibition and Pit Games. For the most part, nearly all the standard breeds and varieties are also well represented in the Bantam classes. Among the parti-colored Games may be briefly enumerated the following:

The Black Breasted Reds, of which there are many in the Southern States, easily occupy first place, and have always been quite a feature in Southern California. In 1898 there was shown a handsome string in the local show—the finest the writer ever saw anywhere. The cocks have a deep black breast, thighs and tail; dark bay neck and saddle hackle; deep red back and wings. The B. B. R. Game Bantams possess the same color scheme in plumage. Some strains have yellow legs, others willow color.



DUBBED AND READY FOR THE FRAY

In the Brown Breasted Red Games the cocks are brown, laced or mottled with light shades on breast and thighs; dark brown on back and shoulders; brown streaked with black on neck and saddle hackle; tail and wing black.

The Pile Game is one of the prettiest in this class. Breast, thighs and tail white; shoulders red; wings bay; neck and saddle hackle deep orange, legs white, yellow or willow.

In the Duckwing Games there are two colors, yellow and white. In both kinds, cocks on breast, thighs and tail are black; the remaining divisions of their respective color schemes in plumage varying only between yellow and silver white in either kind.

Spangled Games show a body color either black, red, blue or buff, evenly spangled with white; legs yellow or black.

Games bred for the cocking pit show every variation of color from the above, the object in breeding being to get as much "fighting blood" into a single specimen as possible, irrespective of all other considerations. Where cock fighting is a recognized institution, like in the Philippines, England, old Mexico and in our Southern States, specimens from well-known fighting strains bring good prices, and are known by such terms as the "War Eagles," "Invincibles," "Terrors," etc. It is a matter of record that a celebrated fighting cock owned by Capt. Heddon of England sold for £500—about $2500—in the early part of the nineteenth century. Cocking mains were not uncommon in Southern California during the early days of American occupation. Of late years, however, it has become almost obsolete, by reason of being declared unlawful.

The Indian Game is so only in name, as it is not at all in the fighting class. As already stated in this department, this is among the finest of the table varieties. In the parti-colored variety, the cocks on breast and thighs are a lustrous green black; hackle glossy black with brownish crimson shafts; wing bow a chestnut brown with a glossy black bar. The hens are chestnut brown with lacing of medium size; legs and feet yellow.

All the Game varieties are essentially table fowl. Though laying a considerable number of eggs, they are smaller than the average in the American, Asiatic and Mediterranean classes

At the State Fair.

It is pleasant to note the sportsmanship and quality of birds shown by Robert A. Rowan at the State Fair only just closed. All told, Mr. Rowan entered 112 specimens under the care of S. Tyler, the veteran breeder and judge, of Pasadena. That this fine string made the northern breeders "sit up and take notice" is shown by the following winnings made by Mr. Rowan's birds, all of which were Southern California bred:

W. F. Black Spanish—Cock, 1 and 2; hen, 1, 2 and 3; cockerel, 1; pullet, 1 and 2.

Bearded Golden Polish—Cock, 1; hen, 1, 2 and ; cockerel, 1 and 2; pullet, 1, 2 and 3; pen, 1.

Bearded Silver Polish—Cock, 1; hen, 1: pullet, 1; cockerel, 1; pen, 1.

Silver Spangled Hamburgs—Cock, 1; hen, 1, 2 and 3; cockerel, 1 and 2; pullet, 1.

Black Hamburgs—Cock, 1; hen, 1, 2 and 3; cockerel, 1; pullet, 1 and 2.

Red Pyle Game Bantams—Cock, 1 and 2; hen, 1, 2 and 3; cockerel, 1 and 2; pullets, 1, 2 and 3; pen, 1.

Silver Sebright Bantams—Cock, 1, 2 and 3; hen, 1, 2 and 3; cockerel, 1 and 2; pullet, 1, 2 and 3; pen, 1.

W. C. W. Polish Bants—Cocks, 1, 2 and 3; cockerel, 1, 2 and 3; hens, 1, 2 and 3; pullets, 1, 2 and 3; pen, 1.

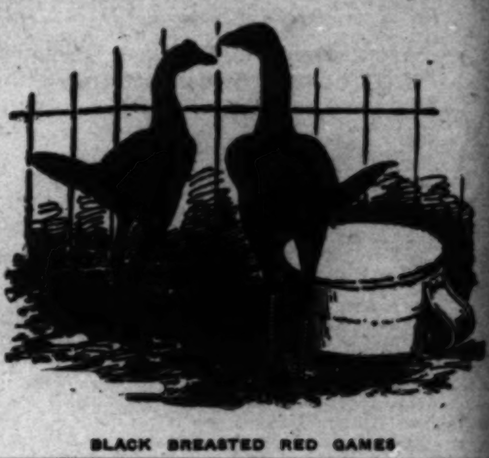
The total in money footed up to nearly $100, besides many special cups and a number of sweepstakes. This should encourage other breeders to shy their casters into the arena at the State Fair.

A Step in the Right Direction.

As was foreshadowed in this department of The Times not long since, there will be formed a branch of the American Poultry Association covering Southern California on the evening of October 8 in the assembly-room of the Chamber of Commerce on South Broadway, Los Angeles, at 7 o'clock. There is already a strong representation in the national association from south of the Tehachepi, and it is believed that this number will be materially increased at this coming meeting. This movement is fathered by such representative breeders as S. Tyler, W. H. H. Jones, Walter R. Jones, John D. Mercer and others, and possesses the hearty support and good wishes of the parent organization. Every breeder and fancier having the welfare of the industry at heart should support the movement.

A Cornish Indian Club.

It is more than possible that by the time this paragraph is read by The Times poultry readers there will have been organized by the Southern California Indian Game Club, composed of fanciers and breeders of this celebrated fowl. All told, there are upward of thirty-five people hereabouts who are now handling Indian Games, and it is the purpose of this club to increase that number as much as possible, and place on exhibition this coming winter the largest string of this breed ever seen in the southwest. Cups, medals and other trophies will be offered calculated to bring this about.



BLACK BREASTED RED GAMES

The Educational Movement.

As foreshadowed recently in The Times, the Los Angeles County Poultry Association (the largest and oldest organization of its kind on the Pacific Coast) has inaugurated a series of open meetings at which leading fanciers and breeders will present live papers and an open discussion will be invited calculated to stimulate the industry, broaden our knowledge by an interchange of opinions and experiences, and intensify the fact that when followed along intelligent lines, there is no division of our agricultural development which offers better advantages to the person of limited capital than the poultry business. Much interest is being awakened in the virtues of the American business hen, and with an unlimited market for high-grade eggs and poultry products at our very doors affording good prices, it goes without saying that the Los Angeles Poultry Association is doing a good work in exploiting the breeding and management of standard fowl in Southern California. The hall in the Chamber of Commerce should be filled to the doors by people who are interested in any way in the subject. The following programme has been provided for the evening of October 8:

The Wise Man Asketh Questions.

Edwin P. Bradbury of Santa Barbara asks the following series of questions:

1. How many hens (Black Minorcas) will a roost twenty feet long accommodate?
2. Is it better to keep twenty hens in a pen, or forty in a pen twice as large?
3. Is it wise to have the south side of a roosting pen entirely open for ventilation, with the remaining three sides airtight?
4. Is there any objection to a roosting pen made of corrugated iron, on account of its better conductibility of thermal changes?
5. Need a roosting pen be more than three feet high provided it is well ventilated?
6. Are wire baskets the best for laying nests?

roost. For Leghorns 6 to 7 inches, Wyandottes and Plymouth Rocks 7 to 9 inches, Brahmas and Cochins 8 to 10 inches. Comfort should be aimed at. In the case of Minorcas, we should place them with the Wyandottes and Rocks.

(2) It all depends. If you are following the colony plan with Leghorns purely for eggs, there is no objection to a house accommodating 40 or 50 birds. If your aim is high-grade breeding stock and exhibition birds, we should limit the number in the smaller breeds to 20 or 25; with the American class to 12 and 15; with the Asiatic to still a smaller number. In our own case with Dorkings and Plymouth Rocks we "run" about 15 to the pen.

(3) The open house has many advocates both in the East and the West. Never having used it, we cannot speak from experience. Our own houses, in use now some fourteen years, have an opening at the side a foot wide, and the full length of the house, securely wire-screened. Never having trouble with sick fowl, we have long since concluded to let well enough alone.

(4) Not that we know of, so that it be absolutely draught-proof.

(5.) No; only it would be rather awkward to clean unless you had a removable roof.

(6) Wire laying nests possess the advantage of being vermin-proof; removing old nesting material and burning it, leaves no crevice or splintered wood surfaces for mites and lice to lodge in. Nests as such possess no hidden influence calculated to induce laying hens to "shell out." Provide proper environment calculated to produce contentment and health, and Biddy will do business in almost any kind of a nest.

THE USEFULNESS OF ICEBERGS.

When an iceberg is launched upon its long journey its bottom parts are barnacled with sand, boulders and other detritus gathered from the land surface over which it has made its tedious march to the sea. This burden is gradually cast off as it melts while drifting down along our continental seaboard. As a result of the deposits thus made through countless centuries, combined with the products of erosion, carried seaward by the rivers, the sea bed for many miles off shore has been gradually filled up, creating those vast, submerged plateaus, known as "banks," which extend from Labrador to the Bay of Fundy and form the breeding grounds of innumerable shoals of cod, herring and other valuable food fishes. In this way the bergs have performed an economic service of incalculable value, laying the foundation for one of the world's most important productive industries and affording a means of livelihood to those hardy bands of "captains courageous" who each year reap the harvests of the sea. The bergs serve a further economic purpose in that to their tempering influence are largely due the climatic conditions prevailing over a great part of the interior of North America.—[Alfred Sidney Johnson, in World Today.

QUEER REMEDIES.

Of the strange remedies employed at various periods and in various lands a writer says: "The magical powers of some of the animals used to cure sickness are believed to be increased in proportion as there is mystery in their modes of life. Toads and other batrachians come under this category, and hence lizards which have been dried and neatly stretched upon bamboo splinters are greatly in demand in China and other countries where the primitive medical man still holds sway. In Japan the skin of a snake is still supposed to be a sovereign cure for abdominal pains. Turtles, too, are regarded with great awe in China, and so are tigers' bones and carbonized monkeys' skulls, which are prepared by putting them into clay vessels exposed to heat until the crania are thoroughly calcined. Birds are also carbonized for medicinal purposes, and the nests of certain swallows, made out of the gelatinous substances of seaweeds, partly digested and disgorged, are believed in that country to be most invigorating as medicine for the sick.—[Chicago News.

MOURNING VAGARIES.

"Mourning is not what it used to be," said an undertaker. "In fact, I expect to see it go out altogether in the next century or so. Perhaps it is just as well. No young widow, I've heard say, can wear mourning without looking like an adventuress.

"But in the seventeenth century widows not only wore mourning, but their bed curtains were black, and the sheets and pillow cases had a black edging, like stationery. Even their lingerie had a mourning band.

"In Italy, the nobles of the Renaissance carried their mourning as far as their knives and forks, which had ebony instead of ivory handles.

"Gray cloth superseded black for mourning in the eighteenth century. The fashion lasted about twenty years. Then it died out, as it had sprung up, mysteriously."

SONNET AFTER WORDSWORTH.

Our friends are too much with us; late and soon
Chatting and gabbling, we lay waste our powers:
Little we see in daylight that is ours;
We have given our time away, a priceless boon!
Our mornings on committees up till noon;
Our friends that will be coming at all hours,
Then luncheons, paying visits, teas and "showers,"
And dinners, far from "glimpses of the moon;"
And still we talk—My faith, I'd rather be
A baby with a tongue as yet unworn;
Or dumb as any fish that swims the sea;
So might I live, not babble, night and morn;
Might read my books, and think my thoughts, and see
The good around us, waiting to be born.

A Noble Woman.

MRS. THOMAS F. RYAN'S UNOSTENTATIOUS PHILANTHROPY.

From New York Herald.

IT has been said there are two classes of wealthy women in New York—the lavish spenders of money and the coldly calculating money accumulators. There is a third type, little known to the reading public, practically a stranger to the women of indolence and fashion and equally foreign to the world's market in Wall street—a woman who spends a million dollars every year, and sometimes three times that amount, in practical, unostentatious aid of human kind, whose everyday life marks the betterment of some other life. Such a woman is Mrs. Thomas Fortune Ryan.

Mrs. Ryan is unique among the women of her kind in New York, in that philanthropy has not become a fad in the latter years of her wealth. The only difference lies in the wider scope of work made possible by the increase of her husband's fortune. Her generous heart has not changed since the days when "Tom" Ryan was a clerk at $20 a week. Down in the Jesuit Fathers' parish, in Sixteenth street, there are men and women today who recount the munificence of "Tom" Ryan's wife thirty years ago, when her modest home was in a five-room apartment, then called "half a house." The world at large knows Mrs. Ryan as a church builder and the wife of one of the greatest financiers of these times. To those who are her friends these two distinctions are forgotten. She has a marked individuality.

Up in the big old-fashioned sitting-room of her Fifth-avenue home, where the greater part of her life is spent, Mrs. Ryan's friends find her a woman of old-fashioned heart and new-fashioned mind. The pictures, the chintz-covered chairs, the music box, the knitting needles and the darning ball speak of the simplicity of her nature, while the up-to-date flat-top desk, over in the south corner, with its neat rolls of files and its telephone, tell of another side to her nature. These two extremes of the modest home-loving housewife, and the twentieth century woman of affairs are constantly meeting in the life of Mrs. Ryan. Many times a day the click of the ivory knitting needles gives way to the call of an important business message by telephone. Between the stitches round a baby sock or a tiny hood, churches are built, hospitals planned and aid given to individual distress.

The strict business rules which dominate the life of Thomas F. Ryan play no small part in that of his wife. Big-hearted woman that she is, ever with her hand in some good work, she is a keen judge and rarely imposed upon. She possesses a fine sense of discrimination, and personally considers every appeal. Unlike many women of wealth, a call for help is not a tiresome bore to Mrs. Ryan. She counts her friends those who bring to her notice others of her fellow-beings whose backs are unfitted for the burden, ill in body or mind, or in any way afflicted.

No public subscription has ever carried the name of Mrs. Thomas Fortune Ryan. She does not often give to public collections, and it is said that when she has done so, with the gift went the stipulation that her name be not used. This reticence is not affectation. Publicity is Mrs. Ryan's bête noire.

"Little Things" to Mrs. Ryan.

When Mrs. Ryan witnessed a disastrous railroad wreck near her country residence at Suffern and saw the inadequate provision for the ill and wounded, she built and endowed a fine hospital there. When a reporter went up to cover the story, Mrs. Ryan said:

"Why should anything be written about this? They needed a hospital and I was able to provide it. It is nothing more than I should have done, so why talk about it? Say that they have a hospital, but don't mention my name. Go out and find some woman who does hard work six days every week and on the seventh gives her time and her strength to some less fortunate woman, and this for no compensation. There are hundreds of such women in New York—thousands of them. Now that story would do more good and be more interesting than to just print a yarn about my doing this little thing."

It is always "a little thing" that Mrs. Ryan does. Be it to build a cathedral, a church, a hospital or mission. It is "a little thing" to find employment for men and women who have others depending upon their efforts; it is "a little thing" "to make work" for women who are unfitted by the progress of the day to meet the demands of present conditions. It is "a little thing" to send an ill woman or a delicate boy out into God's country, where the air is undefiled, the food nourishing and the strain of work is not.

I have seen poor needlewomen taking to Mrs. Ryan fine altar linens or baby clothes, which she pays them well to make, and when they turned away from Fifth avenue they carried a liberal wage and the value of their work in good tonics, olive oils and some of the choice fruits or expensive jellies—those little things the poor cannot always afford.

Many a shop girl in New York has been driven to No. 60 Fifth avenue in Mrs. Ryan's fine carriage and gone back to her more humble home richer for the interest of Mrs. Ryan. On her shopping tours Mrs. Ryan's kindly eyes wander keenly behind the long counters in search of those women with the tired, stooping shoulders and a feverish color; such a one is never passed in silence, and either to the girl herself or through the manager of the store Mrs. Ryan offers a chance to fight the disease, and there is never but one stipulation—"that nothing be said about it."

Out in the dry sand desert of Arizona, where nature has proved that she is the greatest doctor for tuberculosis, there are whole colonies of "lungers" supported by the munificence of Mrs. Ryan. During her many visits into that arid section, where both of the boys she has lost went seeking health, Mrs. Ryan saw the dire need for such work. Many afflicted men and women find themselves stranded in that country where living is costly and work in the beneficial section very scarce. In such places Mrs. Ryan has established camps or aided those already organized. No movement that makes for a better fight against the spread of tuberculosis or toward a possible cure goes unaided by Mrs. Ryan.

One afternoon as she sat knitting a baby coat in her big home-like sitting-room, this subject was opened. The click of the ivory needles stopped, and her eyes filled with tears as Mrs. Ryan said:

"It seems to me there is no other physical affliction so terrible in this world. It just makes my heart bleed to see the young men and women of our country cut down in the very youth by this dread disease. I have seen the blight touch young mothers with little babies at their sides, and with so much work yet to do. And I have seen old mothers watch the life go out of their boys or their only girls—the children in whom lay the joy of their living—and yet nothing could be done. We have had to stand by and watch a life that was so dear to us slip away by inches as the days passed. I just can't talk about it."

And after another pause, the ivory needles slipped on again weaving out a soft, fine garment for some poor woman's child.

Mrs. Ryan is never idle, and her fine white hands work ceaselessly. Many a humble hard-working woman in New York has proudly dressed her baby in clothes that were made by the rich Mrs. Ryan.

Mrs. Ryan is interested in wage earners of every class, and there are few fields of labor in this country she has not aided in some way. Several years ago she was in a great hurry to get telephone connection with a business office. It was at the rush hour, and the Gramercy office was very busy. Mrs. Ryan heard the weary voice of a tired operator come over the wire: "I can't get them now; I'll try again and ring you."

That afternoon Mrs. Ryan called the manager's office. "What happens to ill operators?" she asked.

"Why, they go home," was the surprised answer.

"But don't you take care of them when they get ill? Most of those girls or their families need what they make. Don't you take care of them at all when they get ill?"

No. The telephone company doesn't take care of its employés—it couldn't afford to do that. But before that day's sun went down Mrs. Ryan had permanently endowed four rooms at St. Vincent's Hospital for ill or worn-out telephone operators, and the managers of all the offices were notified that this had been done. As usual, Mrs. Ryan's name was not mentioned. In the same manner three rooms were endowed for ill nurses, who, spending their lives in the care of the ill, are not cared for gratis at any of the New York hospitals when their own health breaks.

Wide Scope of Her Charities.

But these are only a few of the small and unknown charities of this woman, who gives away $1,000,000 every year. As a philanthropist her work has been far-reaching. She has built more churches and missions for the worship of God, more schools, orphan asylums and hospitals than any other living person.

To Virginia, her native State, she has given the finest cathedral in the South—the Cathedral of the Sacred Heart, at Richmond. In addition to this, she has given more than $5,000,000 worth of schools, churches and hospitals to the Dominion State. New York has been another favored field for her work.

For nearly a quarter of a century Mrs. Ryan has had one or another of her sons at Georgetown University. Her youngest son is now completing a scientific course there, and to commemorate this she has given an $18,000 gymnasium, one of the finest university dining halls in the country, thoroughly equipped, and several additions to the university library. She has also endowed scholarships there, and in many other universities, where ambitious boys without means can be given the best advantages the colleges offer.

Mrs. Ryan is a very devout Roman Catholic, and has received from both Pope Leo XIII and the present pontiff, Pius X, many privileges and ecclesiastical decorations. She has been made a member of the Roman society "For Church and State." She has received within the last two years the Cross of Honor and two medals from Pius X in token of the great work she has done for the church.

Mrs. Ryan has also the privilege of a chapel in her private car, the Père Marquette, which honor has been extended to only one other person, the Queen of Spain. In her many tours Mrs. Ryan has always had service in her car, and any railroad employés or others desiring to attend mass were welcomed. She has a private chapel in her Fifth-avenue home, and one of the finest private chapels in the United States attached to her residence at Suffern. When other women of wealth are having their beauty sleeps or recuperating from a night's pleasure in the early hours of the morning, Mrs. Ryan is up and about, and the first hour of the sunrise finds her beginning her day with the service of God in her chapel.

Farming in California—The Land and Its Products.

CONDUCTED BY J. W. JEFFREY, AGRICULTURAL EDITOR.

Tree Doctors Abroad.

I RECENTLY had the favor of seeing two orchards treated for the same disease and separated only by the property line. The one from which we draw our lesson today was "doctored" by a know-it-all who had applied a patent dope said by one of his victims to be made of lamp-black and crude oil. This fellow charged $2.50 an acre for his work, and threw in a lot of mysterious reference to the wonderful discovery he had made in a field where both common and scientific investigation had utterly failed. Of course the gum disease did not yield to artistic boasting, nor in this case to daubing on of a "remedy." No cutting away of diseased bark was necessary with this cure-all, yet the gum was oozing out at every crack in this drying dope of the doctor's. The last state of these trees was worse than the first. If he wishes to treat any more orchards in that neighborhood he should in safety to himself use the absent method.

Late Peaches.

FOUR or five people have brought me samples of new seedling peaches, either coming up by chance in a dooryard or selected by seed from some other tree. Of course these chance varieties are late, and that is just what commends them. There is no reason why California should not grow September peaches with as fine flavor as those produced a month earlier. In fact, the most profitable peach orchard in Los Angeles county is also the latest in ripening I know of. Did you ever notice that peaches coming after the main crop is gone are sought after more ardently than the earlier fruit, and command fine prices if the quality is good. I have had samples of a new seedling grown at San Pedro, which is worth further propagation. Sometimes a really meritorious variety of fruit "just growed" and equals the best efforts of scientific propagation.

Deteriorating Cantaloupes.

CANTALOUPE growers are alarmed about the failure of the Rocky Ford cantaloupe. The fact is not denied by the Colorado specialists in this line that this melon is not so uniformly good as it was a few years ago. We all agree that it has lost much of the sweet, spicy flavor that once set it into a class by itself among all cantaloupes. Allowing something for green picking and careless marketing, there is yet no explanation of the loss of quality in the old favorite. The call of the Coloradoans should be heeded if the melon is to continue as one of our great crops, and a systematic effort should be made to breed it back to perfection again if it has deteriorated as claimed by its heaviest producers. Senator Frink the originator of this melon, in one of his tours of California told me the particulars of its origination. It was the result of years of selection, and there seems no logical reason why it could not be restored by the same process.

Big Corn Crop.

THE United States will have to "wiggle along" with only 2,750,000,000 bushels of corn this season. We are a quarter of a billion short of last year's crop, for which the farmers received $1,166,000,000. When we think of the incalculable number of acres and men employed in the production of the corn crop, the achievement per man does not compare with the results of orange growing. One of my friends who carries a note-book filled with field notes says that the average output of oranges per man employed is worth $2500. I have no means of disproving this, or of disputing his data which are given to show that 12,000 men are engaged in the cultural work of our citrus fruit groves. But the above corn statistics show what the farmers were paid, while the $30,000,000 orange crop represents the freight, packing expenses and sales cost. However, the great army of corn raisers seem to have received but 80 times the amount actually paid to the citrus fruit growers who cultivate but a few thousand acres of land.

Eureka.

REPEAL the pure (fruit) food regulations, burn the sulphuring-houses and possess yourselves in peace, for it has been discovered that fruit can be bleached with no possibility of discovery by the experts Secretary Wilson may have at hand. The process is simple and secret. Bore a hole in your apricot tree near the surface, of the earth, fill it with sulphur and the fumes will be carried up through the trunk and through the fruit, bleaching it to a finish. Some of the smart farmers of the East are bleaching their apples-to-be-dried in this way, and no pure-food inspector could possibly prove that sulphur had been used, even by analysis. Absurd to the limit, is it not? And no California fruit grower could work with such such a fraud. Few of them could, I am sure; yet enough foolish men are found in our State to make a profitable field for several of these cheating schemes.

Eucalyptus Culture.

AN inquiry comes from South Pasadena regarding the cultivation of the eucalyptus. A book is in print, published by the Department of Agriculture upon this subject. It may be had by addressing the Superintendent of Public Documents, Washington, D. C. Much practical information might be obtained by visiting the Bixby ranch, near Long Beach, where planting has been done on a large scale. Without going into details regarding species to be tried, the inquirer may safely put out the E. globulus. The possibilities of the eucalyptus are so great in this section that a compilation of experiences and general information upon its cultivation is greatly needed.

Coast Concords.

A CORRESPONDENT at Santa Ana inquires as to the truth of the claim that the California Concord grape is proof against the Anaheim disease. A nurseryman at Santa Ana is offering this variety for sale, saying that the berries are twice the size of the eastern Concord. The grape referred to as the California originated with Mr. Taft of Sawtelle, who has been producing fine fruit from his vines for years and has sold thousands of vines in this part of the State. The vine is characterized by the immensity of its leaves, some of which I have measured being 16 inches in diameter; by the large size of the berries and their typical Concord flavor. It is well worth planting for home use or for the markets.

As to the immunity of this variety from the Anaheim disease, I do not believe any one knows. The grape has been on trial only about six years in Mr. Taft's grounds. I have never heard of one of the vines having this disease. However, this variety may be subject to the malady even if no specimen had yet been affected. The Concord is an American grape. The American species from which it came is known as Vitis Labrusca, or fox grape of the East. It may be safely assumed that the California Concord will prove more resistant than the European types, for I have never seen its wild progenitor affected with any disease whatever. The Concord grape is perhaps the most marvelous American fruit. Coming from a worthless wild grape, it has such merit that it is universally grown in the East wherever grapes are produced.

Quarantine Value.

IT is now conceded by the most conservative and even obstinate Californians that the most radical quarantine measures have not been too rigid for the exclusion of foreign pests. Oroville has lately had an awakening through the discovery of the worst citrus-fruit pest now no doubt largely colonized in that locality to an alarming extent. There has also been an awakening all over the State among the fruit growers, professional entomologists and horticultural officials that may be had to the exclusion of this pest from localities not at present infested, which we hope includes practically every citrus district in the commonwealth. The awakening has not yet come upon the officials of a score of counties into which the white fly may be imported direct from Florida. Continual inspection for other pests for years and the special search for the white fly since its discovery at Marysville have made it reasonably certain that this pest has not become established in the orchards of Southern California, yet in some of the counties here the quest has not been as thorough as the peril demands. The only way that the future may be safeguarded is for the growers of every county to insist upon the enforcement of every local and State quarantine measure. Only through the appointment of vigilant men, the systematizing of rules requiring every freight and express office to hold all incoming plants and fruits for examination and the rejection of every lot not brought in legally, can bring reasonable safety to our greatest fruit industry. If this is not done, the danger of future outbreaks of the fly will be imminent and continual. All the counties now properly organized have made inspection more rigid, if possible, and held the rules in more careful enforcement. If the fly colonies can be exterminated as fast as discovered, the advent of the pest may be a beneficial warning that will cause the State to rëenforce its protective measures and cause more effective guardianship all along the line.

Speltz or Emmer.

THE grain known as speltz is actually emmer, a species of wheat. It is believed to be a native of Europe and to have been cultivated since prehistoric times. The kernel is held in a tough, outer husk that is not removed by threshings, consequently is not a milling cereal. It is not a grain that is desirable to grow in humid climates, as other small grains can be more profitably grown. Its feeding value is less than barley or oats, according to analysis, but no extended feeding tests have been made with the grain to determine its exact feeding value.

It is easily raised, requiring about the same cultivation as barley or wheat. It is drilled in at the rate of six to eight pecks per acre, depending on soil, climate, etc. It is very hardy, resisting attacks of smut and rust much better than the common cereals, and whenever grown in this country has shown itself to be a good yielder. It is a very desirable crop in regions of lessened rainfall and where early frost is liable.—[Hoard's Dairyman.

Treatment of Gum Disease.

I AM watching, with others, a large attempt to eradicate gummosis from a lemon grove by the use of beeswax, instead of the more common remedy. The orchard contains the most general infection I have seen, yet the trees are typical in vigor and fruitfulness with all this disease. It is the true, bacterial trouble if it has been demonstrated that gummosis is infectious. The treatment consisted in first removing with a drawing-knife all the dead bark and diseased tissue. Then an application of hot beeswax was put on with a brush and the work thus completed. This process is simple and is possibly in use elsewhere, but the results in this case promise to be notable. Under the wax the cambium is forming so rapidly and completely that in many instances the healing is already assured. Organization of new bark is so evident that the transparent wax is assuming a green line all over the grove. No cracking or scaling off of the beeswax can be found on any of the trees. This experiment is in charge of Mr. William Wood, and if the success now seemingly so complete holds good, it will justify a complete report.

In looking over this grove a few days ago, I could not find a particle of exuding gum. Whether this was due to the most complete removal of the diseased tissues or to the use of the hot wax could not be determined. If the germ theory of orange and lemon gummosis is true it may be that the hot, impervious application has destroyed, or at least isolated every bacterium, leaving the cambium material to bind up the knife wounds without renewed attack from the disorganizing bacteria which remains no matter how carefully the diseased portions may be cut away. One very noticeable point in these cases is that new bark is forming all around the woody portions that had become blackened by the attack, thus hastening the healing process without awaiting the slow process where the germs may not be removed.

Interesting Experiment.

TWO lemon trees were entirely denuded of their trunk bark for a distance of about one foot. All the cambium tissue was scraped away from the wound on one tree, and the other was left without scraping after the bark was removed. Both trees were healthy, but have to be removed to make place for building improvement. This trial is to determine by next Februrary whether either of these trees will survive, both being painted with a coating of wax where the bark formerly grew. Six weeks ago the trees were "deadened," and they both stand now in complete color, vigor and beauty. There is this difference, however. The tree that was not scraped has formed a coating of new bark under the wax, and the other has made no sign of healing over. Soon the latter will die, if it observes current opinion, though I have seen forest trees in the East grow slowly for years entirely destitute of bark upon the trunk for a distance of a foot or so.

Those who come from a "woodsy" country know that in clearing away forest trees the mere removal of the bark will not kill for years with some species, such as the black gum, oaks and elms. To hasten death the woodman cuts through the new wood in a circle around the trunk, and the tree dies the first year. These lemon tree-experiments are enlightening in one respect. They show that if the inner bark cells are not disturbed in removing the bast and dead bark. Much freedom is given in cutting away the diseased cells without even temporary injury to the tree. It encourages thoroughness in such removal, as it is better to lose a great deal of healthy tissue than to risk leaving some of the disease.

Bird Laws.

I HAVE been held to account in a communication a little too warm to publish for the good of my reputation, because these columns do not advocate the protection of all birds, under all circumstances and in every location. I come so near a general endorsement of bird-protective measures that there is no occasion for criticism or controversy. The former cannot be prevented, and should not be, but controversy may be shut out where it would air only extreme views. If facts may be stated, however, that give the public the opportunity of judging, it should not be an ivitation to heated statements. It is a fact that birds are not greatly beneficial to the orange growers of Southern California. If they destroy any insects it is liable to be scale-killing insects. They do not inhabit the orange grove as they do the home grounds where they belong and where their natural food is, and should be protected. A bird's nest in an orange tree is out of place, like a spider's web in a parlor. At home from other trees every time the bird catches a predaceous fly or an inoffensive worm the bird often brings from a distance the worst scale infections within its zone of forage, and causes the grower untold expenses thereby.

Wherever there are garden crops, deciduous fruits, grain or berries, birds successfully combat the insect rivals of the farmer, even if some species are a bit exacting upon small fruits. With the exception of citrus crops, it may be said that the improvement of agricultural methods and the intensive use of the land stimulate the development of predatory insects that may be destroyed by birds. This is the field for birds, and the flower gardens and the wildwood form delightful and harmless habitat. But bird protection does not mean bird culture in an orange grove. It is not cruel to tear a bird's nest from an orange tree before brooding time. It may drive the owners to a more congenial place and protect the whole grove from scale invasion. If a few birds are killed by fumigation, it is not a case for the police.

Rose Locations.

WHERE the yard, grounds or garden admits, the bed or beds should be to the rear, or at some point where it is not a conspicuous feature; for harsh as it sounds, the plant which produces the queen of flowers when not in bloom, and well grown, is largely divested of foliage and is then a most unlovely object. As this condition will prevail for nearly half the year, the reason for the seclusion of the rose garden is obvious. The bed or beds should be planned to be remote from grass or any plant requiring constant irrigation.

It is imperative to ascertain that there is no immediate neighborhood drainage which may carry the water to the rose plant below the surface. If this occurs it will defeat the end in view, and render void any precautions the grower may take in regard to surface watering.

When space admits it is wise to split up the rose garden into three, four or more isolated beds, separated by considerable uncultivated areas; then by prolonging the flowering season of one plot, successional and continuous flowers may be had throughout the year. The separate bed system applies as well with a dozen roses as with a hundred; the principle involved, i. e., the securing of periods of rest, is the desired end—be the scale of operations large or small.

Any full sun exposure will answer, even a southern one; provided the south aspect is not divided by a wall, fence or building to radiate an excess of reflected heat. To this rule we make the exception that a few roses flourish better with exposure to the sun for only half the day—preferably in the morning.—[Gardening in California.

Wizard of Fruits.

THE following from an eastern journal shows how loosely writers handle subjects of which they know little. See if you can separate exaggeration from fact:

"Luther Burbank has attracted a vast amount of attention because he has attempted and to a considerable extent succeeded in doing something quite novel at least in this country," says The Technical World Magazine. "He is breeding up plant fruit and vegetable life. He is the godfather of the sugar prune, a giant in comparison to its ancestors, the French prune, of which California produced 150,000,000 pounds of the dried product in a year. The sugar prune ripens earlier and is of immense commercial value. Burbank is also the maker of the seedless plum, which he accomplished by crossing two varieties of the Prunus Triflora. The white blackberry is another of the wizard of horticulture's triumphs. Sixty-five thousand bushels were used in tests before he developed this phenomenon. He has given to the arid deserts a new species of grass which will grow on the plains without water. He converted the cactus into an edible plant. The wild potato of South America also received his attention. From a single eye of this potato he developed 120 hybridizations and grew a large tuber of good quality. Mr. Burbank has made endless experiments with the potato. He keeps on his farms at Santa Rosa no less than 10,000 varieties for experimental purposes. He has grown potatoes of every shape and color, round, long, short, square, pure white, pink, crimson, purple and yellow. Burbank potato seedlings have been shipped all over the world. The late Cecil Rhodes planted 10,000 of his seedless plum trees in South Africa, until now they have multiplied into the millions."

Florida Celery.

A DOZEN years ago, all of this delicious vegetable obtainable during the winter months, when most in demand, was grown in the summer and fall, and either banked or put in cold storage, and under the most favorable conditions, a large waste resulted. What was worse, the beautiful foliage of the plant, which adds so much to the well-set table, and not a little to the relish of this incomparable vegetable, was lost.

About that time, both California and Florida began to grow it, and as fast as dealer and consumer could be educated, or brought in touch with our product, a market was developed. Hence, California, in celery as in oranges, is our chief competitor, though we have hardly had a contest, as her crop has practically been out of the market when ours comes in. They plant in the spring, and harvest and ship in the fall and winter; while we have, as yet, only planted in the fall and shipped in the spring. I can safely say we grow a finer quality. Theirs, like their oranges, being larger, coarser, dryer, has more fiber, and lacks the finer texture and flavor of ours. This, in both products, is attributable, doubtless, to their drier climate. In 1301 I sent a crate to California by express, and after being one week on the road and another week in refrigeration, the principal celery grower of California wrote me that "if Florida could grow such celery we have a bright future."

The question as to whether we can successfully compete with California is most pertinent, because if we would indefinitely expand our production of celery and a market, it must be done by prolonging our season; and from my own experience, I am assured we can begin shipping six weeks earlier than we do, say January 1. I have grown it by Thanksgiving, and as the market lasts until June, we can have five months market. For two months of this time we must invade markets at present occupied exclusively by California. Can we compete at a profit? I say yes. First, as above, our celery is superior; second, from the best information obtainable, they grow one carload to the acre; we grow from two to four; third, they have to cross the continent to reach our best markets, and, with a "square deal" and the long run, must pay more freight and refrigeration charges.

As to how large an area on which celery can be grown in Florida to such perfection as to meet competition in the markets is yet to be determined. Our success at Sanford is largely attributed to the well-nigh perfect system of drainage and irrigation, coupled with a high state of cultivation, and a liberal use of human, as well as commercial fertilizers. But these do not seem to be entirely sufficient, for, as yet, our successful operations have been confined to the south side of Lake Monroe. This statement is emphasized by the fact that two of our most successful growers tried for several years, on the northwest side of the lake, with every facility to grow celery, without success.—[Exchange.

Planting Wastes.

THE Forest Service at Washington is issuing a lot of little leaflets, each descriptive of a tree species. If you have a waste acre, or ten of them, drop a line to Gifford Pinchot, chief forester, and you will get some advice that may be helpful. Part of your taxes—the indirect ones—go to support the government forest service. It is a most admirable institution, which ought to be twice as big as it is; but if you have a patch of land which should be in trees and which isn't, you ought to decide to plant it, and then go after the government and get at least your share of return from your forestry taxes. And the Forest Service can tell you that tree planting does pay, not only on waste land, but even on good land, where other crops could be grown. How does the following statement of the growing of catalpa posts and poles on the Yaggy plantation near Hutchinson, Kan., strike you? Catalpa may not be the most suitable tree for planting in your section, although it has a very wide range, but it is part of the business of the Forest Service to assist every farmer to know just which is the most profitable tree for his climate and land. In 1890 Mr. Yaggy planted eighty acres of catalpas in rich soil. During the next twelve years the total cost of the project, including rent of land, planting, cultivation and even marketing, was $56.54 an acre. The value of the crop, however, was $315.81 an acre, a net return of $258.67, or an average annual return of $21.55 per acre, and with very little work or worry. Catalpa posts and poles are the longest lasting, according to government foresters, of any wood in the country, and they are worth more today than they were in 1902.

Low Pruning.

HORTICULTURIST G. T. POWELL is working along lines which may need to become generally adopted for the orchards of the future. He is working for a tree not more than sixteen to twenty feet in height, and working to this end along two lines. One is the use of the regular dwarf apple tree, the other by setting standard trees and keeping them low-headed by pruning. It is well known that an apple tree may be kept low down by branching close to the ground at the start and heading in the tall branches every few years. The process might shorten the life of the tree, but it would save many dollars in harvesting and spraying. For similar reasons it is no longer desirable to set fruit in locations hard to get at, such as steep hillsides, very rocky land or along fence rows or walls. Mr. Powell finds the cost of picking apples from high trees is nearly three times that of harvesting them from the low-headed trees, and the loss from fruit blowing off the trees is much less from the low-growing orchard.

Potato Soil.

HOW many of our farmers have found that immense crops of potatoes can be grown after alfalfa or clover? The reason is plain. These latter plants not only secure nitrogen from the air to help their own growth, but leave a residue in the ground to help the growth of other plants. There is a special reason why the presence of these stored nitrates helps the yield of potatoes. Nitrogen causes vigorous growth of the tops of plants. Sometimes these tops are too vigorous for the production of seeds. Hence, where too much nitrogen is used grains like wheat and oats will not head well, the growth goes to the stalks and leaves rather than to the seeds in the heads. But this will not apply to potatoes, for the tubers are not the seeds of potatoes. The seeds of potato vines grow where the bloom appears. When we plant potatoes we do not plant seed at all, notwithstanding we call them seed potatoes. The tubers we plant are neither seed nor a part of the root of potato vines. I know we are apt to think of them as part of the root system, but they are not. Botanically considered, the tubers are a part of the top, and are never found on the true root system, but grow from the axils of the leaves. Percival, in his Agricltural Botany, makes this statement: "That the potatoes are thickened pieces of stems is seen from a study of their origin; the rhizomes, of which they are merely the ends, arise in a normal manner in the axils of the leaves below the soil, and although they occur under ground, they have no connection with the root system of the plant" (page 441.) This explains why old alfalfa fields give such enormous yields of potatoes. The nitrogen left in the soil makes a vigorous growth of the tops of which the tubers are a part, but very few true seeds are produced and sometimes not any.—[The Ranch.

To Kill Slugs.

THE so-called slugs that skeletonize the leaves of the cherry, plum and pear trees and rose bushes during the summmer are all comparatively easy to destroy.

As the slugs devour the surface tissue of the leaves in each case, they may be killed by a thorough application of any of the arsenical poisons, such as Paris green, London purple, or arsenate of lead. Upon low plants, it is equally as well to mix the dry poisons in twenty times their own weight of common flour and then dust them upon the plants through a cheesecloth sack held in the hand.

In cases of the fruits, especially cherries, where it is not safe to use the above poisons, white hellebore powder may be used instead. If applied as a spray put three ounces of the powder in one gallon of water; as a dust, it may be useed without dilution in a cheesecloth sack and a light application made. The best time to apply the hellebore is towards evening.

The slugs can be removed from cherry, pear and plum trees by thoroughly sifting fine road dust, or freshly slacked lime over the foliage in the middle of a warm day, when the slugs are upon the upper side of the leaves.

Begin in time, be thorough, and do not let the slugs destroy your trees or roses.—[Stock Journal.

Timely Notes on Beauty Spots.

IF your lawn is larger than you can care for properly, plan to have it of suitable size next year, by filling in with hardy, thrifty growers that will take care of themselves.

Don't neglect to drop a few seeds of perennials in the bare places this month for bloomers next year. Seedlings cost but little, while plants are expensive. Many beautiful things can be raised from a package of mixed seeds of perennials.

Now is a good time to plan changes in the border and the flower garden, as one can see the mistakes made in planting the tall growers in front of the low ones; in grouping ill-matched plants and mixing inharmonious colors. Keep a note-book and pencil in hand.

In arranging the home lot, whether for fruit, shade or permanent, plant the tallest growers well to the rear, grading down to the lowest, or creeping things, letting the rows run east to west, that all may have the sunshine.' They can thus be seen to the best advantage, and prove a joy to the beholder.—[Floral Magazine.

TEMPERANCE STOKERS.

The stokers of the Lusitania get no grog. Grog, indeed, has been practically banished from the allowance of the ocean greyhound's stoker. It used to be thought that only grog kept the stoker alive, but now an opposite belief maintains.

Stokers work four-hour shifts in a temperature running from 120 to 160 degrees. This heat burns them like the sun; their faces are perpetually red, as though they had just returned from the seashore; and if they eat and sleep abundantly, and if they also let grog alone, it is claimed that their work is healthy, that they may live to a ripe old age, and that they will be immune to colds and to consumption.

A stoker worked like a lion when under grog's influence, he did not feel the heat of the stoke hole at all; but this alcoholic exhilaration passed off in half an hour, leaving the man very weak and dispirited, a ready prey to disease.

Stokers were peculiarly liable to drunkenness under the grog system. In their case, as in the case of cooks, intense heat seemed to give them an unnatural craving for alcohol. But drunkenness, since the grog's abolition has become rarer and rarer among them. On nearly all liners, from the Lusitania down, the stokers are, at least during the voyage, total abstainers.

THE NAIAD'S KISS.

I knelt by a brook in a mountainous wold
Where the waters leap downward in fold upon fold;
I thought of wild Pan as it chuckled along
With a lilt and a song and a catch of a song.

The cool of the hills threaded sweet in my veins,
As the green of the mold sweeps along in the lanes
When the city lies dead in the dust 'neath the sun,
And the heart hears the call where the merry brooks run.

So I knelt by the brook and I drank of its flow,
'Twas as sweet to my lips as the murmuring low
Of the winds when they soothingly sift through the corn
At the still sullen time of a summery morn.

I lifted my face from the shimmering cool,
And I saw smiling up through the lymph of the pool
The face of a Naiad, a shy little miss,
And her lips were wreathed round with the birth of a kiss.

Food Preservatives—Sulphuring Dried Fruit.

A RECENT dispatch from Urbana, where is located the State University of Illinois, announced that another fool investigation is to be made, for the purpose of testing whether food preservatives are injurious to health. A "saltpeter squad" of young men is going into action, for a year. It is further announced that the cost of the experiment is to be paid by the American Packers' Association, which hopes to demonstrate that saltpeter is not injurious, as a meat preservative. Unless it believes it has a pull on the investigation committee, the association is wasting its money, for a fair test can have only one result. When Prof. Wiley made a similar test, in regard to the use of boracic acid, the editor criticised it, as a foolish waste of time and money. Of course, in Prof. Wiley's bulky report, he could only sum up the result that such preservatives are injurious, even in small amounts. From another point of view, it is inhuman to permit young men to subject themselves for another year to the use of such poison—slow but sure poison—which may render some of them invalids for life.

When will people learn the simple truth that what tends to delay decomposition outside of the body must necessarily interfere with digestion within the body?

The preservation of food is an old practice. In the earlier processes, use was made of wood smoke, vinegar, spices, salt sugar and drying. All these, except the last named are more or less injurious, although not nearly so injurious as the use of chemical compounds, since introduced. Sterilization and cold storage were introduced later. These also are objectionable. In 1874 salicylic acid came into general use. It was found to be detrimental to the digestive secretions. Then came, about ten years ago, benzoic acid and benzoate of soda. Gradually, these new preservatioves were attacked, until they are now classed by authorities equally as injurious, if not more so, than salicylic acid.

In an article on "The Preparation of Fruits and Vegetables, With and Without Artificial Preservatives," by Sebastian Mueller, one of the world's leading chemists, and a member of the H. J. Heinz Company of Pittsburgh, extensive manufacturer of food products, published in "What-to-Eat," for August, he says:

"During an eight months' trip, in 1906, through some of the European countries, I had an opportunity to study the food laws in different countries, and especially those of Germany, France and England. I studied the food laws from the standpoint of the manufacturer, the standpoint of the consumer, and from the standpoint of the officials whose duty it is to enforce the law. I practically found no advocates of preservatives among reputable manufacturers. I found none at all among consumers, and I was forcibly convinced by evidence submitted by officials who were entrusted with the enforcing of food laws, that preservatives should not be tolerated in foods. This does not mean to imply that in those countries unscrupulous manufacturers do not try to use preservatives and adulterants. There are laws against murder and theft as well as other crimes, and yet they are violated every day—and so are the food laws violated in every country. The seriousness of the use of preservatives in food products was forcibly impressed upon me at the health department of one prominent European government. I was invited by the officials in charge of the food department, in a district with a population of several millions, to visit their headquarters and chemical laboratories, and after a lengthy talk about adulteration and preservatives one official invited me into his office, where I saw shelf upon shelf of articles of food which apparently had come under the ban of the food law. This official requested me to name any kind of food that I know to be commercially manufactured and which I thought was free of adulteration or preservatives. Jokingly I remarked that 'perhaps they were now using artificial preservatives in potatoes.' 'That is just what they are doing,' replied the official, and he took down from a shelf two jars of potato chips which were bleached and preserved with sulphurous acid. Next he took down rolled oats which were bleached with sulphurous acid to give them a whiter color. Then he pointed out to me rows and rows of all kinds of food products which were more or less adulterated and artificially preserved. I was so impressed with this demonstration of the conditions existing abroad, and knowing that the conditions in our country were not any better, I was convinced then and there that if artificial preservatives had entered so largely and universally into the manufacture of foods the restriction of their use was impossible and the conclusion which I had reached before was then confirmed, namely—that the only solution of this problem was their absolute prohibition.

"I wish to state from actual experience in our own business the fact that artificial preservatives are unnecessary in condimental foods. I do not presume to speak for all food products, but only for those which I know about and those of our own manufacture, a number of which I have already mentioned. I make this statement in good faith, without reservation and without fear of successful contradiction. It is doubtless true that as to a part of the food industry, a few bulk goods may, in a measure, give way to package goods in the cause of purity, and in some cases perhaps packages may have to be reduced in size. Without entering into any extended argument on this point, we may say briefly that we do not regard this as an unmixed evil. The elimination of loss to the dealer through spoilage and the freshness and better sanitary condition of the food itself when bought by the consumer in an original, factory-filled package, will largely onset any disadvantage arising from this change. If there are any foods which the manufacturer cannot make pure and wholesome, let him not make them at all.

"Finally, I cannot contemplate with any degree of satisfaction the reactionary opposition which urges concessions upon certain articles in the matter of purity, on the ground that the absolute prohibition of preservatives will injure a great industry. I believe that such a position is entirely untenable, is not to be justified, and cannot be supported by facts. I do not wish to exaggerate dangers in either direction, but through the late Chicago meat agitation that has been going on, the minds of the people of the whole world are inflamed. A deplorable prejudice exists against all American food products, and we believe that instead of injuring the preserving industry by the prohibition of preservatives, this great industry will, on the contrary, be injured by their toleration, through a growing lack of confidence in all prepared foods."

Just now, the fruit packers of California are much worked up over a ruling of the Department of Agriculture, against the use of sulphur in drying fruit, except in exceedingly small quantities. The German government—which is much more careful of the health of its people than the American government has been, until lately—has long forbidden the admission of such fruit into that country.

Dr. W. L. Bigelow, chief in the Bureau of Chemistry of the Federal Department of Agriculture, and Prof. M. E. Jaffa, of the University of California, who also represents the State Board of Health, with a corps of assistants, have been making investigation with regard to the sulphuring process of drying fruit. The result of the investigation will, when completed, be made known in a report that will be issued from the Department of Agriculture. It is prophesied that the report will recommend that the sulphuring of fruits be allowed to continue. That won't necessarily make it wholesome. It is also added that the packers will probably be warned to be more careful in future. "Not guilty, but don't do it again."

A few months ago, when the editor criticised the use of sulphur in drying fruits, a defender of the practice came to the front, in these columns, in the person of D. Edson Smith, of Santa Ana, a veteran hygienist, and an experienced fruit grower. Mr. Smith claimed that sulphuring was not only necessary, but beneficial, and that the sulphuric acid might be removed, without harm to the fruit, by soaking the fruit for some hours in cold water, before using. The following interesting communication on this subject has been received from Edgar Wallace Conable, who is also a veteran student of the food question, and has also had, as he shows, some little experience in curing fruits:

"Apropos of the effort being made by the United States government to put into operation a system of so-called pure-food laws, much is being said, pro and con, on the subject of using sulphur in the preservation and curing of California dried fruits.

"Some of the alleged experts claim that so little sulphur is used in the process of curing these fruits that no serious harm can result to the consumer, especially if the fruits are well soaked in several waters previous to being cooked. It is claimed that a thorough water-soaking practically eliminates all the sulphuric acid contained in the fruit.

"This claim may be true, or it may not be; I am not prepared to say; but to me this phase of the question is by no means the most important one involved, though the presence of sulphuric acid in foods, even in infinitesimal quantities, would bar its sale and consumption so far as I am personally concerned.

"To me the most serious phase in the matter of sulphuring dried fruits, or any kind of fruits for that matter, lies in the fact that the real nutritious food element contained in the fruit is almost entirely destroyed by the use of sulphur. That is, to say, the element of natural sweets which forms the vital food principle in all fruits, is, by the use of the sulphuric preservative, immediately converted into an extremely sour acid, which acts injuriously upon every organ of the human body. Then to render this fruit at all palatable, it must be doctored up with adulterated sugars, condiments, etc., making it still more undesirable and injurious as a food product.

"During the past season I resided in the midst of a great peach orchard. More than 100 tons of this delicious fruit was picked and dried by the sulphur process. I dried a quantity of the same fruit without the use of sulphur. I found, by frequent tests, that the fruit which I dried contained more than 50 per cent. greater nutritious saccharine values than did that dried by the sulphur process. Of course the latter was more pleasing to the eye on account of its rich golden appearance, which made it more easily marketable and at better prices; but to the intelligent consumer its beauty had no charms, except as we recognize charms in the varied and brilliant hues of the poisonous reptile. Danger and destruction lurk in both whenever they come in contact with the human organism.

"The peaches I dried are as sweet as honey, and require no sort of preparation to make them a most de-

HOW TO CURE YOURSELF of Rupture at home by simple Nature-aiding means that will take but five minutes of your time daily. I fit you personally or by mail with my NaturAID appliance that aids nature while you are being cured. Nature cures. My appliance is used temporarily like a crutch and then thrown away—merely a means to an end. My home methods used in connection aid, strengthen and invigorate in a natural way. No knife, drugs, springs, elastics, bandages, fasting, injections, inconvenience or loss of time.

I cured myself solely by simple nature-aiding means. I was given up to die 3 different times by 3 different doctors. I had to cure myself. Do I look well at 40? I spent 15 years close to nature among primitive people who cure themselves and keep well by INSTINCT. Here I learned to cure NATURE'S WAY, and there is no OTHER. My simple home methods will cure you in connection with my Nature-aid appliances which absolutely hold the rupture in place until cured.

No opperations, injections, drugs, fasting, springs, elastics, bandages or back killing apparatus. JUST NATURAL in all.

I absolutely and unconditionally guarantee to hold any rupture within the INNER OPENING against all possible contingencies. A cure is then a natural result with my NATUR-AID home treatment.

I will also duplicate any truss made. I make 14 kinds and over 36 kinds of orthopedic or deformity appliances. Oldest established factory in Southern California. Write for Free interesting literature. The bulk of my business is patching people up after operations. Why not see us first.

Care of the Body.

sirable and delicious food, richer in nutritive values than the fresh, ripe fruit itself, since the some 70 per cent. of water has evaporated, leaving practically only the concentrated nutritive values.

"One of the best posted and most successful fruit growers in Southern California recently said to me: 'Every intelligent writer in the public prints along pure-food lines should wage a relentless and unceasing warfare against the infamy of the present methods of curing dried and other fruits, nuts, etc.'

"Since the 'Care of the Body' department of the Los Angeles Times Magazine is, in my judgment, the most widely read and ably edited of any like department of any newspaper or magazine either East or West, it occurs to me that here is one of the most fruitful sources whereby the consumer, who eats with his eyes rather than with the natural food consuming functions of the body, may be educated to the point where he will reject every class of food found on the market which is not known to be absolutely free from every vestige of poisonous adulterants. The consumer is the only one who has it in his power to kill off the food poison venders. When he declines to purchase the goods, the grower and the manufacturer and the dealer will soon make the needed change. The consumer has been stupidly ignorant on this most important question of food consumption, so he has been easiliy imposed upon. But when his stomach and other organs commence to give way and make him trouble, a search is at once instituted as to the cause. He finds it in the poisoned foods and drugs consumed in his daily dietary.

"I trust, Mr. Editor, that you will take a conspicuous sand in this great battle against the sulphur infamy as you have so ably against many another appalling crime of the hour. Fruits, pure, ripe and sweet, should form a large percentage of the dietary of the race. Adulterated and poisoned, they are made unfit for swine."

Locomotor Ataxia.

"AN OLD SOLDIER" asks for suggesttions in regard to locomotor ataxia, a subject that has previously been treated of here. This is an ailment regarding which little has been written, except in some medical handbooks, that are not readily available to the general public. It is a chronic paralysis of the spinal cord, which usually occurs between the ages of 30 and 40. Almost all cases occur between 20 and 50. It is exceedingly uncommon in early life, and rarely begins in late life. It is more common in men than in women, in proportion of about 10 to 1. The most frequent cause is syphilis. Additional though less important factors are other infectious and toxic processes, exposure to wet and cold and excesses of various kinds, such as much smoking and self-abuse. A long interval—from five to twenty years—often elapses between the primary cause and the appearance of the first symptoms.

This disease is usually regarded by the regular medical fraternity as incurable. It is so, when the degeneration is far advanced, but in the earlier stages it may be often entirely cured, or at least greatly ameliorated.

Among leading symptoms of this disease are weakness, at first felt in the legs, when using them, getting tired speedily and a dragging gait. Persons affected with the disease throw up their feet quickly, when raising them, but can only put them down by means of a quickly determined will. They are also obliged to look on the ground, for want of normal perception, and because of trembling and pain. Both legs are later on impeded in their voluntary movements.

In regard to treatment, patience and perseverence are necessary, to achieve results. There should be daily wet rubbings of the whole body, avoidance of excesses of every kind, and non-stimulating but nourishing diet. Otherwise, the natural life, including fresh air day and night. Massage is beneficial, and osteopathic treatments may be found helpful. Sun and air baths have been found highly beneficial in Germany.

A friend of the editor, who had suffered for years with locomotor ataxia, having to walk with a cane, became cured, a few years ago, as he believes, through Christian Science. In this case, will power and mental suggestion doubtless had much to do with the recovery.

Hard Nuts to Crack.

AMONG the many curious communications received by the editor of this department are some that pertain only indirectly, or not at all, to the Care of the Body. For instance, on returning from his vacation, he found among his accumulated mail, a request from an Arkansas farmer—of whom he had never heard before—to send him transportation for himself and family to Southern California, and then to find him employment, on arriving here!

Again, a correspondent writes asking for advice as to what he should do in regard to a woman who loves him deeply—having, apparently, informed him of the fact—but whose love he cannot reciprocate—whether he would be justified in consigning her to insanity, or the grave, by marrying some one else, or how.

A few days later a long letter was received from a woman who might apparently be the same referred to by the writer of the first part, in which she asks similar conundrums.

One might suppose these good people expected the editor of the Care of the Body department to be, besides an adviser on health topics, a father confessor. The above propositions are difficult to answer. The editor would say, however, that for a man to marry a woman for whom he has no deep regard would be likely to prove unfortunate, both to himself and the woman. If a woman has fallen head over heels in love with a man, and he does not reciprocate the feeling, that is no fault of his. It is simply a misfortune of the woman's. Nor should the man justly be expected to sacrifice his happiness because of such an unfortunate condition of affairs.

However, in every case of this kind, as in physical ailments, there are modifying circumstances, that can only be properly judged of by the parties particularly interested. Therefore the editor must leave "Perplexity" to puzzle the conundrum out, the best way he can. Polygamy might furnish a way out, but then, open, simultaneous polygamy is not approved in this country, although secret polygamy, and open "consecutive polygamy" are very common.

While the editor of this department fully recognizes the great influence of the mind over the body, and will continue to touch from time to time on psychological subjects, as they may affect the physical status, The Times cannot devote a large amount of space to such subjects, or open a general discussion thereon. There are plenty of "New Thought" publications that revel in this. Moses Harmon's Chicago magazine, the "American Journal of Eugenics," devotes most of its space to such subjects. This department, as its name indicates, is primarily devoted to the Care of the Body. The editor must, therefore, continue to devote a majority of the limited space at his command, every week, to the consideration of such useful, though unromantic subjects as grub, bellyache, piles, etc.

An Age of Graft.

FOR any one who has not the tastes of a gutter snipe, the daily papers furnish sorrowful reading matter nowadays. On almost every news page the main feature is graft. East and west, north and south, graft in high and in low degree, from the small peculations of an office boy to the millions stolen from trusting depositors by bank president.

We are living too fast. The world is suffering from the get-rich-quick fever, which, in its way, is worse than the bubonic plague. It is surely time that there should be more preachers—and practitioners—of the simple life.

More Unfermented Grape Juice.

A SAMPLE of red and white grape juice has been received from the California Grape Juice Company, which owns 1500 acres of vineyard, and a plant, at Rochester, in San Bernardino county. Over 75,000 gallons of juice are being put up this year. The product has already been shipped east, in carload lots. The juice is of delicate quality.

As the editor has said, there is room for almost indefinite expansion of this industry, provided the people can be educated to use the product. This is an effort in which our prohibition friends might well take part, instead of preaching the eradication of our beautiful vineyards, or the making of the product into unwholesome vinegar. Grape juice is vastly preferable to the milk of an animal, as a food for the weak and sick.

Remember, however, once more, that grape juice, like milk, is a food, not a drink. Therefore, it should always be sipped very slowly, so as to mix it with the saliva. Otherwise, it will inevitably ferment in the stomach. turn into sour wine, and cause gastric disturbances.

Accommodations for Consumptives.

REFERRING to a recent request for information regarding accommodations for consumptives, several communications have been received. To these, the editor would say that The Times is not advertising boarding-houses. Nor is it boarding-houses, or tents, or cottages, in back yards of a city, that are wanted. What is needed is open-air accommodations on the desert, in the foothills or in the mountains, where the air is absolutely pure. If, with this, opportunity to do light work in the open air, and instructions regarding sensible diet, could be had, it would be so much the better. It is bad for consumptives to live in or near a city. It is bad for them, and it is not good for the city.

A correspondent also sends a circular issued by "Your brother in Jesus, Finis Yoakum." Mr. Yoakum runs an establishment called "Pisgah Home," at 6026 Echo street, Highland Park, Los Angeles. He has also recently opened "Pisgah Gardens,' for consumptives in Toluca. Here, it is stated in the circular that consumptives—even advanced cases—are received, free of charge. The circular also announces that they are healed "by the prayer of faith, anointing with oil, and laying on of hands," the ceremony apparently being performed by several expert layers.

Of course, whatever good is effected by this, is due to the imagination, just as in other forms of suggestion The fresh air does the work, and the expectant and hopeful frame of mind, in those who believe such things, aids in that work. Even then, however, unless a rational diet is adopted, recovery is likely to be tedious.

Meantime, once more let the editor say there is no more promising field for intelligent philanthropy than the establishment of large consumptive settlements, with hygienic teachings, in the arid sections of Southern California. By good management, such establishments might be made self-supporting, while charging low rates, and in this way the good work could be indefinitely extended, relieving the cities and helping the unfortunate sufferers.

Flies, Fleas, Rats and Mosquitoes.

A PARIS newspaper has offered a prize for the best method of getting rid of flies. One essayist properly calls attention to the fact that nothing will be efficacious except to destroy or disinfect the breeding places of the pest, the fly, being born of filth, almost exclusively. If these are removed, covered or treated with sufficient disinfectant, there will be no flies.

Just so. And if you were to remove the flies—which are scavengers of the air—without removing the filth that breeds them, you would soon have an epidemic that Springfield, Ohio, May 14th, 1891.

In justice to Dr. Polasky, I would say that he has cured my little girl of almost total blindness, of twelve years standing. When she was eight months old she had scrofula in her face, which settled in her eyes and almost completely destroyed her sight, and all remedies we tried seemed of no avail. In July, 1890, I was induced to take her to Dr. Polasky, who has treated her with great success. And it is wonderful that her eyes have been restored to almost perfect vision, as we had given up all hopes of her being able to see. We are deeply grateful.

Care of the Body.

would cause the world to sit up and take sharp notice.

All the way from the health office of Globe, Ariz., comes the important news that flies are the cause of an epidemic of typhoid fever, that has been raging there, and a general cleaning up has been ordered. Good for Globe! Some people won't clean up till they have flies on 'em.

Again, the United States State Department is figuring on importing from Europe fish that eat the eggs of mosquitoes. Surgeon-General Wyman, of the Public Health Bureau, is said to be "deeply interested" in this discovery. Well, suppose you remove the mosquitoes, you still will have the swamps. You still will have the malaria and the yellow fever.

Yet, again, in San Francisco, the wholesale merchants, south of Market street, have united in a statement to the authorities that they will at once begin a general campaign of cleaning up their premises and district—the idea being to starve to death as many rats as possible. To clean up is a good idea, for it is filth that breeds the plague, and other diseases. To kill the rats, without removing the filth on which they live, would be equivalent to picking the maggots from a piece of rotten meat in your front yard, and leaving the meat to fester in the sun.

By the way, why not get out an injunction against the winds of heaven, that carry foul emanations upon their wings?

Open-Air Studies.

THE Berlin educational and medical authorities have organized a wonderful forest school for the city children from the crowded districts of Berlin and Charlottenburg. In a wide clearing 150 children pursue the ordinary routine of school, delightfully varied by nature study at first hand. The hours of work are short, and fresh air and exercise are given a supreme importance. The children cook their own dinners at a camp fire, and their desks and seats and shelter-sheds were made from the timber felled to form the clearing. At 1 o'clock they must all take an hour's sleep, for which each child is provided with a blanket and a deck chair.

In Japan it is quite common for school to be held out of doors, especially when the cherry or plum trees are in blossom.

This country has much to learn in the line of common-sense sanitation. In this favored climate of Southern California, there is no reason why we should not hold many entertainments—theatrical performances, lectures, concerts, etc.—in the open air. Then, many who, like the editor of this department, rarely visit a theatrical performance, because he objects to breathing for several hours the foul emanations from other people's unclean lungs, would more often attend such places.

In Europe, open-air theaters are common. We should have a number of places of enjoyment like the open-air theater at Berkeley, and the concert amphitheater at Avalon, on Catalina Island.

In Los Angeles, a business college has made a good departure in this direction, by holding many of the classes in the open air, doubtless much to the benefit of the pupils.

• • •

The Unnecessary Noise Nuisance.

AN organization of Los Angeles hotel-keepers has declared war on motorcyclists, and other manufacturers of unnecessary noises.

The hotel-keepers' association is entitled to the sympathy and support of the community. The necessary noises of a big city are surely bad enough, without having them added to by a number of raucous sounds that might easily be avoided. It is hard enough for well people to have to undergo such an ordeal. For the nervous and sick it is an unmitigated torture. As to the motorcycles, it is a subject of perpetual wonder to the editor how any sane person can find pleasure in riding such a hideous, jolting, noise-producing device. A person who sticks to one of these machines for a year or two will surely become an invalid. If the noise does not demoralize his nerves, the unnatural jarring will certainly play havoc with his kidneys. This, however, is only a negative satisfaction to those who have to undergo the ordeal of listening to the noisy nuisances.

White Flour Again.

ANOTHER food product has been boosted by a trust. It is announced that the flour trust has raised the price of flour 20 cents a barrel, or 5 cents a sack. With wheat at $1.60 a hundred—and most of the mills have contracted for their wheat below this figure—the cost of flour is $2 a hundred. It retails for $3.26 a hundred. A nice little profit of 63 per cent., on the greatest food staple that enters into human consumption.

This will not affect those who live hygienically. For one who lives hygienically avoids white flour, as a starvation food, that has been deprived of a large proportion of the important organic salts, which lie just beneath the bran. Especially, as recently stated, is this true when the flour is bleached with nitric acid, and the nourishment it contains still further reduced by fermenting it. One who knows how to eat will get a little mill, buy his wheat, grind the flour, make himself "independent of the trust," and at the same time improve his health.

Another Snake Cure.

THE following advertisement appeared, a few months ago, in the Philistine. The editor of the Liberator pertinently asks whether Congress will vote this public benefactor $150,000. Perhaps he will get a Nobel prize. Anyhow the treatment should be made compulsory:

"I have discovered, after long, patient and repeated experiments, that a rattlesnake after it has bitten through woolen cloth four times has reduced the ego in its toxin so it is harmless. Persons then bitten by the snake are ever after immune from rattlesnake bites.

"The bite of tame snakes has the same effect that the bite of a wild one does after chewing the rag.

"I am raising rattlesnakes for the public good, and hope to have laws passed in all States compelling school children to be bitten by these partially tamed snakes, so if they are afterward bitten by really wild snakes their teachers and parents will have no fear of ill-effects.

"The operation is cleanly, painless, and actually pleasant, making a moderate pustule and leaving only a faint scar. Fee for the operation is $1, or for families or schools 75 cents each. Address

Dr. Knopf Denies.

DR. S. A. KNOPF, who for several years has been engaged in a campaign against tuberculosis, was quoted some time ago as saying that in the treatment of the incurable stage of tuberculosis it was his practice "to give the sufferer morphine in plenty, that the end may come quickly and painlessly."

Dr. Knopf explicitly denies ever having made any such statement, and his denial is supported by the president of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

The average reporter appears to have the faculty for misquoting anything relating to medicine or hygiene. This may be partly due to lack of knowledge of the subject, or partly to the newspaper craving for sensationalism. What Dr. Knopf said in this case was that he would use such drugs that would relieve patients in the last stages of consumption.

• • •

"Sport."

THE editor regrets to find the following in his old friend Charles F. Lummis's editorial department of Out West—"In the Lion's Den:"

"If I had a boy who did not like a gun, and to kill something with it, I would try to find some safe and lawful way to drown him."

Is it not a strange feature of this complicated human nature of ours that leads worthy people, good fathers of families, who would not needlessly hurt a fly, to take delight in inflicting pain, and taking the life of harmless animals, when it is done under the comprehensive and much abused name of "sport." When a depraved boy pulls the wings off a fly it is not "sport" as it is when another ties a tin can to the tail of a terrified cur.

Surely, a man needs to be neither a "nature faker" nor a mollycoddle because he can find no pleasure in taking the life of living things, which, in the humble opinion of the editor, have just as much right to live as you and I—that is, except the right of might.

• • •

Fasting Versus Fever.

A LONG BEACH correspondent asks whether a couple of weeks' fast would be likely to help inflammation of the bladder and inflamed eyelids.

Doubtless, a two weeks' fast would help any form of sickness, especially feverish conditions. Also, in order to temporarily help the inflamed bladder, take a cup of flaxseed tea every night, before retiring.

• • •

Celery Salt.

A WOMAN correspondent asks for information in regard to celery salt, and to what extent it might be substituted for common salt, by those who are trying to break away from the salt habit.

Otto Carqué writes to the editor as follows, on this subject:

"Celery salt mostly consists of table salt, mixed presumably with some dried celery, finely ground. There seems to be some artificial coloring, to give the mixture a uniform appearance. At any rate, it is a product which should be avoided by those who want to live hygienically, as it offers great temptations for adulteration to the manufacturer. I presume the pure food law requires that the label state exactly the contents and combination of any canned or bottled food product which is not exactly what the name implies. Real celery salt, extracted from the plant, would be inert, as this process would require cooking and condensation, which destroys the life principle of the plant."

Catarrh Positively Cured

In Three Days to Three Months—Hay Fever Cured to Stay Cured in One Week—Cold in Head Cured in From One to Three Applications.

DEAR READER:—

The coupon below is worth 50c toward the purchase of a $1.00 box of ORMSBY NASAL DOUCHE TABLETS containing enough tablets for 25 treatments, together with a glass nasal douche.

We are distributing 10,000 of these coupons to convince sufferers of Catarrh, Hay Fever and Cold in the Head that the ORMSBY NASAL DOUCHE tablets are, without a doubt, the most wonderful remedy known to medical science for the immediate relief and the positive cure of Catarrh, Hay Fever, Weak and Sore Throat and Cold in the Head.

We are not offering a free sample for the simple reason that there are many people who are looking for something for nothing, and who always have plenty of time and idle curiosity and who would call or write for our free sample, and as it cost them nothing and cost us considerable, we desire placing a trial box only in the hands of persons who really need it and will use it faithfully.

Our offer is a bona fide one and the coupon is worth 50c and is only offered as an inducement to secure trial users of the tablets.

CATARRH OF THE HEAD AND THROAT

This form of catarrh is most common — resulting from neglected colds.

"Is your nose stopped up?"

"Does your nose discharge?"

"Is your nose sore and tender?"

"Is there pain in front of the head?"

"Do you have to clear the throat?"

"Is your throat dry in the morning?"

"Do you sleep with your mouth open?"

THE BRONCHIAL TUBES

When catarrh of the head or throat is neglected or wrongfully treated, it extends down the windpipe into the bronchial tubes, and after awhile attacks the lungs.

"Have you a cough?"

"Do you take cold easily?"

"Have you pain in the side?"

"Do you raise frothy materials?"

"Do you spit up little cheesy lumps?"

"Do you feel you are growing weaker?"

Don't risk neglecting these warnings—stop the disease before it reaches the lungs.

OF THE EARS

Catarrh extends from the throat along the eustachian tubes into the ears, causing partial or complete deafness.

"Is your hearing failing?"

"Do your ears discharge?"

"Is the wax drying in your ears?"

"Do you hear better some days than others?"

"Is your hearing worse when you have a cold?"

Don't neglect this until your hearing is irreparably destroyed.

OF THE STOMACH.

Catarrh of the stomach is usually caused by swallowing poisonous mucous, which drops down from the head and throat at night.

"Is there nausea?"

"Do you belch up gas?"

"Are you constipated?"

"Is your tongue coated?"

"Do you bloat up after eating?"

"Is there constant bad taste in the mouth?"

We do not cater to and do not want buyers of the ORMSBY TABLETS to make their purchases at our office. We desire users of the tablets to make their purchases at the DRUG STORES, and after you have recured a trial box and wish to continue the treatment you can purchase the tablets at your DRUGGISTS.

This coupon, when filled out with name and address, is worth 50c toward the purchase of a $1.00 box of ORMSBY NASAL DOUCHE TABLETS containing glass nasal douche and 25 treatments.

By mail, enclose 4c for postage.

Care of the Body.

I have just finished reading them.

"Without detracting from the writings of the editor of the Care of the Body, or Dr. J. H. Tilden of 'A Stuffed Club,' the only two writers of whom I can truthfully say they are always sensible when discussing dietary subjects, I consider that Horace Fletcher has the nearest to a 'cure-all' of any of the writers on this subject. The 'no breakfast' plan, the 'fast for a day or more' now and then, the 'fruit fast,' the 'purely vegetable' diet, the 'fruit and nut' diet, or any of the fads as put forth by the large number of writers on this all important subject, are good enough for a beginning, or in certain places, but with all these the tendency to overeat is not stopped.

"It is a lack of thorough mastication, and thus a hurried meal, and then in many instances overeating, that brings on, or places the human system in a shape to take on, all the ills that flesh is heir to.

"There seems to be a tendency to take it for granted that most people masticate their food quite well enough, and that all the advice they need is as to the kind of food they should eat. My observation leads me to say that not one person in a thousand really thoroughly masticates all his food. In my opinion, the healthy system can take care and assimilate all the nutritive qualities of 'any old thing,' properly masticated. At the same time those who are ill will soon recover if they both masticate thoroughly and are a little choice of their food for a time.

"I am satisfied that more trouble comes to humanity along dietary lines from a lack of mastication than from any one cause. Therefore, my advice is, masticate everything thoroughly, both solid and liquid."

In reply, the editor would say that extended reference was made in this department to Mr. Fletcher and his theory, some years ago, including a review of his principal work, "The A. A. B. Z. of Our Own Nutrition."

The editor entirely agrees with Mr. Young's views, as above stated. If you chew your food thoroughly, as Fletcher recommends, and avoid liquids with your meals, you may, with impunity, eat almost any kind of clean, nourishing food. It is the main thing in diet.

During the interesting test made under the management of Prof. Fisher at Yale University in the early part of this year where the subjects were required to chew their food thoroughly the results were certainly surprising. To use Prof. Fisher's own words:

"In the first place the men enjoyed their meals more than before, and discovered unsuspected flavors in common foods. In the second place, they reduce somewhat, though not greatly, the total quantity of food eaten. The most marked reduction was in the quantity of liquid of all kinds taken at meals—water, tea, coffee, and even soups, for there was no longer any temptation to "wash" food down. In the third place, there was a marked reduction in the amount of meat and other high-proteid foods. By the end of the experiment some of the men had entirely lost their taste for meat and other flesh foods, and all had greatly reduced the amount. Finally, there was a great increase in the powers of endurance of the men, amounting to about 100 per cent."

There is, however, one feature of this chewing business that has been somewhat overlooked. Recently, Prof. Wiley, of the United States Department of Agriculture, said that flesh food should not be chewed, but bolted, as the carnivora bolt their food. The editor has had frequent occasion to criticise Dr. Wiley, but in this statement he was entirely right, although he did not carry his suggestion out to the logical conclusion, namely, that flesh food is an unnatural food for human beings.

Those who wish to follow out this subject further are recommended to send for a copy of Mr. Fletcher's book, above mentioned. It is published by the Frederick A. Stokes Co. of New York.

Climate and Complexion.

ANOTHER European critic has been telling what he thinks about Americans. This time it is a Britisher—and he admits that he has not visited the United States. Here is what T. W. H. Crossland says about American women, who, he declares, as beauties are much less numerous in proportion to population than their British sisters, also that their beauty does not last nearly so long:

"The vulgar commentators on the American woman's physical blemishes and shortcomings have assured us that they are the direct result of her diet, which is said to consist of grape nuts, griddle cakes, oysters, pie, turkey, stewed terrapin, tinned mushrooms, fat ham, cheese, chocolates, and ice cream.

"As is usually the case, however, the vulgar commentators are entirely wrong. The real enemy of the American woman's beauty is the American climate. In the process of time it is climate that makes and mars everything. It is climate that has made the African black and the European white. It is climate that is rapidly transforming the American into a sort of ignoble red man or Kickapoo Indian, and it is climate that is transforming the American woman into a sort of crumpled squaw.

"The American climate produced the American Indian. The American climate is modifying the physique of the American man and marring and obliterating the beauty of the American woman."

There is no doubt whatever that climate has a vast influence not only on appearance, but on temperament. The dry electrical climate of the United States is particularly hard on the complexion—and the temper. People—especially women—age earlier than they do in countries which have a similar climate, such as Spain and Egypt. Hence, it is particularly necessary that those who wish to possess a youthful appearance in this climate should pay particular attention to their mode of living—especially their diet. One who eats Arctic food in a semi-tropic climate may be sure of going to the bad muy pronto, not only in looks, but in feelings.

Ocean Groping.

HOW THE GREAT LINERS "HEAR" THEIR WAY IN A FOG.

From London Daily Mail.

TO those who go down to the sea in ships probably no discovery in recent times has been of more importance, or tends more to save life, than that of the possibility of signaling from ship to ship, and from ship to shore, by sound. It literally, when fully developed, will enable steamers to "hear" their way, under all conditions of weather and particularly in fog, just as well as they now see their way on clear nights by the aid of the lights that each ship carries, and those distributed round the coast of every civilized country.

Every one who has made the trip to Margate, returning after dark, must have been struck by the easy way in which the steamer seems to find her way through what appears to be a maze of traffic, guided by the lights on shore and those carried by the other vessels in the river. What lights are to a ship on clear nights, sound signals will be to her in foggy and dirty weather.

The whole apparatus hinges upon the fact, which has been known for a long time, but has only recently been practically applied, that water is a good conductor of sound. The readiest example of this of which the writer is aware is to be found usually at mineral baths. There is nearly always pumping going on in connection with the baths, but under ordinary conditions the pump is not heard. When undressing, for instance, to enter the bath, one can very rarely hear the pump, but immediately one is in the bath, if one places one's head under water, the pump is almost painfully evident, and an engineer could easily count the strokes had he a watch at hand.

For signaling purposes a bell is employed, immersed some distance under the water and enclosed in a chamber, the hammer being worked by compressed air operated from the surface. The sound of the strokes on the bell are transmitted to a distance of several miles, and can be heard by suitable apparatus. The hearing apparatus consists of a microphone, a modification of that we use every time we speak to the telephone, enclosed in a chamber inside the ship, and connected with the bridge by wires in the usual way. The microphone chamber is filled with a special liquid which the inventors have found to answer the purpose best, and there is, as at present arranged, one chamber and one microphone on each bow below the water line. In the chart house on the bridge is a pair of telephone receivers, similar to those we put to our ears when we talk through the telephone on shore, and a switch enabling the receivers to be connected to either of the two microphones.

Several of the lighthouses on the coast of America, and some, the writer believes, on that of the United Kingdom, are fitted with bells as described above, which are rung at certain intervals, each lighthouse having a different number of beats, so that any particular lighthouse is distinguished by its bell, just as in clear weather it is distinguished by the arrangement of its lights. An approaching ship can tell within a very close approximation, as mathematicians would say, how it lies with regard to the lighthouse, because the bell will be heard loudest in that microphone on the side of the ship on which the lighthouse is, and the officer of the watch can steer accordingly.

Similarly, even with present appliances, the direction of an approaching steamer can be heard in the same manner. If the approaching ship is crossing from right to left, or as seamen express it from starboard to port, the noise of her screw will be heard more clearly in the microphone attached to the right hand or starboard side of the ship than in that on the other side, and so a valuable guide is afforded enabling the ship with the sound-signaling apparatus to clear the other. But, in the writer's view, this is only the beginning of things, and it should be possible, when the details have been worked out, to know as exactly where an approaching ship is in the densest fog and the direction in which she is approaching, as on the clearest night.

All ships carry a red light at night on the left hand, or port side, and a green light on the right hand or starboard side, while all steamers carry, in addition, a white light showing on both sides. Neither of the lights can be seen astern, nor for some distance toward the bows, the limit being what sailors call two points abaft the beam, a little astern of her middle point. So that when approaching a ship from astern no lights are visible to the approaching ship, but her full lights are visible from the ship approached.

When two ships are approaching each other from opposite directions, end on, each ship will see the other's two or three lights, and can easily steer to keep out of each other's way. There is a simple rule for this, and incidentally it may be mentioned that the danger is least in this case, provided that both ships are properly handled. The danger of collision arises principally from ships crossing each other, and for this also there are simple rules governed by what is called the rule of the road. Leaving out the question of sailing ships for the moment, the ship which has the other, the crossing ship, on her own right hand (starboard) side, has to keep out of the way, and it does so by turning slightly to the right, or to starboard, presenting her left side to the other ship, and the two run on parallel courses till clear of each other. In all cases, except that of steamer and sailing ships crossing, each ship presents her own left, or port side, to the other to clear.

Evidently the same thing could be done by the aid of sound signals. If each ship carried, say, a bell on one side and a foghorn on the other side, arranged as described, steamers also carrying—till sailing ships completely disappear—another sounding apparatus heard on both sides, when two ships approached each other the officer of the watch in each would know, by the sound, bell or foghorn, whether it was his place to give way or that of the other ship. The officer of the watch on the bridge of the ship whose duty it was to hold on her course could also follow the other going through the necessary maneuvers to get out of his way, just as he now does by watching her lights, and could be ready, in case of neglect on the part of the other ship, to do whatever was necessary to clear his own ship.

Steamships always keep clear of sailing ships, and the officer of the watch of a steamer meeting a sailing ship knows that he has to give way, and he also knows exactly how to put his helm to clear the other ship by the color of the sailing ship's light that is visible. Similarly he would know, if the sailing ship carried sound signals, by the sound nearest which way she was crossing and which way to put his helm to clear her.

Whenever a ship has to give way to another the color of the light of the other ship is on the same side as that to which the helm must be moved. Thus when a red light is seen on the right hand (starboard) side, the helm is put to port, the side of the light seen. Similarly when a sailing ship is crossing from port to starboard, showing her green light, that carried on her starboard side, the steamer puts her helm to starboard to clear. This rule could be followed quite as easily with sound signals.

BIRD'S LIGHTING RODS.

"The humming bird, no less than man, protects his habitation with a lightning rod," said an ornithologist.

"Oh, you nature faker!"

"It is the truth. The humming bird nests in warm climates, where devastating thunder storms abound, and very prudently he covers the outside of his little home with cobweb.

"Silk, you know, is a non-conductor of electricity, and, since cobweb is silk, the humming bird's nest is lightning-proof. Isn't he a clever little beggar to put up his own lightning rod like that?"
